SIR,—We see by a late report of the Grammar School Board of Trustees that some of its members have recently become very zealous for the purity of mathematics. Though Church and State may be corrupted, yet the eternal principles of mathematics must be preserved inviolate! The once familiar cry "Down with heresies!" is now in the mouths of leaders of a different stripe. We refer to the dismissal of Mr. P. C. Hatcher, one of the best Teachers in the School. And for what? Forsooth, because he "enunciated a mathematical heresy." There was no opportunity given him (Mr. H.) to explain or defend himself. What a Lynch-law-like decision! A fit parallel to the proscription of Sallia or the Inquisition of barbarous aged! Now Sir, we having been under the tuition of Mr. Hatcher for nearly two years, and having had every opportunity of testing his mathematical ability much more than any member of the Board could possibly have, consider it our duty to repudiate, publicly, anything that is calculated to depreciate his reputation as a Teacher. We feel bound by truth and duty to say, with every pupil we ever heard expressing his opinion (who was sufficiently advanced in that branch to make his opinion worth anything on the subject,) that Mr. Hatcher stood unequalled as a Teacher of mathematics, but especially of Euclid, since he came to the Peterborough Grammar School. Some of his pupils have gone to Victoria College and to the University of Toronto, where they have had the most ample opportunity of testing the soundness of his instruction, and their united testimony most decidedly sustains the opinion we have already expressed of his ability. No pupil who was even a few months under his charge could fail to perceive his thorough and precise knowledge of Euclid, as well as his acute and ready manner of detecting the slightest error in the construction, demonstration, &c., of a proposition, together with his truly scientific mode of teaching this interesting subject, which made it a real pleasure, instead of a drudgery as it most commonly is, to attend classes in it. We believe there was something said at the examination about want of thoroughness. Now as far as our experience goes, there is no such thing as being perfect in Euclid by going over it a few times. We have gone over some of the books about a dozen times, and the twelfth time we read something we did not the eleventh; when we finished the sixth book we knew more of the first than before, moreover when we studied Trigonometry we understood still more of Euclid than ever. So it and must be from the very nature of things. As a further proof of Mr. Hatcher's ability, we may state that he enjoyed the entire confidence of his fellow teachers and especially of the Principal, who lately expressed his confidence in him in unqualified terms. We have much more to say in reference to Mr. Hatcher, but fearing that we have already trespassed too much on your valuable space we close by stating that we do not wish to cast any unfavorable reflection on the Grammar School, or any of the Teachers—to the latter we bear the best good will. What we desire to see is justice meted out by the classic adage [justitia fiat] let justice be done, though the heavens should fall.

The Great Convention.

A great commercial convention of delegates from the various Boards of Trade of the United States, lately met at Detroit.—Representatives from Canada were also present, and the able speeches of Mr. Cameron, of Quebec, and the Hon. Mr. Howe, of Halifax, were most effective and did much to disabuse the American mind of false ideas on matters of trade between them and Canada. Many of those present seemed to hold most contracted and erroneous views of the working of the "thing called Reciprocity." The effect of Mr. Howe's speech was electrifying. The result was that a motion for the renewal of Reciprocity with Great Britain and these Colonies was carried. 155 voted for it, none against it. After Mr. Howe:—

Mr Fralick, of Philadelphia, then got the ear of the Convention. He said—I had the honor of being appointed one of the Reciprocity Committee. I heard the arguments of [illegible] friends, and I tendered them opening and unqualified the terms on which Pennsylvania would favour the renewal of the Reciprocity Treaty. Those terms are, in a word, the same as those which Pennsylvania enjoys in the United States in treating with the State of New York, or any other State in the Union. I tendered to them the same laws of reciprocity and position—every thing that would go to make a similarity of interests, a similarity of principles, a similarity of honor; but never to the British Provinces in the United States. Could Pennsylvania have tendered them more? On the other questions—those of agriculture, mining and manufactures—Penn sylvania has stood here on the same ground she has always occupied, and she thinks this Convention for the honorable and unanimous vote it gave in support of those interests. In regard to Canada, she voted solidly for the free position submitted for opening avenues of trade to the great West. This has always been the course she has pursued, and I challenge any gentleman in this Convention or elsewhere to show me the record of an honest open-hearted Pennsylvanian that has ever gone against the widest system of internal improvement in the United States. And what was of the Keystone State desire is, that our friends of the West will pursue the policy of Pennsylvania and make a great market for their own production at home; that instead of making a transit from the farm to the ocean, they will make a transit from the farm to the workshop and factory. [Cheers]. It is this which has reduced the carrying products of Pennsylvania to the twenty million bushel mentioned by the gentleman from Michigan yesterday. We have diversified the interests of our people. We are self-sustaining, and while we stretch out our iron arms to all sections of the world, we at the same time believe in the policy of protecting domestic industry and making the market of the farmer on the same ground as the workshop. With reference to this particular question I have to say that while the delegation from Pennsylvania prefer the admirable plan has been offered by the gentleman from Illinois to the original resolution offered by the Committee on Reciprocity, they have authorized me to say that, with a slight modification in the original resolution, they are disposed to go unanimously for that. What they wish put in as a word or two defining what we mean by principles just and equitable to all parties. I would propose to insert the words "with reference to the present financial condition of the United States," after the words "parties," and this understood to be conceded by the gentleman from Nova Scotia. So modified, I believe, the resolution will satisfy the Convention, and I ask the gentleman from Illinois who offered his amendment to withdraw it, so that the original resolution, as modified, may be passed by a unanimous vote.

Mr Mitchell, of Cincinnati, on behalf of his delegation, said he would accept the resolution so modified.

Mr. Joy, of Detroit, said the majority of the Reciprocity Committee had not the slightest objection to the amendment.

Mr. Bowen, of Chicago, said his colleague, Mr. McChesney, had gone home on account of illness in his family, but he was authorized to say that the majority of the Reciprocity Committee accepted the amendment and would withdraw Mr. McChesney's substitute.

The resolution was then amended by the addition of the words suggested by Mr Fralick, and it was carried by a unanimous vote of 155.

AYES—Maine, 7; Massachusetts, 14; New York, 33; Ohio, 21; Michigan, 8; Illinois, 10; Wisconsin, 3; Pennsylvania, 20; Minnesota, 4; Missouri, 7; Iowa, 8.

The Cairo delegation who had five votes of the sixteen allowed to Illinois, were absent, and it was decided to register them with the "ayes," subject to reversal afterwards, if they so desired.

The announcement of the vote was received with tumultuous cheering.

The resolution as adopted reads as follows:—

Resolved—That this Convention do respectfully request the President of the United States to enter into negotiations with the Government of Great Britain, having in view the execution of a Treaty between the two countries for reciprocal coasting coast intercourse between the United States and the several Provinces of British America, including Columbia, the Selkirk Settlement and Vancouver Island, based on principles which shall be just and equitable to all parties, with reference to the financial condition of the United States, and which shall also include free navigation of the St. Lawrence and other rivers of British North America, with such improvements of the rivers and the enlargements of the canals as shall render them adequate for the requirements of the West in communicating with the ocean.

Mr. Elliott, of Missouri, moved, a vote of thanks to the President of the Convention, which was carried by acclamation.

Mr. Elliott then moved, "that the American delegates to this Convention have experienced much pleasure in meeting with the delegates from the British Provinces, and we trust the intelligent gentlemen who have lent us their presence, will bear to their homes as pleasant the memories of us as we shall retain of them."—Carried by acclamation.

Hon. Mr. Colen, of Prince Edward Island, briefly acknowledged the compliment.

Hon. T. Ryan Montreal, read the following resolution, which was unanimously [illegible] at the meeting of the British American delegation this morning:—

Resolved—That the delegates from the British Provinces feel called upon, before separating to return to their homes, to offer their acknowledgements to the chairman and the American members of the Convention assembled at Detroit, for the uniform courtesy, respect and kindness extended to the Provincial delegates during the sitting of the convention.

Hon. Mr. McMaster spoke briefly, expressing the high sense entertained by the Provincial delegates of the kind and hospitable treatment they had received in Detroit.

A motion to insert the resolution on the minutes was [illegible]

12TH OF JULY AT SILVER LAKE.—The Loyal Orange Lodges No. 199 and No. 1169 having resolved to celebrate the anniversary of the Boyne, met at the above named place on the anniversary of that memorable battle. At 13 o'clock, M., they were addressed in the C. S. House, No. 1, by the Revd J. B. Edmonson, [who is stationed at Burnt River as a missionary belonging to the Presbyterian body,] from Psalms 20th Chap., 15th verse, in which he displayed more than ordinary talent and address; and from this as well as other discourses which we have heard from him, we do not hesitate to say that he will be, if spared, an able and efficient minister. After the sermon the brethren retired to John Elgar's 'Silver Lake Hotel,' where they partook of an excellent dinner, which did credit to "mine host." After some addresses by the W. M. and others of the respective Lodges, they retired to their own homes, peace and harmony being the order of the day.—Com.

Louis Napoleon, Montgomery Blair, and the Monroe Doctrine.

The speech of Montgomery Blair, at Hagerstown, has occasioned much talk here to-day and is generally conceded to mean a great deal more than might appear from a casual perusal of it. There are those who affirm that it has been determined by President Johnson to remove Maximilian from Mexico, and to accomplish that object neither means nor money will be spared. At the present time are "eighty thousand United States soldiers in Texas, scattered along the line of the Rio Grande." Maximilian knows this. Louis Napoleon has by this time been duly informed of it, and the train cannot but be aware how slight need be the pretense on which these eighty thousand men could be transferred over the river and marched for Maximilian's capital. Already we have seen that then. Steele has demanded of the imperialists the ordnance given to the by the rebel Gen. Slaughter. This demand, it is asserted, will be insisted upon, and enforced, if necessary. But this is only the first step. There are said to be ten thousand rebels in arms in Mexico, whom our government may consider it necessary to secure; and this will furnish a cause for a fresh demand upon Maximilian. It is be true that President Johnson has made up his mind to insist that new Empire is broken, there will be no lack of pretexts for it. Seward, who is a perfect master of [illegible] well known, is a particular friend of the President. It was his father who took the latter in charge after the inauguration, and sent him at his (the senior's) house until he had fairly recovered. What more natural, then, than that Mr. Johnson should rely upon Mr. Blair to inform him of the best manner to proceed in relation toward Maximilian. Mr. Blair has a pen to national pride, his reflections upon the policy of the late administration, as regards the Mexican question, and his arraignment of Louis Napoleon as unfriendly to the United States, if not intended, are admirably calculated to arouse a popular cry against Maximilian, and the success which has followed the complete enforcement of the Monroe doctrine. For is the interpretation put upon Mr. Blair's speech in official circles here. Some go so far as to say that Louis Napoleon has been informed, in a diplomatic way that Maximilian must be withdrawn from Mexico, and that the whole question will be settled with no rougher arguments than such as diplomats wield. But the general impression seems to be that the administration is determined to rid Mexico of its Austrian ruler no matter what the cost be, and enforce to its last extremity the doctrine so forgotten Monroe doctrine. Mr. Seward, of course will claim that this has been his plan from the start, and that he yielded to it only when forced when we were not in a condition to enforce all our claims upon him; but this is hardly true. It will be a bitter pill for Mr. Seward, but he will swallow it so gracefully that but few will suspect how unpalatable he will find it to be.—N. Y. World.

MEXICAN.

The World's Washington special says some important statements were made in semi-official quarters to-day with regard to the policy of the Government in the Mexican question. Low-spirited views in relation to that end would be discouraged, and it is to the effect, first, that the Government will not permit another French, Austrian, or foreign soldier of any sort, in the service of Maximilian to be landed on the Mexican coast, without exciting a decided protest; second, and what is of the gravest importance, that the Government having still men in Texas an army of 100,000 men, will keep it there to make a corps of observation, and to exercise such a pressure on moral pressure as shall in timately compel the withdrawal of Maximilian from Mexico. This action has likewise been announced that it exercised especially on the Rio Grande, the Mexican frontier, and keeps the foreign forces of the Empire from an incessant state of apprehension and activity. If a decision upon some one, the United States would have on hand a force sufficient to maintain its dignity and make respected.

The transfer of a rebel battery to the Imperial General Mejia is another matter now occupying official attention, and a full and searching investigation is to be made into the matter of the alleged sale. If General Slaughter did dispose of a rebel battery to the Imperialists, as stated, it will be annulled and obtained. It is also understood that there are between 12,000 and 15,000 Confederates in the Mexican service near the Texas border, and it is certainly settled that if these are troublesome, they will be punished, even if pursuit should throw one a mile across the border.

The Washington special says: Much excitement was occasioned at the Department of War to-day by the announcement that Gen. Grant would, in a short time, be ordered to Texas, on a charge of complicity in the assassination of President Lincoln. The discovery, of additional evidence involving Davis, is said to be to cause the transfer of his case from a civil to the military tribunal.—In this connection it may be added that Professor McCullory, the rebel inventor of a way for overcoming certain difficulties supposed to exist to rebel plots to burn cities, as alluded to in the evidence of the late conspiracy trial, was brought here to-day, and placed in prison.

THE HARRIS TRIAL.—The trial of Miss Harris for shooting Mr. Burroughs, in the treasury department Washington, one month ago, is now going on, and excites much interest. The exciting points may be gleaned from the following testimony:—George H. Walker having been sworn, testified that he was a member of the Metropolitan Police. When witness went into the room to the Treasury Miss Harris was walking up and down the passage, with her hands to her face and in her hair, a carriage was ordered, and I put her into it and accompanied her to jail. At some time nothing was said by prisoner; the first thing she did say was that she had no friends here; it was in reply to a question put to her by witness; she said she had been in Washington once before, but, feeling Mr. Burroughs had left the city, she returned home. Near F st. she said she did not ask sympathy for herself, but for her family, this devil (Burroughs) had ruined her. Had moved her to be driven from her home and her friends, had seduced her, and had taken her to a bad house in Chicago; and that she had told him if he did not comply with his promises, she would have revenge, at the risk of her life; and that she had procured the pistol in Chicago, and came here with the determination. Had moved here that morning, and had accomplished the object which she came for; by this time we arrived at the jail gate; she seemed very weak and feeble, and in great distress; witness had to support her from the gate to the jail; all the way to jail she seemed much distressed.

PARLIAMENT.—Parliament is called for the 15th of August by proclamation.

The Orange Row.

There seems to be a probability of a split in this body, in consequence of the action of a recent meeting of the Grand Lodge. Before the meeting, the Toronto Watchman, on behalf of the section of the Order that it represents, denounced the Hon. J. H. Cameron as a traitor to the cause, and demanded his deposition from the Grand Mastership. The Grand Lodge, however, took a different view of the matter, and re-elected Mr. Cameron the head of the Order, whereupon the Watchman has grown indignant, and suggests that Bishop Lynch should be made a partner in the affair with him. It concludes by calling on all Lodges which do not approve of the "Cameron proposition party to withhold dues, and take no annual from men whose very acts, if not motives, seem to be directed for the destruction of the Order." If this advice is accepted, a serious split will be inevitable.—Times.

The paragraph we find going the rounds of such papers as are opposed to the Orange Institution. Our contemporary need not be alarmed. There will be no "split," much less a "serious split." And if it be any gratification we can inform him that the Watchman does not represent any section of the Orangemen, the Grand Lodge having, by unanimous vote, repudiated the paper, and its malicious sentiments. It is such papers as the Watchman, and its conductor, who do the Order more injury than all its open enemies combined. When the Grand Lodge elects a Grand Master, it, and all subordinate lodges, will sustain him, and not be led from the path of duty by an outsider, who has been repudiated.

A Cholera Panic in Europe.

The cholera is on its travels—that fierce and pitiless plague, which has its residence in the East, but sallies forth at periodical intervals to desolate West, North and South. From time to time we hear of the visitation in distant places—deaths by wholesale in Central Asia, deaths in Southern lines, regiments disbanded by deaths on Indian marches, and rivers choked with corpses in the islands of the Eastern Ocean. The last Red Sea news brought word that Mecca and Medina are this year vast lazarettos of cholera smitten victims, the pilgrims spending all day in the mosques, and the shrines from Cairo and the southern ports, and which who had come to kiss the Kaaba turning back in horror, with their trains, to encamp in tents and houses where they had shut themselves up. Already Egypt has been reached, and the festivities there are perishing by thousands, so much so that the Italian and French harbours are shut against vessels from Alexandria. Marseilles has lost all the most hearts in quarantine ever since two merchant passengers were landed in the Joliette, and at last we ourselves have been obliged to confront a peril that cannot be disregarded. The newspapers and letters which went out of the general post office on Tuesday last were sent on boxes instead. Thus, important information being carried out of Egypt by the mail passing through the city. That, indeed, is not a fair comparison on our own behalf, but it will also be long ere it will be regarded as overcast despatches coming homeward. All the instances we enumerate, and others which might be cited, prove that the cholera is on its peripatetic march; and without asserting to the same extent the outbreaks in North Russia, Poland and Prussia, it is at the least possible that the year may be signalized by the invasion of that enemy which patriotism and courage cannot keep out of our island.—London Times.

The Rebel Panic.—The fearful disease is reported to be travelling westward with great rapidity. It is said to have taken hold in Richmond, and the authorities are urging all the citizens to take every precaution to prevent the progress of the pestilence. It is just as well to look the matter squarely in the face and prepare for the worst. By thus preparing we may possibly avert the severities of the ravage, and prevent scenes of appalling magnitude. The authorities of the United States have issued a circular to all the cities in the Union, warning those in authority to take every precaution to prevent the progress of this human dreaded pestilence. The same course should be taken by our Government. In the meantime, the news of the imm

The Destruction of Barnum's Museum.

(From the N.Y. Commercial Advertiser)

The citizens of this metropolis and its suburbs, as well as thousands upon thousands of residents in other parts of the country who have ever visited New York—and few there are who have not—will learn with regret that that old and favorite place of entertainment, Barnum's Museum, is in ruins, together with its millions of curiosities, including the whales, the happy family, the alligator, the cosey and varied occupants of the aquaria, the sea and land birds, beasts and fishes of every description, all to us of numerous to mention.

Also the valuable machinery and wardrobes of the lecture-room, and works of art and rare specimens which have been in process of collection and preservation for over fifty years by the present and former proprietors of the Museum.

Thus a wreck away, in a single day, the labors of a life time, involving a loss whose actual value to the historian and antiquarian can scarcely be estimated.

The building was founded in 1810 as Scudder's Museum, and soon became a favorite place of resort. In 1842 Mr. Lorenzo P. Barnum, brother of Mr. Scudder, died and lived up in the building at the corner of Broadway and Ann street, incorporating with it the collection of curiosities owned by Mr. Peale, which was established in 1825, and was for many years a leading object of interest to the city. The large and valuable collection of Chinese curiosities, formerly located at No. 539 Broadway, was added time ago added to the Museum.

As an evidence of the early struggles of Mr. Barnum to establish an entertaining place of rational amusement for the people, it may be stated that at the commencement of his career, the negotiations for renting the Museum were nearly broken up by the inability of the poor and unknown but energetic young man to offer the owner the necessary business sureties and references. In this emergency, Mr. Barnum applied to Moses Y. Beach, who was at the time proprietor of the Sun, and that gentleman evinced his intimate knowledge of character of men by going security for him. It is needless to say that Mr. Beach lost nothing by his apparently rash confidence.

Mr. Barnum has since repeatedly acknowledged his appreciation of Mr. Beach's services in the hour of need, and the latter still lives to regret nothing of the past in this connection with the great showman, except the loss which has befallen the people as well as the owner of the Museum.

During the eleven months ending on May 31, the gross receipts taken at Barnum's Museum amounted to two hundred and eighty thousand three hundred and forty one dollars. This and over about one million and a quarter of visitors for eleven months. How many millions of persons have visited the Museum since its foundation it is of course impossible to determine, but it is safe to say that it was the most extensively patronized of any place in the country. On Monday afternoons it has been Mr. Barnum's practice to give entertainments almost every hour in the day, and the place would be thronged at a morning quid hac at 10 o'clock with a living stream coming and remaining in the field. The summer season had just commenced, under the most favorable auspices, and the pantomime of "The Green Monster," was being performed to crowded audiences, to the lecture room, day and evening.

Mr. Barnum, years back, kept alive the curiosity of the public to see his Museum by every effort in its power; sometimes by means that scrupulous boxes have denominated as a "humbug" and sometimes by something stronger. It has been and undoubtedly perseverance to make the Museum and institution of New York, and sought after by strangers, must have met with a success that must have exceeded even his most sanguine hope as the streets of country people were crowded into the place to see the lecture and be astonished at the sight of Jenny Lind (the professional nurse of Washington) the stuffed mermaid (said to be) and half of a mermaid, and other curiosities that fascinated the propensity for seeing, I know, very plainly showed. At this time Mr. Barnum's career was known but little out of the States, but in the engagement with Jenny Lind, and subsequent tour to American audiences, he gained world his visit to Europe to exhibit Tom Thumb, made it conducive to at that time not only in Europe but throughout the world.

The fire broke out about the 1st o'clock or 2 o'clock in the rear to the street, the west of the Museum, and the flames soon spread with fearful rapidity through the whole building. A gentleman who was in the Museum at the time the alarm of fire was given, stated that there were but few visitors in the saloon—chiefly women and children—and none in the lecture room. Great excitement was manifested, and the screams of the women could be plainly heard in the street, but owing to the prompt assistance rendered by the police, all it is believed, were got out without accident. Streams of water were turned on from the hose inside the building, but they appeared to have but little effect. The firemen were promptly on hand, and mounting the balcony on the Ann street side they directed on the sides and soon the lateral streams playing in the interior of the building. The flames, however, gained rapid headway, and about one o'clock the whole interior of the structure, with the exception of that portion of it facing on Broadway, was a mass of flames, while a dense pall of smoke enveloped the exterior of the building. A fall immured the roof of the Museum about a quarter past one o'clock, and mingled down the Stars and Stripes which were there floating, amid the cheers of the spectators. Considerable excitement was manifested outside, it being supposed that the place must have been crowded as usual, and that many lives must have been lost; but this, as already stated, was not the case.

INCIDENTS.

Among the hundreds of incidents of the conflagration a few were of great interest.

The firemen were anxious in their endeavors to save the property, and some exhibited a great penchant for curiosities. One fireman was seen emerging from the building with a stuffed owl in his hands. Another fastened on one of the wax figures, and it is said that Mr. and Mrs. Tom Thumb and Jenny Lind are not among the things that were. Also, that several other curiosities have been saved, and will doubtless be restored to Mr. Barnum. Jeff. Davis's petticoats (!) were seen hanging on a lamp-post in Fulton street, soon after the fire broke out. The fat woman and the giant and giantess made their way out with difficulty, but hastened to conceal themselves from public exhibition to their hotel.

The building belonged to the Astor estate, and was held by Mr. Barnum on a lease having a number of years to run. The contents were insured for about $75,000 to $80,000 in various city offices, which possibly will pay about $25,000 each.

SCENES AROUND THE FIRE.

As the news of the burning of the Museum spread over the city, thousands of persons flocked to the scene of conflagration. From every section of the city, the crowd poured down Broadway and Chatham street to the burning of the ancient temple of curiosities. It was with the greatest difficulty that the police could clear the street to give the firemen a chance to work, but by the aid of heavy reinforcements from a number of down-town precincts they succeeded at last in clearing a large space around the burning building, the heat from which was so intense that thousands were driven back by the over heated atmosphere. The Park, almost from the City Hall to the lower gates, was literally jammed with the multitude, among which were many women who seemed to be as anxious to witness the conflagration as the male portion of the assembly.

Shortly after one o'clock the roof of the Museum fell in with a tremendous crash, leaving nothing standing but the front walls which supported the first story. In the mass of burning debris were the one million or more curiosities which had so long been the boast of the institution and the admiration of the curiously loving public.

About twenty minutes after one, the wall facing on Ann street fell in with a tremendous crash. We cannot learn that any one was burned in the ruins. Some seven minutes later the portion of the wall directly over the main entrance fell into Broadway, and at fifteen minutes to two the remainder of the front wall came down with a crash. Three persons were injured by this last fall; one of them, it is reported, fatally. We saw him at the time, but it was impossible to tell, owing to the confusion and excitement, whether he was dead or not.

We learn from Mr. Tolbany, the Treasurer of the Museum, that a few over a hundred persons were employed about the establishment, including those on exhibition. Mr. Barnum has been talking for some time of removing his establishment further up town above Canal street. He will now, doubtless, do this, though many years will be required to get together another such rare collection as has now been suddenly swept away by the devouring element.

A PIECE OF THE WHITE LEFT HEAD ON THE BOARD.

Through the politeness of Mr. Hodgkin, one of the stockers of the steamer Yellowstone, we were furnished with the particulars of the murder of two men by the Indians on the Upper Missouri.

The Yellowstone left St. Louis on the 20th of May, and arrived at Fort Benton on the 3rd. On the 17th of June the Indians commenced to pour in. Mr. Hodgkin, and about the middle of the month, on the 20th of June, at the place named, the account of the murder of the white men, a party of Red Indians. The North Pecan, Sioux and Blackfeet tribes, assembled together. The Assiniboines were also there. The Indians were all painted for war, and had their faces painted in the most horrible manner. The Indians had been at some time previously, and had stolen horses. On Monday, May 29, a party of the Indians were at Fort Benton, North Pecan Camp, which is about two miles from the fort, and stole some of the horses which had been stolen by the Indians during the past winter.

At night the camp was surrounded, three killed and wounded, the rest escaped. This is one version. Another is, that the chiefs while in a drunken state, attacked the Indians, killing one. Mr. Hodgkin does not believe the latter version.

4. That the said debentures shall bear interest at and after the rate of six per centum per annum from the date thereof, which interest shall be payable half-yearly, on the first day of April and the first day of October in each year, at the office of the Treasurer of the said Municipality.

5. That for the purpose of forming a sinking fund for the payment of the said debentures and the interest at the rate aforesaid to become due thereon, an equal special rate of one mill in the dollar shall, in addition to all other rates, be raised, levied and collected in each year upon all the ratable property in the said Municipality during the continuance of the said debentures or any of them.

6. This By-law shall take effect and come into operation upon the 5th day of October, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-five.

PIANO-FORTES.

DRIGGS' NEW PATENT.

ARE THE ONLY INSTRUMENTS constructed on a truly scientific principle. That have greater strength, and will remain longer in tune than any other Piano. The construction is simple and natural, all the extraneous lumber in the body of the instrument is dispensed with; the sound boards are merely two arched planks of thin wood, like the front and back of a violin; the strings are attached to a strong iron frame, which is separate and entire; independent of the case, thereby dispensing with the old heavy form of stringing by substituting straight bridges, preserving at the same time The Over Strung Bass, of which Mr. Driggs is the inventor. By these improvements we gain much more vibratory power, at the same time preserving all its purity and richness of tone.

They have received the highest testimonials from the Press, and all the principal artists in the country, among which are:

Harry Sanderson,	L. M. Gottschalk,
M. x Maretzek,	S. Thalberg,
Theodore Eisfeld,	Wm. Mason,
Herman Wollenhaupt,	A. Barili.
Francis H. Brown,	M. Strakosch,
Wm. Henry Fry.	Charles Fradel,

MR. SIGISMUND THALBERG, the great pianist, says:—I have examined your new Piano-fortes and I cordially approve of its system of construction. Its principle, by which great increase of vibratory power is obtained, being very simple and perfectly philosophical. The tone is grand and noble; it has great capacity for sustaining the sound or singing, and its volume of tone or power I have never heard excelled in depth, purity and sympathetic sweetness.

WM. HENRY FRY, late musical critic of the N. Y. Tribune says:—I have examined your newly invented Piano-Fortes. They merit all the praise given to them by Messrs. Thalberg, Gottschalk, Strakosch, Mason and others. As regards the structure, they are original and philosophical; in purity, volume, and continuity of tone; in vocal verisimilitude, that crowning excellence which enables the pianist to sing on the instrument. Your Pianos deserve the highest rank. Your invention, in my opinion, is destined to work radical changes in the manufacture of Pianos throughout the world.

From the N. Y. Herald, Sept 5:—Upon a careful examination of Driggs Piano-Forte, we find the results obtained are a very fine singing tone, great purity and brilliancy throughout the entire instrument, not often found in Pianos constructed upon the old plan.

The N. Y. Times, July 13, says:—We have now an instrument without an equal. It is a sing with a smoothe delicacy, perfectly unattainable on any other instrument; an ordinary player obtains with no exertion, the fullness of a Grand in no Forte and they must speedily supersede the old styles.

GENTLEMEN:—Having thoroughly examined and tested the Piano-Fortes invented and patented by Mr S. B. Driggs, I am of the opinion that the tone result ing from his improvements, as exhibited in the instruments under examination in point of richness, depth and brilliancy, equals that of the best Grand Piano-Fortes, and excells them in pure, musical and powerful tone, power this approximating closer to what I consider perfection in the instrument than has yet been achieved by any other system of manufacture.

Yours respectfully,
L. M. GOTTSCHALK.

HOMŒOPATHY.

HOMŒOPATHY AND LIFE ASSURANCE.—The Directors of a London life assurance office—the "General Provident"—at its recent meeting have placed on record that in opinion "that persons treated by the Homœopathic system enjoy more robust health, are less frequently attacked by disease, and when attacked recover more rapidly than those treated by any other system; that with respect to the more fatal classes of disease the mortality under Homœopathy is small in comparison with that of Allopathy; that there are diseases not curable at all under the latter system, which are perfectly curable under the former; finally, that the medicines prescribed by Homœopathists do not injure the constitution, whereas those employed by Allopathic not unfrequently entail the most serious, and in many instances fatal, consequences." The directors further propose to conduct in accordance with the shareholders to lay before them the facts they have collected, and the decision at which they have arrived, namely, "to open a special section for persons treated by the Homœopathic system, at a lower rate of premium than that charged on other lives."—London (Eng.) Observer.—Toronto Globe.

DR. POOLE, (Master, Peterborough, is a Graduate and Licentiate of both the Allopathic and Homœopathic School, and confidently recommends the latter system of treatment, as by far the most and most successful, in both Acute and Chronic diseases.

Poetry.

THE SLANDERER.

O come not near him! his foul breath will cleave
To thee, as Egypt's filthy plague cleaves to
Her sons. The sarcophagus that contains
The loathsome body, putrid with disease,
Is not more foul than is the Slanderer's throat.
His tongue, accustomed to deceit, can coin
Such honeyed words, that, e'er you are aware,
You'll find yourself within a serpent's coils,
And he, vile monster, hissing in your face.
His breast to ire with such a selfish rage,
That language nowhere on his fiery lip;
'Tis thus the venom of his crafty soul
Stings, like the death-pang of the hated asp.
The highway robber and the prowling thief
Are saints in virtue when compared with him;
For they affect the body—he the soul;
They steal the purse; but he the precious name.
Whate'er is holy, excellent, or good,
He treads profanely 'neath his cursed feet.
The injured sensibilities of men,
The grief and sorrow that misfortunes bring,
And disappointment incident to all,
Afford rich food for appetite like his.
His most engaging smiles are fraught with death,
He kisses but to stab thee to the heart.
The peaceful village and the quiet home,
The choicest circle, the selectest friends,
Are changed at once by his polluting touch.
He breathes upon the flowers, and they die
As if a winter's frost had fallen on them.
The gushing fountains of the heart that rise
Respondent to another's woe, in tears
Recoil as if the icy hand of death
Had met them on their way and drove them back.
All honest motives he repels, and stamps
Each harmless action with some dark design;
He makes the heart innocence to bleed,
Then, with a fiendish grin, looks on and smiles.
O, if there be on earth the duplicate
Of that dark place where damned spirits dwell,
It is his breast; for there the exulting brood
Of hell find residence;
A fury one,
Swept by ten thousands storms, his bosom is—
A frightful flame, where oft, in fury, burn
Malignant passions, kindled from below—
Incarnate devil! locomotive hell!

What is the best thing to do in a hurry? —Nothing.

A practical joker never keeps his friends; he sells them.

When are gloves unsaleable? When they are kept.

Parties at a dead lock should extricate himself with a skeleton key.

To keep fish from smelling.—Cut off their noses.

Why is blindman's buff like sympathy? Because it is feeling for others.

Your wife cannot have been too dearly won, if you and she are dearly one.

A tradesman, to support a costly habit, must have a profitable custom.

Men in battle nearly always shoot too high, they should be careful to avoid such overaight.

It is a good deal harder to conceal the intoxication of love than that of brandy.

What is that which has got feet and nails, no legs, toes, or claws?—A yard measure.

Boy—"Please sir, tell me the time?"—Crusty old gent—"Yes, sir, bed-time."

Musical Note.—In what key would a lover write a proposal of marriage? Be, mine, ah!

To keep apples from spoiling.—Keep 'em in a dry cellar of easy access to a large family of children.

Jinks is a man who takes things humorously. When his best friend was blown into the air by a bursted boiler, Jinks cried after him, "there you go my esteemed friend."

Puzzling.—The difficulty of acquiring our language which a foreigner must experience is illustrated by the following question:—"Did you ever see a person pare an apple or pear with a pair of scissors?"

A lady who had been severely interrogated at court by an ill-tempered council, observed, on leaving the witness-box, that she never before fully understood what was meant by a cross-examination.

Shelter us!—What is the difference between the Prince of Wales and a bombshell?—One is heir to the throne, the other is thrown to the air. The Prince himself on hearing this, declared it to be a-boom-inable.

A Nice task for a Painter.—"Represent me in my portrait," said a romantic lay to a painter, "with a book in my hand, and reading aloud. Paint my servant also in a corner where he cannot be seen, but in such a manner that he may hear me when I call him."

A Western editor, having an eye upon a rival city probably, took occasion to rent his opinion, when another editor replied, and drew out the following neat apology:—"In the meantime if we have said anything that we are sorry for about your city we are glad of it."

"How long will it take me to go to Richmond?" asked an eager officer at City Point, of a veteran brigadier holding command there, soon after we got the good news. "I can't say how long it will take you," was the answer; "it has taken me three years and eleven months."

A musician, complaining that the tyrant Dyonisius gave him nothing, after promising him much, for the exercise of his art—"You fool, we are quits," said the tyrant; you tickled my ear, and I did the very same by yours.

Teetotum tells us that a Miss Buchanan, once rallying a brave soldier on his courage, said: "Now, Captain E——, do you really mean to tell me you can walk up to a cannon's mouth without fear?" "Yes," was the reply, "or a Buchanan's either." And he did it.

A Farmer who occasionally accommodated a neighbour with a flitch of bacon at the killing season, being applied to as usual, replied, "I hasna" yet made up my mind whether I shall kill myself the year, or take a side of my father.

A Herring-Bed.—"Some seed was given me the other day," said a gentleman to his friend, "and as I know you take an interest in such things, you can have it if you like; it is herring-seed, and I am told that with proper care, it will grow, if placed i the garden!"

"Thank you," said the latter. 'I'll try it," pocketing a part of the hard roe of a herring.

About a month after, he invited his generous friend to dinner, and, as he came early, he asked him into the garden, having previously placed some fresh herrings in the ground, with their heads just appearing above it.

"By the by," said he, "you remember the seed you gave me; well, they are coming up beautifully, just look here."

"Dear me," said the donor of the seed, "that is most extraordinary, upon my word; when it was given to me, I thought it was a trick!"

Button-hole, Cording, Braiding and Embroidering

SEWING MACHINE!

COMPANY,

627 BROADWAY, NEW-YORK.

THE BUTTON HOLE made by this entirely simple and novel machine, are not only equal to the best hand-made in the pearl or right side, but greatly surpassing them in beauty on the wrong side, which is formed by a beautiful braid stitch, made by an extra stitch, which no hand made button-hole possesses; thereby imparting to the same a much greater strength, which renders cording or barring altogether unnecessary.

One Needle and Two Threads are only Used.

Unlike other Sewing Machines it manufactures its own Braid and Cord.

The best Merchant Tailors freely admit that its beauty, finish and strength cannot be attained by the most skilful hand.

Simplicity is one of its great merits, therefore not liable to get out of order, and it can be worked with ease by any young lady, who will, after a few days' experience, make from 1,000 to 1,100 perfect button-holes in one day.

This is the only machine produced that will throw a stitch over the edge, so as to bind and cover it in a manner indispensible for Button-holes, Cording and Braiding, each of which can be done with colored, shaded or chine silks, and produce a fabrique of varied colors unexcelled for beauty and taste.

To Ladies at home, Dress, Mantilla and Cloak makers, Shoemakers, Tailors, Hatters, Bookbinders, Saddlers, &c., &c., it is indispensable; it is also admitted to be of great value, to other branches as it Brads, Embroiders, and Cords plain and fancy on all kinds of Cloths, Cassimers, Linen, Velvet Leather, &c., &c.

See what the most popular and widely circulated periodicals say of our Establishment:

From the "Dispatch" of February 25, 1865.

We take pleasure in calling the attention of our readers to the announcement of Messrs. Devaugh & Co's Great Sale of Jewelry, Silver Ware, and Fancy Goods, in our advertising columns. We are personally acquainted with the members of this firm and know them to be gentlemen of sterling worth and integrity. Their stock of goods, for variety and extent, we have scarcely seen paralleled.

From the "Mirror of Fashion," March 1, 1865.

Messrs. Devaugh & Co's Great Sale of Jewelry, etc., opened on the 15th ult., and we venture to say that no finer display of goods was ever exhibited by any establishment in this city. The ladies thronged their bazaar almost to suffocation, although the streets were rendered nearly impassable by the melted snow and slush. We predict for them a wonderful success.

From the "Ledger," February 28, 1865.

Our lady friends should visit the extensive establishment of Messrs. Devaugh & Co., No. 15 Maiden Lane, if they wish to indulge themselves with a sight which they will long remember. Such a profusion of elegant Watches, Chains, Rings, Earrings, and, in short, of Jewelry of every name, kind and description, we never before witnessed. Their silver and plated ware is superb and almost casts into the shade the other splendid establishments which have long been the boast of our city. It is estimated that their stock is worth not less than one million of dollars.

How You Can Get a Prize.

Send Twenty-Five Cents to us, and as soon as we receive it we will mail you a Certificate, showing what you are entitled to. If the article or articles please you, send back the Certificate and One Dollar and we will forward you the article, no matter how costly it may be. If the article is not what you wish, state, when you send the Certificate and dollar, what other article of the same value you prefer and we will send it. If you wish more than one Certificate send us $1 and we will send five; for $2, eleven; for $5, thirty; for $10, sixty; for $15, one hundred.

Agents are wanted in the Army and in every place. We have an immense stock of goods to dispose of, and need a large number of Agents. Our terms to Agents are very liberal and some even of our Lady Agents are making from $5 to $20 a day. We give Agents 50 per cent. on all Certificates they sell provided they remit not less than $1 for eight.

JUST THE CHEESE

FOR CANADA.

The following valuable letter, which has been furnished to us by Mr. Thomas Leeming, of Messrs. Leeming and Buchanan, is one of the results of that gentleman's observations during a recent tour through the country. As regards his first remark about the feeling of the people on the subject of annexation, however, we must differ with him; our experience of the country goes to show that the feeling which did exist on this subject a couple of months ago, has almost entirely died out.

A stranger travelling through Canada West, among the farmers and merchants, cannot but be struck with the frequent comparisons instituted between farmers here and in the United States. Here, it is said, nothing seems to pay, while there, everything succeeds! Wheat yields but half a crop. Barley pays very well, but only because the Yankees come over here and pay well for it. Our butter only brings about 80 per cent of the price Vermont and New York State farmers get for theirs. "There's no use hiding it, we must have a 'change'—either annexation or something else." The first remedy named—annexation—would not place us on the high road to fortune unless accompanied by a material change among ourselves. That Canadian farmers would improve their condition vastly by imitating their brethren across the border there can be but little doubt.

My object in writing at present is to bring before your readers one source of wealth which, up to the present year, has been entirely overlooked by our Canadian farmers, viz., Cheese—Factory Cheese!

A hurried trip through several Counties in the State of New York, where cheese is made in the highest perfection known in America, has revealed to me an amount of enterprise and wealth that may well be envied by Canadian farmers. In the State of New York alone there are 84 factories manufacturing the milk of 45,920 cows, producing fifteen million three hundred and eighteen thousand (15,318,000) pounds of cheese in one season, yielding over two million dollars annually. The factory system is found to be much more remunerative than private dairies, besides saving the time and labor of the farmer, and producing a very much superior article than can possibly be made in single dairies. The manufacture of cheese is also found to be much more remunerative than butter, as the milk used in making one pound of butter makes nearly three pounds of cheese; the value of the butter is say 17 cents, that of three pounds of cheese at least 30 cents.

There is no reason why cheese factories should not be put in successful operation in every Township in Canada. The expense is not great, nor the management difficult. Nothing but ignorance upon and indifference to, the subject, can account for the absence of factories here; and if attention can be drawn to the question by giving a general idea of the modus operandi through the columns of the Review, my object will be attained.

The first requisite is suitable buildings, which consist of a manufacturing room, or place for making the curd; a press-room, and a dry-house or curing-room. The manufacturing room should be over or near to a stream of spring water, by which all droppings of whey and curd, &c., will be carried off, as nothing either sour or foul must be allowed to remain about the premises. In this room the curd vats are placed. A small vat is 9 feet long by 3 wide and 18 inches deep; (the largest are 15 feet long, having other dimensions the same,) made of wood, lined with tin; between the wood and tin is a space around the vat, through which cold spring water is made to run during the night after the milk is put in.

THE MILK.

On putting the milk in the vats at night it is slowly stirred until the temperature is reduced to 60 degrees; the water is allowed to flow around the vat all night to keep the milk cool and prevent souring. In the morning the morning milk is added, and the temperature raised to 82 degrees by means of steam pipes under the vat; when the proper heat is attained, sufficient rennet is added to produce perfect coagulation in an hour and a quarter. Before heating, the cream of the nights milk should be dipped off, poured back, and stirred through the milk until coagulation is attained; this ensures perfect equality in richness of the curd.

THE CURD.

As soon as the curd is formed, which may be known by its breaking with a smooth, clean fracture on passing the fingers through it, it is cut with a gang knife, made for the purpose, into pieces about an inch square. It is then allowed to stand till whey begins to rise. A portion of the whey is then drawn off with a syphon. The temperature is then raised to 88. The curd is then carefully broken up very fine. Before this process is completed, the temperature is again raised to 98 or 100, at which point it is held until the curd is perfectly cooked; this generally requires about an hour. After cooking withdraw the heat and turn on cold water, reducing the temperate to 88, when the curd is dipped out into a sink or strainer, where it is kept in motion until thoroughly drained, when the salt is added and the working completed. The quantity of salt used is 2¼ pounds to 100 pounds cheese.

PRESSING.

When the curd is salted it is put into hoops and pressed three or four hours; then turned and bandaged, and again pressed for 24 hours. It is then taken from the hoop, dressed, and transferred to the curing or drying room where it is turned daily, and kept oiled to prevent the surface becoming too dry. A visit of an hours duration at the factory would render these hints more clear. There are two or three factories in successful operation in Canada West, the first of which was opened by Mr. Wade, near Port Hope; there are two others near Ingersoll. All find prompt sale for their cheese, as soon as ready for use, in the immediate neighborhood, while for an immense export trade we are compelled to go to the United States.

People seem puzzled to know what on earth the Americans want with so many cows, they are buying up every cow they can get and driving them across the lines; The explanation is simply that for the summer's milk of each cow the farmer gets nearly $50; they can well afford to pay $30 to $40 each for milch cattle. If our people would read more, use their heads and save their heels a little more, copy our American cousins a little more, they might enjoy their prosperity without incurring the risk of annexation to a people tremendously taxed, and compelled to use a currency which they dare not allow to be depreciated. —T. L. in Trade Review.

GREASE THE IMPLEMENTS.—A correspondent of the Prairie Farmer truly says that the application of grease, usually to plows, cultivators, hoes, spades, etc., would save much labour in scouring. Whenever any implement is to remain unused for a short time, let the grease rag be used at once.

ARE YOU IN AGONY?

A WELL SPRING OF HOPE FOR ALL!

CAN BE FOUND IN

Holloway's Pills.

Be of Good Cheer! The Sinking may be Saved!

BY THE USE OF

Holloway's Ointment.

THE history of these great Remedies is the most wonderful medical revelation that the world has ever known. It establishes the all important fact that WHEREVER, and in WHATEVER SHAPE internal diseases exists, the disinfecting, searching and healing properties of the Pills are fully equal to its subjection and cure, and that, with the Ointment, they are

The Great Ambassadors of Health to all Mankind.

This is not a history written by one man, or even derived from the experiences of one nation. It consists of a compilation of testimonials from the sick of every country—an unimpeachable record, the like of which has never been adduced in favor of any discovery or invention since time began.

These Mighty Healers, World Known and World Tried are a Boon to the Sick

The want of a sterling medicinal to meet the ills and necessities of the suffering portion of humanity, and one entirely free from mineral and other deleterious particles, was severely felt till this all powerful medicine was ushered into the world; HOLLOWAY'S INVALUABLE PILLS have become the HOUSEHOLD REMEDY of all nations. Their attributes is to PREVENT as well as to CURE; they attack the MEDIC OR ROOT of the complaint, and thus, by removing the hidden cause of disease, re-invigorate and restore the drooping energies of the system, assisting nature in her task of VITAL AND FUNCTIONARY REFORMATION.

Disorders of the Stomach

Are the sources of the deadliest maladies. Their effect is to vitiate all the fluids of the body, and to send a poisoned stream through all the channels of circulation. Now, what is the operation of the Pills? They cleanse the bowels, regulate the liver, bring the relaxed or irritated stomach into a natural condition, and, acting through the secretive organs UPON THE BLOOD ITSELF, change the state of the system from sickness to health, by exercising a simultaneous and wholesome effect upon all its parts and functions.

Woman in all her Difficulties

Is invited to test the regulating and restorative powers of this harmless but effective preparation. At the two epochs of life in which the female system undergoes the most important and critical changes, the Pills will prove a positive safeguard against evil consequences. They are also confidently recommended as a specific in every disorder to which females are exclusively subject.

Be it Understood,

That the above statements can at all times be verified by the written testimony (extending through a quarter of a century) of tens of thousands of unimpeachable witnesses.

Bilious Maladies, &c., &c.

In whatever form disease attacks the liver, it is repelled and exterminated by this searching, painless, and irresistable curative. Bilious remittents, bilious purging, and all the ordinary disorders of the organ, indicated by pain in the right side and between the shoulders, yellowness of the whites of the eyes, weakness and debility, &c., are relieved and removed by the remedy, with a celerity which astonishes the sufferers and their friends. Let the sick whom the faculty have abandoned, resort with confidence to this powerful anti-bilious agent, and a restoration to health and activity will be the unvarying result.

Dyspepsia, Diarrhœa, Weakness, &c. &c.

The terrible bodily and mental pangs which characterise Dyspepsia are at once mitigated by the Pills. Diarrhœa, constipation, headache, physical prostration, nervous tremors, hot flushes, spasms, affections of the kidneys, hemorrhoids or piles, and, in fact, all internal complaints, from whatever cause arising, give way before the salutary influence of this extraordinary remedy. As a specific for dyspepsia, and the disorders connected with it, or growing out of it, the Pills are always to be relied on when every other medicine and mode of treatment has utterly failed.

Holloway's Pills are the best Remedy known for the following diseases:

Asthma,	Headaches,
Bowel Complaints,	Indigestion,
Coughs,	Influenza,
Colds,	Inflamation,
Chest Diseases,	Inward Weakness,
Costiveness,	Liver Complaints,
Dyspepsia,	Lowness of Spirits,
Diarrhœa,	Piles,
Dropsy,	Stone and Gravel,
Debility,	Secondary Symptoms,
Fever and Ague,	Vernal Affections,
Female Complaints,	Worms of all kinds.

CAUTION.

If the readers of this "notice" cannot get a box of Pills or Ointment from the drug store in his place, let him write to me, enclosing the amount, and I will mail a box free of expense. Many dealers will not keep my medicines on hand because they cannot make as much profit as on other persons' make.

None are genuine unless the words "Holloway's New York and London," are discernible as a water Mark in every leaf of the book of directions around each box: the same may be plainly seen by holding the leaf to the light. A handsome reward will be given to any one rendering such information as may lead to the detection of any party or parties counterfeiting the medicines or vending the same knowing them to be spurious.

Sold at the manufactory of Professor HOLLOWAY, 80 Maiden Lane, New York, and by all respectable Druggists and Dealers in Medicine throughout the United States and the civilized world, in boxes, at 25 cents, 88 cents, and $1 40 each.

☞ There is considerable saving by taking the larger sizes. 33

THINGS REQUISITE.

Have a tear for the wretched—a smile for the glad;
For the worthy, applause—an excuse for the bad;
Some help for the needy—some pity for those
Who stray from the path where true happiness flows.

Have a laugh for the child in her play at thy feet;
Have respect for the aged; and pleasantly greet
The stranger that seeketh for shelter from thee—
Have a covering to spare, if he naked should be.

Have a hope in thy sorrow—a calm in thy joy;
Have a work that is worthy thy life to employ;
And, oh! above all things this side the sod,
Have peace with thy conscience, and peace with thy God!

Miscellaneous.

A Night's Experience of a Quiet Farm House.

BY A LADY OF NERVOUS TEMPERAMENT.

'Betty,' I want a change, said I to my old and faithful servant, as she brought in my evening meal, consisting of a round of hot buttered toast and a cup of strong coffee. 'I want a change,' I repeated emphatically, as she stared at me in astonishment, and in consequence of looking at my face instead of the table was, within an inch of letting the tray fall. 'Don't you understand me, Betty?' I again repeated testily, 'I want a change!'

'Indeed mum! She re, an it can't be a change of linen ye want?' said Betty (who by the-by is a native of old Ireland, and who will permit in making free use of the brogue, in spite of all my efforts at correction.) 'Are ye again' to aither your day for clane things, mum?' and she opened her bright blue eyes still wider and rubbed her hands together according to her custom when perplexed. 'If ye are goin' to change the day, I'd better let the washerwoman know 'cause ye see———'

'Don't be a fool Betty,' said I. (I may as well remark I am rather given to using what is called 'strong language.' I don't mean any harm by it. It's only one of my ways, and we all have our ways, some good and some bad, like a peck of potatoes.)—'The change I mean, is a change of air.

'Aye, shure enough; ye're about right there mum,' replied Betty, now ceasing to expand her eyes to an unnatural width, and discontinuing the friction of her chubby red hands. 'That's just what I've said all the way along. 'Doctther,' says I shure and my missus needs a change of hair, folks nerves is ticklish things intoo, and when they've been thried, as yourn have been lately, why the only thing is a change of hair and scene. Where will ye plase go, mum?'

'I don't know,' said I shortly; 'take yourself off, and hold your chattering tongue, it is enough to make me ill again to listen to you!' 'Talk, talk, talk; chatter, chatter, chatter; from morning till night—get out of my sight, or———'

But Betty was already gone; she is a good sort of creature on the whole, is Betty and I am very fond of her, although I do speak rather rough to her sometimes; and she has a great affection for me, that she has. We've lived together nearly twenty years now—time enough to know one another's likes and dislikes. We're both of us unmarried, thank goodness! I never was such a fool as to listen to the men—a pack of lying, deceitful wretches, who say one thing to your face, and just the contrary to your back, especially if you have got a snug little property like mine! Ha! ha! I was always sharp enough to see through 'em I was. They could never get me to promise to honor and obey one of the race. 'Honor and obey,' indeed not I; I love my liberty too well. Now there's young Mrs. Gustavus Softheart; what a perfect slave she is to her husband! She dare not contradict him in anything; she gives up her own will continually; she's always thinking what will please her tyrant, and what will displease him; and what does she get for her pains? Nothing but discontent and ill-temper! Whenever I see her pale face, I say to myself, 'Thank my stars, I never married! Dear, dear, how the wind howls this evening! It makes me feel quite melancholy; my nerves certainly are still sadly disordered; the least sound makes me start. And no wonder if I am nervous; that was a serious attack; I don't feel myself at all at all. Doctor Smoothface says it takes a long while to recover from the disorder of the nervous system. Nice man, Dr. Smoothface nice man! So attentive he has been, and even now he calls nearly every day to hear how I am, and it is a month or so since I was ill. Ah! he has a kind feeling heart; he told me he could sympathise with me, for his own nerves were easily unstrung. I feel sure a change of air and scene would do me good; the the question is, where shall I go? I can't undertake a very long journey, I am not equal to it; I won't go to the sea-side; nothing is more horrible than the sea this time of year. I must go to some nice quiet place, where I should have nothing to disturb me—some country place, where I could gaze on the green fields and breathe the fresh pure air, where there would be no noise of rattling carts and carriages, no harsh discordant cries of fish and coal. My sleep is so often disturbed, and it is so trying to lie awake. Ah! I have it, I'll pay a visit to my nephew and his wife at their farm in M———shire. They have so frequently asked me to go and see them. I know the scenery is lovely there, especially in Autumn. Being in the country, their house must be a quiet one, and mountain air is so salubrious, so refreshing to the nervous system. I'm afraid the journey will be rather fatiguing, but it is not a very long one, and when I get to the end of it there will be nothing more to disturb me. I can go to bed early and have a good night's rest. I'll write to-morrow and tell them I am coming at once.'

There I am in the railway carriage rapidly approaching the end of my journey.—And oh, what a queer journey it has been! I discovered, when too late, that it was an excursion day to ——— I have been hustled about, hocked, pushed and squeezed on every side, which of course is very annoying, especially to a lady of nervous temperament. I nearly lost two of my bandboxes, three of my brown paper parcels, and my sable muff, at the change trains. Then, when I had at last collected them together and seated myself comfortably in another carriage, and was just taking of smelling salts by way of refreshment, a porter puts his face in the window, and bawls out,

'Change here for Dash, Blank, and Star!' 'Where are you for, please ma'am?

'Blank,' said I with a start.

'Change, here,' says he, and pulls open the door with such a jerk that I wonder it didn't come off.

'Change,' said I, why I have changed just this moment.'

'Ah, well ma'am you've got into the wrong carriage, that's all, make haste or you'll be too late, trains now going to start.' And with that he seized upon my bandboxes and parcels, and before I knew what I was about he pulled me out of the carriage and banged the door behind me.

'This way ma'am,' said he 'make haste.'

Make haste indeed! It's a wonder how I survived it all! I, a lady of nervous temperament and wearing habits, unaccustomed to exercise of any kind, was now obliged to run! I'm sure I thought my last moment was come when the porter pushed me into a carriage full of people and threw my handboxes and parcels after me. I fell headlong into the arms of a stout red faced gentleman, and literally gasped for breath. For some moments I was conscious of nothing but that the gentleman had placed me opposite him with an exclamation of—well, perhaps I had better say astonishment, for I don't like to repeat what he really said, although I am given to using strong language. When I was a little recovered, I was sensible of an unusual weight on my dress in a most indiscriminate manner. I in sore my best bonnet and my new cap must be quite spoiled—dear, dear, they were so becoming; Betty said I looked quite young in them, and she's a good judge of people's ages, is Betty. The railway carriage was quite full when I was pushed in so rudely by the porter, and has been so ever since; so of course there has been no room to spare, and I've been obliged to endure the weight of my boxes as well as I can. Oh, how stiff I shall be black and blue, and green to-morrow, that I shall!—Thank goodness we're going stop, and I shall shall soon be out of this horrible screeching crowded train. Ah, how I shall enjoy a quiet night's rest after all this bustle, how delightful the country will be, how pure and clear the mountain air! Here's the station and there's my nephew looking out anxiously for me, he sees me, he waves his hand, I wave my hand in return, he opens the door, he takes some of my boxes and a man servant takes the rest. I am out of the train at last.

'My dear aunt, I'm so glad you're come. I hope you're had a pleasant journey,' says Alfred, (that's my nephew), in a cheerful voice, as he shakes my hand warmly.

'A pleasant journey!' I repeat indignantly, 'pleasant! It's a wonder I got here at all! Pleasant! It was odious, perfectly odious. I have been treated shamefully; my best bonnet and cap are spoiled, and I had to run from one train to another till I was ready to drop. Pleasant indeed! Ugh!

'Oh, I am so sorry," says Alfred, but he does not look sorry, and I don't suppose he is sorry; in fact, he looks half inclined to laugh, but these men are so heartless and deceitful; they tell lies, as fast as they speak, the wretches.

'Let me lead you to the carriage,' he goes on, 'its too cold to stand still.'

'Cold! I should think it is. A nasty thick fog as bad as rain. If this is pure mountain air, I'd rather be out of it. Do you always have fogs here?'

Not always, dear aunt; only at this time of the year, he replies, still cheerfully, as he gives me his arm and leads me towards a pony carriage. 'I'm very sorry I could not bring the brougham to meet you, but we were obliged to sent it to the coachbuilders last week. I hope you don't mind going in an open carriage, it is not far.'

Now I hate riding in an open carriage, in weather, so of course I shan't find it very enjoyable in a fog, but there's no help for it—I got in and we start off.

'Pray Alfred, where are the mountains? I don't see a sign of them; I've been anxious to see the mountains.'

'Oh! you must wait till the fog clears off,' he says laughing.

'And how long is that likely to be?'

'It is uncertain: perhaps it may clear off to-night, perhaps to-morrow. It is rather unfortunate to day for you, aunt, you won't get a good impression of our lovely scenery.'

I made no reply to this obvious remark; the fog appears to grow thicker and thicker (I wonder if Dr. Smoothface would call this clear mountain air), and glad enough am I when we stop before the hall door of Beechdale Farm. I am warmly welcomed by Alfred's wife, who sympathizes with me in the many disagreeables of my journey; nice little woman she is, so thoughtful and kind, there's no doubt about her sincerity; and really it is a most comfortable house, so snug, and there's such a nice fire in my bed room. I have told Jane (that's Alfred's wife's name) that I wish to go to bed early to sleep off all the fatigue of my journey; she says I shall go directly after tea—would I like just to step into the nursery—I've taken enough steps to-day goodness knows. But perhaps I shall hurt her feelings if I don't go. Mothers, especially young ones, always think their children of the first importance; I go into the nursery, I find it is next to my room.

'Oh, he won't disturb you,' says Jane when I mention my fears in that respect, 'he's so quiet, blessed little angel as he is! he never makes a sound all night.'

Ah, I'm glad of that, very glad, indeed; for if there's one thing I dislike more than another it is hearing a baby squall. I am not at all partial to babies at any time. I think they're a perfect plague; they are always crying or being sick. Pah! disgusting little things. I do not think she would agree with me; she evidently makes an idol of her child; she looks at it,—a little red-faced, bald-headed, ugly thing as it is. Ah, here's the servant come to say tea is ready. What a blessing.

9.30. I have bidden Alfred and Jane good night. I have locked my door, and searched around to see if any robber is concealed there. The search having proved satisfactory, I have attired myself in my sleeping apparel, and am warming my feet by the fire, preparatory to getting into bed. Ah, this is indeed a delightful conclusion to the troubles of the day. Everything is so quiet. There's nothing like a country home for perfect repose of body and mind.

10 o'clock. My candle is out, a 'Child's Night Light' is burning in a saucer. I am comfortably settled in bed. I am very sleepy. How I shall enjoy a good night's rest.

10.30. I wake with a start. My window rattles, my bed shakes, I hear a voice like thunder. It is an earthquake? I sit up and listen. How my poor heart beats. What can be the matter? I remember now, it is a train, and a very heavy one I should think, judging by the noise. Alfred said he hoped I shouldn't hear the trains. Very kind of Alfred. I am sure I wish I didn't hear them. Gracious, what a horrible noise it makes, the engine must be going to burst. I hope none of the fragments will be dashed against my window. I sprang out of bed to see how near it was. Oh, law. It can't be a hundred yards off; it has stopped just opposite my window; what is it stopping for? The engine driver can't mistake this house for a station, surely. Oh, I have it now. Jane told me there was a sleep incline just here, and that sometimes heavy trains had great difficulty in getting up. I should think they have, judging by the awful row this one makes. I hope it won't wake up the baby. It is starting again; oh, I am sure the engine will burst. Oh, my poor nerves. This is trying indeed. I am shivering with cold. I must return to bed; the train is going on now, so there's no occasion for further alarm. I shall soon be asleep.

11:30. What wakes me now? The baby screaming violently! Is this what Jane calls "being quiet?" Is this "making no noise?" I wonder what sort of a sound it is when he makes a noise? Nasty ill-tempered little thing. Will he never hold his tongue?

12 o'clock. Baby just left off crying, the nurse is singing him to sleep. Poor woman, how I pity her. I wonder if that is the only tune she knows? Certainly in this case variety would be pleasing? How can she keep saying "Bye, little baby dear; good little baby dear," when he is neither "dear" nor "good?" She's left off singing at last; she's quite hoarse I dare say; serve her right.

1.30. A shrill whistle disturbs me in the middle of a most delightful dream about Dr. Smoothface. I feel frightened for a moment. I know what it is. I begin to think a country house is not the quietest spot in the world, especially if it is near a railway, and occupied by a baby and a singing nurse.

3 o'clock. A dog is barking. Two dogs are barking. Just under my window, apparently. I hope there are no robbers about. It is a lonely house; oh, dear. I wish I had brought Betty. She always had such presence of mine—I'm trembling all over. What's that noise? Cats quarrelling. I believe. Dogs bark still louder. Cats hiss and spit and swear. Dogs yell—probably scratched by the cats.—Perhaps they will be quiet now. They are quiet now, likewise the cats. Once more I close my eyes and turn over on my left side. Wonder, sleepily, why dogs can't agree?

5.30. Cock a-doodle do! Cock a doodle-doodle do o o o o o! My stars, there's a row. Who recovered from a nervous attack at all events. Cock a doodle do, cock a doodle do o o o o o? I wonder how many cockrels Alfred keeps, and if it is the custom to crow just under this window; because if it is their custom, no light sleepers of nervous temperament ought to be put in this room. It was to bad of Jane and Alfred to make me sleep here. I never had such a bad night's rest before never; and I was so fatigued with my journey. Oh, dear, dear, dear! I daresay my nervous attack will come on again, and no wonder either, after all I have gone through during the last four and twenty hours, enough to try the strongest nerves and mine are not strong—they never were. There goes the abominable bird again.—How I should like to cut its throat. I hear others in the distance. What shall I do to get asleep again?

6 o'clock. I am awake still and likely to be. Not only have cocks been crowing incessantly but geese have been cackling, pigs grunting and squeaking, ducks quacking turkeys gobbling, what a lot of fowls Alfred must keep to be sure! I don't think he'd keep so many if he slept in this room—it is a perfect Babel! And now the servants are, pear to be getting up. Some one evidently sleeps over my head; a man servant I should think by the sound of his boots. How he clumps about. I hope the ceiling won't come in—it doesn't look very safe—there's a great crack across it. I shall never believe in quiet farmhouses again. My house in town is far preferable. I'll not stay here another night. My mind is made up—I'll go back immediately after breakfast, that I will.

7 o'clock. I have come to the conclusion that this room is over the kitchen. Will the servants never leave off cleaning the stove and rattling the fire irons? Will they never leave off laughing and talking? Will that door never leave off banging? I declare they have begun to scrub the kitchen! Oh, what misery! I bury my head under the clothes, I hear the noise still. I wonder if the kitchen is scrubbed every morning, and if that door bangs all the time? Why can't they shut it? Just like servants so selfish, they never think of any one's comfort but their own.

7:30. Rattling of tins in the yard. Cows bellowing, men shouting. Still further rattling of tins. Cries of "Now then, Tulip, Daisy, Beauty, sounds suggestive of blows, I suppose the cows are going to be milked. The cow house must be close to my window. What a comprehensive window it is. Oh, my nerves, my poor nerves!

8 o'clock. After an uneasy doze of about ten minutes, I am disturbed by that "quiet little darling," the baby! It is screaming, if possible louder than it did in night—it is being washed I should think, judging by sundry sounds of splashing in the water; no doubt it would prefer being a dirty little brute! I wonder if it always cries when washed. I am glad I am not it's nurse; I should feel inclined to drown it, I think. Well, well! I never was so disappointed in all my life. Peace and quiet! I've had little enough of that! But then how can one have peace and quiet when he sleeps in a room next to the nursery, over the kitchen, under the man servant's bed room, within a hundred yards of the railway and when the side window looks on fowl yard, cow house and fowl houses? It is disgraceful! Shameful! Abominable! How could Jane and Alfred treat me in this way? They knew that I came here for the benefit of my nervous system, and I thought Jane such a tender hearted, sympathizing woman! But I'll have my revenge; they shall not touch a farthing of my money! I'll leave it to a lunatic asylum first! I will not stay here an hour longer than I can help. I'll go the first thing after breakfast, and never will I set my foot in this hateful, noisy house again! Never!

8:30. I may as well get up, for, of course, I can't go to sleep now. How glad I am that I only unpacked one of my trunks, one bandbox and two brown paper parcels. I declare they're grinding coffee in the kitchen now, and a most horrible smell is coming down my chimney of burnt fat; no doubt the bacon is being fried for breakfast—I shall be sick in a minute, I know I shall! Dr. Smoothface thought a change would do me so much good. He said a quiet country house and clear mountain air, would be just the thing to set me up; I wonder if he would consider the smell of burnt fat, invigorating? At any rate, I don't; and as for the clear mountain air, I see the fog is thicker than ever; another heavy train is coming; what a place this is for heavy trains! I only hope that I shall get home safely. Fogs are dangerous and I must and will go!

6:30 P. M. Thank goodness! I am at home once more! It will be a very, very long time before I leave it again! I've told my faithful Betty all my troubles; she says I look ten years older than when I started, and well I may! I shall send for Dr. Smoothface to-morrow, and tell him never again to be such a fool as to recommend a quiet farm house, and pure mountain air for the benefit of any one who has suffered, or is suffering, or who probably will suffer from disorder of the nerves. If he does not believe what I say, he had better spend a night in the room which I was fortunate enough to occupy at Beechdale Farm. I don't think he will contradict me.

7.30. Betty has just brought in my cup of strong coffee and my round of buttered toast. Ah! this is something like comfort! how glad I am to be home again! An organ grinder begins to play outside my window. I hate organ grinders. Betty must send the fellow away; but ah! stop a minute, what a sweet air he is playing—doubly sweet to me just now. It is the well known tune of "Home sweet Home." I have often heard it before, but never have I appreciated it as I do now! How irresistibly soothing it is, although he occasionally plays a wrong note, and the organ is a little out of tune! I will open my window and throw out the dear organ grinder half a crown.—Once a Week.

THE HUMAN EYE.—The language of the eye is very hard to counterfeit. You can read in the eyes of your companion, while you talk, whether your argument hits him, though his tongue will not confess it. There is a look by which a man shows that he is going to say a good thing, and a look when he has said it. Vain and forgotten are all the fine offices of hospitality if there be no holiday in the eye, though dissembled by the lips! A man comes away from a company; he has heard no important remark, but if in sympathy with the society, he is cognizant of such a stream of life as has been flowing to him through the eyes. There are eyes which give no more admission to them than blackberries; others are liquid and deep wells that men might fall into; and others are oppressing and devouring, and take too much notice. There are asking eyes, and asserting eyes, and prowling eyes, and eyes full of faith—some of good and some of sinister omen.

THE SABBATH.—The Sabbath is the loveliest, brightest day in all the week to a spiritual mind. There rests refresh the soul in God, that finds nothing but turmoil in the creature. Should not this day be welcome to the soul that sets it free to mind its own business, which has other days to attend to the business of its servant, the body? And these are a certain pledge to it of that expected freedom when it shall enter on an eternal Sabbath, and rest on him forever who is the only rest of the soul.

The following is given as a verbatim report in the Illinois House: Mr. Speaker, I think sheep is paramount to dogs, and our laws hadn't oughter be so that the dogs can commit ravages on sheep. Mr. speaker, I represent sheep on this floor. (Laughter, and cries of that's so.) Up where I live sheep is more account than dogs, and although you may tell me that dogs are useful, still I say, on the other hand that sheep is usefuller: and show me the man that represents dogs on this floor, and that thinks dogs is more important than sheep, and I will show a man who is tantamount to know nothing. Mr Speaker I am through.

A gentleman is one who combines a woman's tenderness with a man's courage.

DANIEL BRYAN'S OATH.

[Daniel Bryan, as appears by the context, had been a lawyer of eminence, but had fallen, through intoxication, to beggary and a dying condition. Bryan had married, in better days, the sister of Moses Felton.]

At length all hopes were given up.—Week after week the fallen man would lie drunk on the floor, and not a day of real sobriety marked his course. I doubt if such another case was known. He was too low for conviviality; for those with whom he would have associated would not drink with him.

All alone in his office and chamber, he still continued to drink, and even his very life seemed the offspring of his jug.

In early spring Moses Felton had a call to go to Ohio. Before he went he visited his sister. He offered to take her with him, but she would not go.

'But why stay here?' urged the brother. 'You are losing away, and disease is upon you. Why should you live with such a brute?'

'Hush Moses, speak not,' answered the wife, keeping back her tears. 'I will not leave him now, but he will soon leave me. He cannot live much longer.'

At that moment Daniel entered the apartment.

He looked like a wanderer from the tomb. He had his hat on, and his jug in his hand.

'Ah Moses, how are you?' he grasped, for he could not speak plainly.

The visitor looked at him a few moments in silence. Then, as his features assumed a cold, stern expression, he said in a strong emphatic tone;

'Daniel Bryan, I have been your best friend but one. My sister is an angel, but matched with a demon. I have loved you, Daniel, as I never loved man before. You were noble, generous and kind; but I hate you now, for you are a devil incarnate.—Look at that woman. She is my sister—she might now live with me in comfort, early she will not do it while you are alive; yet when you die she will come to me. Thus do I pray that God will soon give her joy to my keeping. Now, Daniel, I do sincerely hope that the first intelligence that I hear when I shall have reached my new home may be—that you—are dead!'

'Stop, Moses, I can reform.'

'You cannot. It is beyond your power. You have had inducements enough to have reformed half the sinners in creation, and yet you are lower than ever before. Go and die, sir, as soon as you can for the moment that sees you thus shall not find me among the mourners.'

Bryan's eyes flashed, and he drew back proudly. 'Go,' he said, with a tone of the old powerful sarcasm, 'go to Ohio, and I'll send you news. Go, sir and watch the post. I will yet make you take back your words.'

'Never, Daniel Bryan, never.'

'You shall, I swear it.'

With these words Daniel Bryan hurled his jug into the fire place, and while yet a thousand fragments were flying over the door, he strode from the house.

Mary sank fainting on the floor. Moses bore her to a bed, and then having called in a neighbour, he hurried away for the stage.

For a month Daniel moved over the brink of the grave, but he did not die.

'One gill of brandy will save you said the Doctor, who saw that the abrupt removal of stimulants from a system that for long years had almost subsisted on nothing else, was nearly sure to prove fatal. 'You can surely take a gill and not take more.'

'Aye,' gasped the poor man, 'take a gill and break my oath. Moses Felton shall never hear that brandy and rum killed me. If the want of it kill me, then let me die. But I won't die; I'll live till Moses Felton shall eat his words.'

He did live. An iron will conquered the messenger death sent—Daniel Bryan lived. For one month he could not even walk alone—but he had help—Mary helped him.

A year passed away, and Moses Felton returned to Vermont. He entered the court-house at Burlington, and Daniel Bryan was on the floor pleading for a young man who had been indicted for forgery. Felton was startled with surprise. Never before had such torrents of eloquence poured from his lips. The case was given to the jury, and the youth was acquitted. The successful counsel turned from the court-room and met Moses Felton.

They shook hands but did not speak. When they reached a spot where no others could hear them, Bryan stopped.

'Moses,' he said, 'do you remember the words you spoke to me a year ago?'

'I do, Daniel.'

'Will you take them back—canny them forever?'

'Yes, with all my heart.'

'Then I am in part repaid.'

'And what must be the remainder of the payment?' asked Moses.

'I must die an honest unperjured man! The oath that has bound me thus far was made for life.'

That evening Mary Bryan was among the happiest of the happy. No allusion was made to the scene of one year before, but Moses could read in both the countenances of his sister and her husband the deep gratitude they did not speak.

And Daniel Bryan still lives, one of the most honored men in Vermont. Five times has he sat in the State Legislature, three in the Senate, and once in the National Congress.

EVIL THINGS.—Beware of evil thoughts. They have done great mischief to the world. Bad thoughts come first, and bad words follow, and bad deeds finish the progress. Watch against them. Strive against them. Pray against them. They prepare the way for the enemy of souls—

Bad thought's a thief: he acts his part,
Creeps through the windows of the heart,
And if he once his way can win,
He lets a hundred robbers in.

When rain falls does it ever go back again?

IS IT THE RIGHT COURSE?

In the early history of colonies generally, and may we not add in the history of old, established countries, there are seasons of prosperity and depression. Seasons, when blessed by favourable circumstances, good crops, and paying prices, the community prospers: all appears to be joy and gladness. But the season of trial comes. Unaccustomed to hard trials or endure privations, long the same people then begin to murmur and lament over every little event that befalls them. This is more or less the way generally, it is with these colonies. In the history of the settlement of British America, until within a few years, there was nothing to encounter that was not common to the settlers of every new country. Nothing but what the early settlers of the United States had to endure, and what many of those who are hewing out a way for themselves now in the far west are being called upon to endure yet. The great American Republic has not yet become a paradise or elysium. The man who would become possessed of a comfortable subsistence there must work, and toil, and labour to obtain it; only the very few dream themselves into affluence in a night; it generally requires almost a life of toil and unabated industry; and happy would be the man, who after twenty or thirty years of industry and care, finds his old age subdued with the comforts of plenty, ease and peace. In the too great desire of many of our colonist to get wealthy at once they have over reached themselves and got into difficulties that will require years to deliver themselves from. They, accustomed to continued prosperity before, find themselves either unwilling or unable to endure the result of their own shortsightedness for even a year or two, and in their uneasiness to get some easy way of delivery look to other countries and climes as more favourable. Let such, however, gather simple truths from the leaves of unvarnished colonial (and of empire also) history, and they will find that "ups" and "downs" are common to all countries as well as to every person, now and then. Is it the wise course under these circumstances to rise and leave the colony at once and go to the United or any other States? or will those who do so find the way all smooth and even over which they pass as they endeavour to attain their ideal happiness and prosperity? If they do, it will be contrary to past experience: an exception to general principles. Another cry is annexation. This is got up by interested parties, of whom there are many in Canada. Many speculators have come over amongst us and made themselves wealthy at our expense very often, we wish them the enjoyment of honestly gotten gains, however. But many of these have never lost their American ideas of the great republic, and wish to see it extend itself if possible, to the north pole. These are they who get up the cry of dissatisfaction now, forgetting that many if not all of them had to leave the great United States and come here once in order to obtain perhaps what would have satisfied them then, a pittance. And who knows but these very persons are the paid minions of the U. S. Let that be as it may, we say the course is not wise, and if those who act thus would all be forced to do as Potter and Wood, there would be less croaking in the land.

Should the press allow every scribbler to unearth the minds of the unwary by their specious articles, which no one even takes the trouble to gainsay, but, on that very account, magnify themselves into something unanswerable. The answer must be evident enough, that the press, in giving publicity to these articles, are fostering a species of treason which ought not to be tolerated for a moment, no matter what party it may come from. In reading these scribblings, one would be led to imagine that there was no want or poverty in all the borders of this new Paradise—no privations, no taxes, no labour—nothing but gold, gold. Whence come all their wars and fightings, then, if not from discontent? The people of the great United States are not satisfied with their own circumstances, and eight to ten millions of them desire a change. Yet, under all these circumstances of discontent, misgovernment in some way, if Canada was annexed, there would be peace and plenty. What balderdash! The discontented scarcely ever become contented, no matter where you place them. We doubt if they would be happy in Heaven. The South is not satisfied; indeed it is not likely they will be. The West will soon speak out for itself, unless a different policy from the past is pursued; and twenty, or perhaps forty years at the most, may see fresh troubles in the United States. We do not desire to see this; on the contrary, we pray for her peace. But look at appearances; they forebode something unless a change of management is effected. And should we not consider these things? Surely so. Let us have reciprocal trade; let us have reciprocal affections; every thing that can be as if we were one people, and our prosperity will be equal to theirs at least. And finally, let us seek to make a nation for ourselves; why should we, dependent like, seek to sponge on the American people, when we can be independent and support ourselves—be an independent nation? But the fear of war with America! Sorrow is soon enough when it comes. When war comes, act prudently and according to circumstances, and there need be no fear. But let us hear no more of annexation till we try what we can do for ourselves. The approaching session of Parliament will be an important one. The wisdom of our legislators can do much to make us happy; they can also do much to bind us at this critical moment of our history. But let the game not abuse its liberty, by aiding in sowing the seeds of discontent among the people. It is easy to make people unhappy, under even the best of circumstances; not so easy to work the opposite. It is easy to get false ideas of other countries; not so to change circumstances again, when you would desire to do it. If we cannot govern ourselves wisely, who is foolish enough to imagine that United States Senators, who have plunged themselves into a debt equal to anything on the globe in the space of six years, would do anything better for us? The best cure for our evils are contentment and industry.

CAVAN.

THE DIFFICULTY OF CARRYING OUT THE LAW THERE.

It is very often complained that the law is not fully carried out by those who seek for its enactment. The fact that the law is not duly respected is also urged as a valid reason for its complete neglect or the repeal thereof.

To the first plea it may be set up why is law not enforced? Is it because those who desire its enactment do not desire its respect; or is it because they who have obtained its enactment are not in a position to ensure that respect for law and order that should prevail. Most undoubtedly it is not the first cause. From a personal knowledge of those people of Cavan who obtained the passage of the Dunkin's Bill, we can most unhesitatingly assert that they are lovers of law and order, and most sincerely desire good will among men. They are not the lawless and the profane. They are not the ungenerous and the unkind. But the law-abiding and the religious, the benevolent and the humane of our race, who have been seeking to lessen crime and elevate the down-trodden and the sot. They are men who have seen, and perhaps felt the debasing practices that prevail, and are desirous of saving their sons, their friends or their neighbors from falling into the whirlpool, or being carried away in the flood of immorality that is cursing our land. Do they look on with indifference or neglect? No. They are the sorrowful spectators of those evils, they would gladly cure but are unable to do so. The question now arises why are they so powerless. Because they are opposed by a party who are not very scrupulous of what means they use to thwart everything that is good or that would injure their craft or the craft of the great goddess Diana. Because that those who would lend a hand to have order and peace prevail, have not the machinery at their disposal to do so. Because men professing godliness ally themselves with the enemies of peace and stand Baalamlike trying to keep one foot in heaven though the other may be drawing towards pandemonium. This is the reason why the law is a dead letter. We are informed also that no constable can be in the Township of Cavan that will undertake to do any business against those who neglect the law. And further that when two magistrates applied to have two constables appointed for the use of those magistrates, they were not appointed although no reasons were assigned for not doing so. Again, when one already appointed is asked to act he refuses, because he says his property would be burned if he did so. The enemies of law, even, are therefore afraid of each other. What is the use of their asking why do not those in authority cause the law to be respected? If any one should say this is an over-drawn picture, just let them read the Bobcaygeon outlawry.

We regret very much to find some of our contemporaries joining sides, at least indirectly with those who set law and order at defiance. They seem to delight in the fact that the law is disrespected in Otonabee and elsewhere. The people are not prepared for it say they. Nor will they ever be if the will of those of whom we write should prevail. Surely no respectable journalist would be found abetting law-breakers.

Let the law be respected, whatever that law is; if wrong in principle or practice, repeal it. They also say that if the license law were carried out it would answer the end better than the Prohibitory Law. The License Law would suit us very well if duly respected. Can we, however, expect respect for one statute while we encourage disrespect of another.

BOBCAYGEONISM.

We give this week two letters on the Bobcaygeon Rowdyism of our Correspondent "Z" of two weeks since. We cannot congratulate the people of that ambitious village on the state of their morals. Such conduct does not speak well for a professedly church going people. And if Dunkin's Bill is not popular evidently it ought to be, as its object is to make men sober, and induce a higher moral feeling, than the communications of our Correspondents of this week reveal. One of the parties who suffered in the late lawless outrage, wonders at our publishing the communication of "Z." Did he not consider that the communication was calculated to do more to make Dunkin's Bill popular than six months lecturing of even the truest friends of temperance? Not that we think "Z" intended or desired that such should be the effect, on the contrary, we think he desired the very opposite. Every one who will give a moments reflection will see that the community cannot consider itself in a very safe position when men are permitted to outrage society in the way that some of our back friends have been permitted to do; that necessarily there must be reaction, when assuredly such conduct will receive its reward. We must protest however against being considered in any way responsible for the communications that may appear in the columns of the Examiner unless we so signify. We give communications for what they are worth and do not hold ourselves accountable for the views set forth therein. Our views on the Temperance reform are well known, we have not kept our light under a bushel: we will also continue to publish everything that we consider calculated to work the Reform so much called for, even though the matter may not be agreeable to every one. Neither are we behind even him who would so find fault, in our desires, nor in our labors, to remove from our land any traffic, no matter how respectable it may be, that is calculated to injure society or any member of it.

We have been shown a specimen of white marble from our back country, from the edge of Stoney Lake. It is of the best quality—very white—harder than the Vermont marble—and can be procured in any quantity. We also understand than an American company is about engaging in the working of it as soon as arrangements can be made.

MAGNANIMOUS.

ENCOURAGE HOME MANUFACTURES.

The following we clip as an item of news from the Globe of Saturday, 22nd instant:

TEACHER WANTED.

WANTED, a male teacher, for the third division, in the Peterborough Township and Union School. Testimonials as to certificate, experience in teaching and character required.

Applications accompanying certificates and references, to be forwarded before the 5th day of August, to Salary, $300. IVAN O'BEIRNE, Secretary & Treasurer, Peterboro'.

Peterboro', July 20.

Does this encourage teachers of this County? Several members of the Board of Trustees of the Town are also members of the Senior Board of Examination for the County, and their advertising in the Toronto papers seem something like repudiating their own offspring. The Daily Globe is not read out of the Towns, unless a chance reading; consequently, advertising therein must be calculated for those who live in the Towns, to the despising of Teachers who may be equally well qualified, but, perchance, teach in the country. Does it not look like despising those Teachers whom they have licensed? Not forgetting to acknowledge how magnanimously that self same Board treats the local press. Generous! magnanimous!!

MELANCHOLY ACCIDENT.

We have to record the death of Mr. Francis Bradshaw of North Monaghan, who was killed by being thrown from his waggon on the 20th inst., near the Port Hope and Peterboro Railway Station here. Mr. Bradshaw it would appear had been to Town and having done his business had returned a part of the way home, but it does not appear whether he had been returning to town again or not, but near the Station the horses got frightened in some way, kicked out of one trace and became unmanageable. At this juncture Mrs. Bradshaw made to jump out, but appeared to fall over by which she received severe injuries. The horses continued to run about a block when the waggon struck the post of the railway crossing which appears to have changed their direction a little. The waggon here upset, when Mr. Bradshaw was thrown out and either by the fall, or by some part of the waggon striking him received such injuries to the neck, head and base of the brain, as caused immediate death. An inquest was held on the body and a verdict rendered "That the deceased Francis Bradshaw came to his death by being thrown from his waggon while his horses were running away on the 20th July 1865. The cause of their so running away being unknown." Deceased was an inoffensive respectable farmer of sober industrious habits and was in comfortable circumstances at the time of his sad end.

A SAD ACCIDENT.—On Friday morning last, Mrs. Hewitt, of North Monaghan, and the hired man, both received severe injuries by the running away of the team. It appears that the man was about to go for a load of lumber, and, as Mrs. Hewitt was going a short distance in the same direction, she was persuaded to wait for him. Just, however, as the man was in the act of opening a gate or bars from the place, Mrs. H. raised her parasol, at which the horses took fright and ran away, throwing her from the waggon, and breaking her leg below the knee in two places, we understand, which certainly must have left the leg a mass of fractured bones. The man, also, in endeavouring to catch and hold the horses, got his leg broken. They are under the care of Dr. Brown, of this Town, and were at last accounts progressing favourably.

THE WEATHER for some time has been most remarkably dry, the ground being more bound than last season; but as the drought did not commence until most of the crops had made considerable progress, it has not done so much injury perhaps as last year; nevertheless, the late spring crops were suffering much, and pasture was fast burning up. On Tuesday, the face of nature was renewed by a refreshing shower or two, and we hope that they are not too late to benefit those crops that were in so much need of them. The fall wheat harvest is progressing favourably, and the yield promises to be abundant; other crops do not promise so well.

FOND OF MUSIC.—Some one, not wholly devoid of Covetousness, we suppose, made so free as to take a cage (and a bird in it) from the verandah of Robt. D. Rogers, Esq. Ashburnham, on Saturday morning last. As the bird was a beautiful singer, the thief must have intended to dispose of it for gain. Such a person could not enjoy the innocent song which must continually remind him of the foul deed. The Bird will be thankfully received by its proper owner, if remorse or penitence move the person to return it. If disposed of to any innocent purchaser perhaps he could do something towards returning it to the owner. It was a wild canary, with black wings and head, and orange coloured beak.

FLAX PRIZES.—Mr. Alexander Scott, of the communication line, Smith, we believe, obtained the first prize for the best two acres of flax, growing in the County, amounting to $25. For this there were five entries. Mr. John Bell, of Smith, got the 1st prize for the best one acre; Mr. Lewis Davis the 2nd prize; for this there were two entries. We learn that the flax crop looks well for the season, and promises to be remunerative.

INFANTRY COMPANY No. 2.—Capt. Smith's Light Infantry Company, will meet in the Town Hall, for re-organization, on Friday evening next, at eight o'clock, when all those who had their names enrolled are requested to attend.

STEAMER CORINTHIAN.—We understand the steamer Corinthian has broken her shaft. She was drifting before the wind yesterday, but nothing certain could be given concerning her at a late hour.

GENERAL LEE NOT TO BE TRIED.—Treason indictments against Lee and others will be called up in Norfolk, in October; but the President intends causing a nolle prosequi to be entered—and Lee will therefore be put on a long probation.

DENTISTRY.—We are requested to state that Mr. O'Donnel's Office will be closed until Wednesday August 2nd 1865 in consequence of his attendance at the meeting of the "American Dental Association" now in session at Chicago, Ills. U. S.

It is stated that the Hon. Messrs. Galt and Howland will proceed, shortly, to Washington, on business connected with the renewal of the Reciprocity Treaty.

Rowdyism in Bobcaygeon

To the Editor of the Examiner.

SIR,—In your issue of the 13 h inst., a communication appears signed by "Z," in which he professes to give an account of a "sublime scene," enacted in this village on the 8h inst. I wish, Mr. Editor, to refute many of the statements put forth by your correspondent 'Z," by simply stating the facts of the case, and you will please bear with me while I give you an account of our proceedings, in order that your readers may judge how far Mr. Dunkin or his (temperance) measure is answerable for the introduction of "demoralization and disorder," as the "sublime" sequel shows."

Bobcaygeon for many years has been noted for its rowdyism, and has borne a bad name for its drunkenness; the supporting and sustaining of which has been the tavern-keeping community, amongst whom is included "a first-class hotel-keeper." "The quiet, sober, industrious, moral, and church-going people" determined to do what they could to stop these ruffianly proceedings, and endeavour to gain a good name, and to raise our "romantic and beautiful village" from barbarity to a standard in the scale of morality and religion. Mr. Dunkin's Temperance Act having passed the Legislative Assembly and Council, it was deemed proper by a large number of the well-wishing inhabitants to petition the Township Council to appoint a day when the votes of the ratepayers would be recorded for or against. Mr. Bick, Township Clerk, granted the prayer of the petitioners, by fixing Friday and Saturday, the 13th and 14th days of January, for polling the votes; and that the ratepayers might have every opportunity for the adoption or rejection of the Act, every publicity was given of the days fixed, and each party prepared to wage war and push the battle to the gate.—After a very serious contest, the Temperance Act was adopted by a majority of 14 votes. On the evening of the 14th of January, the liquor dealers got up a display, (although defeated) with an effigy of Mr. Dunkin. This display was a most ruffianly one. The mob, carrying the effigy, went from house to house, hooting and yelling in a fearful manner, at all those who had taken any part in the adoption of the Act. And, Mr. Editor, would you credit the fact, the "first-class hotel keeper," assisted by Lewis Parker, an English Gentleman, headed the rowdies. Now, sir, it happened that an information was laid against this "first-class hotel keeper," Mr. Crabtree, for a breach of the Act, by one of the many he has helped to ruin, and not by Mr. Bick, Jr, as alleged by your correspondent "Z." The trial was fixed for the 8th, and then adjourned to the 15th for additional evidence. The Court having adjourned, all those interested withdrew, and were wending their way, some to their homes and others to their usual places of business. James Junkin, Esq., J. P., with some friends, had got as far as Mr. Orr's store, when a rowdy named Chambers struck him in the face with both fists, in the most unprovoked manner, abusing him shamefully and blackening his eyes. This over, and the crowd which had by this time gathered moved down towards Mr. Aitken's when a person named Wylie (a disorderly importation from the back country) entered Mr. Aitken's store, and asked for a quantity of liquor to be furnished him on credit. Mr. Aitken very proper y refused to accede to his demand, and the result was, a torrent of abuse was poured upon Mr. Aitken and the storekeepers of the village, accompanied by many oaths and much blasphemy. The constable, Mr. Robert Hunter, at this juncture of affairs, was instructed to arrest the blaspheming Wylie. This was no sooner done than the signal was given by this "first-class hotel keeper," for the commencement of the "sublime scene," by attempting a rescue. The rowdy Chambers, stimulated by frequent potations of "Old Rye," and encouraged by the harangue of Crabtree, beat the constable with his fists, and kicked him in the mouth with the toe of his boot, and rudely assaulted Mr. George Bick, J. P. The "first-class hotel keeper" aiding and abetting the lawless ruffian. Young Mr. Bick had started for home in a neighbour's waggon, when the ruffianly crew followed him. The English importation (Lewis Parker) held the horses, while Chambers jumped in the waggon, and heavily belaboured Mr. Bick, jr., with his feet and fists, all of which a cowardly sneak named Dobson assisted. In the evening an unoffending individual named Charles Trotter, having business in the village, was set upon by a person named Mat. MacCoppel, who, previous to the passing of the Act, kept an unlicensed grog-shop of the most abandoned description, and whose antecedents are anything but good. He seized his victim by the hair, threw him down, and brutally kicked him with his heavy boots in the face. A gentleman named Heise endeavoured to interfere, but was rudely knocked aside by Dobson. This melee, sir, was undoubtedly a premeditated affair, as it is well known that McCon ed had promised "something more than black eyes before evening was through." And, sir, Crabtree has been known frequently to threaten parties for their trouble in putting down the fearful liquor traffic. But all this was not enough, for an effigy of Mr Dunkin was procured, and the vagabonds of the village an neighbourhood gathered together, and with old horns and yells, they marched through Bobcaygeon and the adjoining village of Bokeby, to the alarm of women and children,—the "first-class hotel keeper" on this occasion, as on the last, superintending the whole of the arrangements.

These, sir, are the facts, they cannot be gainsayed or disproved. Instead of Mr Dunkin or his Bill introducing "demoralization and disorder," it is the cursed liquor traffic. The Bill is a good one, and will never demoralise society, but enoble and elevate it. "Z" affirms that the inhabitants of Verulam are not prepared for Mr. Dunkin's Act. Now, sir, the contrary is the truth. The majority of the votes have been polled in its favour. The majority of our Township Council are in favor of the Bill; and the greatest amount of rateable property is owned by those who are in favour of Mr. Dunkin's Temperance act of 1864.—Certainly it is not popular with the itinerant scribbling mountebank "Z," the "first-class hotel keeper," or his myrmidons. Neither will it ever be so,—we don't expect it. But that will not deter us; neither will their abuse and violence frighten us. We have a duty to perform; and as men who have a good cause in hand, they will find us equal to the emergency. There has, sir, been a marked improvement in our "romantic and beautiful village," since the adoption of the Act. We do not deny but that drink is sold, and can be obtained; but then the liquor dealer is very careful and cautious to whom they sell, and before whom it is given. They know well that any discretion on their part will have its unpleasant consequences. The Act, so far, has met the approval of the "quiet, sober, industrious, moral, and church-going people," and is not contemptible to any but "Z," and his liquor-loving cronies.

Yours truly,

AN ISLANDER.

Bobcaygeon, July 17th, 1865.

We have reason to believe that one of the propositions which Government will submit to Parliament at its next meeting, in order to fill up the constantly widening gap between revenue and expenditure, will be a stamp upon bank cheques and commercial papers, such as receipts, bills of lading, &c. Possibly they may apply it to sales of property by notorial deed; but as that interferes with certain rights which are well understood to be sacred from the hands of the tax-gatherer, we rather think not.—Montreal Herald.

To the Editor of the Peterborough Examiner.

SIR:—In your issue of the 13th inst., is a communication signed "Z," and as part is untrue, I think it requires correction, as I have no doubt the "Traveller" has seen the widely circulated columns of the Examiner further away than either of the Counties of Peterboro' or Victoria, thinks well to try and throw the disgraceful proceedings of the 8th instant upon innocent shoulders. He says that "a first-class Hotel keeper in Bobcaygeon was complained of and summoned before the resident J. P's, for a breach in Mr. Dunkin's Bill." Now Mr. Editor this is false, there is only one first class hotel in Bobcaygeon, and that is kept by Mr. E. Bottum, a gentleman that that well deserves the support that has always been extended to him by the respectable community that wilits Bobcaygeon, he is a man that lives at home with his own wife and family and saves no expence or trouble to make his house a comfortable one for the weary traveller, and once beneath his roof that man has never visited Bobcaygeon yet would dare to molest him. (I wish I could say as much for the first class Hotel keeper alluded to in Z's letter, but alas it is not so.) Did Z ever see Mr. Bottom leading a riot like that of the 8th inst.? Was he ever seen heading a mob to injure or deter any of Her Majesty's officers from doing their duty? Or in short was he ever seen parading the streets at all with any unlawful gang? No, he has always been a law abiding man, and has kept his house in such order as has fully come up to the most sanguine expectations of the greatest advocates of the Temperance Bill. Why then did Mr Z try to give the public to understand that it was Mr. Bottom that was complained against? (Perhaps he had some other motive in view than we know anything of.) The person complained of was S. W. Crabtree, of the village of Rokeby. Again, he says "that the informer, a son of one of the J. P's., was mauled, this again is false, ipso facto; Mr. Hunter was the informer, but the original one was one of their own gang; and perhaps they will find to their good (I hope) that they had better not offer rewards of $20 to have such person assassinated.

I need not say anything about the Bill in Verulam only that it passed, and is still popular with the respectable, quiet, sober, industrious moral, church-going people, of which I am happy to say we have a goodly number in Bobcaygeon and Rokeby: and I can say without fear of contradiction that we have as fine a class of merchants and mechanics as there is in Canada in the two villages above named, but Sir, they did not form part of the rioters. They do not belong to the gang of outlaws that paraded the streets of Bobcaygeon last Saturday week; and although some of them do not support the Temperance cause they would spurn the idea of mixing themselves up with such a motley crowd. Mr. Z says the Bill is contemptible, they will banish it. Might be not as well have said we will banish it; but I would advise them to take care lest they may be caught in a trap before they gain the victory. I understand that one of them may use the words of the poet "I have been there, and still will go, &c." But fearing that I have already trespassed too long on your space, I must for the present conclude.

Yours truly,

A FRIEND TO TEMPERANCE.

Verulam, July 17th, 1865.

The Butterfly and the Drunkard.

In the early part of the summer of 1865, as I was returning home from my daily toil, my attention was arrested by the sight of a butterfly on the surface of a little brook, which rippled at my feet. "Poor butterfly!" said I, "thou hast seen thy day, and answered thy part in the great theatre of life; perhaps this morning thou arose with the sun, and gambolled from flower to flower, but, by some means or other, thy career has been arrested, and thou art dead." These words no sooner passed from my lips than I saw the insect struggle, as if it tried to rise from the stream, which was bearing it onward to destruction. I took it out, laid it on the turf; it was not long before its wings got dry, and they gradually unfolded, and its motions displayed life and energy. Strength and vigor gradually came. Attempts to fly were at first made in vain; they were not many, it was not long before it flew several yards at a time. In a few moments it flaunted over the fields, and mounted towards the azure sky, as if it had never known danger. It went on and on, capering from flower to flower, and sipping the sweets as if altogether unconscious of the benefit conferred on it. Such is half an hour's history of a butterfly, Mr. Editor; and certainly it is not without interest, neither is it incapable of pointing a moral.

After the butterfly had gone farther than my eye could follow it, I felt quite satisfied that I had performed a useful act. Then, if I performed my duty, thought I, in benefitting an insect, certainly I am bound to do my duty on behalf of my fellow-men, who are of more value than many butterflies; and it struck me that perhaps I might never have another chance to assist a butterfly, but there was no necessity for me to wait for an opportunity to benefit my brother man.

This reflection was the forerunner of several others of a kindred character. I sat down on the mossy bank of the stream, and imagined I saw before me a mighty river. It was not pure and placid as the one from which the butterfly was rescued. No! it was black, loathsome and deadly, and it bore on its surface myriads of human beings. It was the river of evil which flowed through the heart of the moral universe. It received numerous tributary streams from intemperance, war, infidelity, sensualism, deception, selfishness, "the butterfly" amusements of life, oppression, ignorance, and innumerable other sources. It flowed on and on, bearing on its breast men who were steeped in sin; and I fancied I saw standing on its margin a great many good men, who were doing their utmost to prevent their brothers from perishing. I saw preachers of all denominations, and philanthropists of all shades of opinion, labouring with all their might for the restoration of their brethren. I saw teetotallers and school masters, and peace men and anti-slavery reformers, and many inostentatious men and women, who were labouring with all their might to save their fellow mortals.

I arose from that bank, and as I wended my way home, I met a man staggering drunk. I knew him well; I knew him to be a man who neglected his wife and family, who spent his time and money in the tavern. How could I reclaim him? Why, certainly, by getting him to join the Temperance Society. I reasoned with him; he listened, and promised to give up the maddening cup.

By becoming a sober man his circumstances, health and appearances would be improved. It will make him a better father, husband and citizen. It will revolutionize his habits, conversation and desires. It will enable him to cultivate an acquaintance with respectable people, and to read good books, and, like the butterfly that gambolled over the fields and flowers, it will enable him to hover over the regions of imagination which a Milton or a Cowper had created, or descend into the mines of philosophy which a Locke and Bacon had explored. It will rescue him from ruin, and make him altogether a happier and better man.

Otonabee, July 18th, 1865.

P. T. Barnum, whose world-renowned museum has been just destroyed, has issued a card, saying that in six months' time he will have built another splendid museum, which will far eclipse the one burned. He has despatched an agent to Europe to secure more "curiosities," and proposes to out-Barnum Barnum in his new Temple of Humbug!

Imperial Influence to be Exerted Strongly in Favor of Confederation.

In a despatch to the Lieut.-Governor of Nova Scotia Mr. Cardwell, Colonial Secretary, directs him to lay the correspondence between the Home Government and Canada before the legislature of Nova Scotia, adding:—

"You will at the same time express the strong and deliberate opinion of Her Majesty's Government, that it is an object much to be desired that all the British North American Colonies should agree to unite in one government. In the territorial extent of Canada, and in the maritime and commercial enterprise of the Lower Provinces, Her Majesty's Government see the elements of power, which only require to be combined in order to secure for the Provinces which shall possess them all, a place among the most considerable communities of the world. In the spirit of loyalty to the British Crown, of attachment to British connection, and of love for British institutions, by which all the Provinces are animated alike, Her Majesty's Government recognise the bond by which all may be combined under one Government. Such a union seems to Her Majesty's Government to recommend itself to the Provinces on many grounds of moral and material advantage, as giving a well-founded prospect of improved administration and increased prosperity.

"But there is one consideration which Her Majesty's Government feel it more especially their duty to press upon the legislature of Nova Scotia. Looking to the determination which this country has ever exhibited to regard the defences as a matter of Imperial concern, the colonies must recognize a right, and even acknowledge an obligation incumbent on the Home Government, to urge with earnestness and just authority, the measures which they consider to be most expedient on the part of the colonies, with a view to their defence. Nor can it be doubtful that the provinces of British North America are incapable, when separated and divided from each other of making those just and sufficient preparations for internal defence which would be easily undertaken by a Province uniting in itself all the resources of the whole."

A SWINDLER ARRESTED.

From the Leader.

For several months past one Douglass C. McNab, alias J. Casselman, a Scotchman by birth, and an alleged swindler by occupation, has been driving a thriving business in Upper Canada, with his headquarters at this city; but like most gentlemen of his calling, he has at length arrived at the end of his tether, and come to grief by falling into the hands of the police and hotties. Having victimised several parties by obtaining money under false pretences, suspicion was at length aroused and an enquiry made into the character of his operations, with a view of settling a detective on his track and bringing him to justice. About the 1st instant a letter was received by a gentleman in this city from a farmer residing some distance from Toronto, stating that a man named J. Casselman had victimized him out of $8, by representing himself as a general agent for the settlement of legacies left by parties in the old country to their friends in Canada. The letter was placed before the Chief of Police, who took steps to find out the whereabouts of the accused. After considerable trouble the city detectives ascertained that the alleged swindler had left Toronto for Ottawa. A warrant was consequently issued and despatched to Detective O'Neil of that city on the 10th inst., with instructions to execute it. The detective who is evidently well up in his business, went quietly to work, and soon got scent of Mr McNab alias Casselman. He traced him from Ottawa to this city, thence on a trip through the country back again to Ottawa, where he was lost for a day or two. O'Neil however, soon took up the trail again, and followed his game to Richmond, some twenty miles from Ottawa, where he found the object of his search on Wednesday. The detective, upon presenting his letters of introduction in the shape of a warrant, informed Mr. McNab as politely as possible under the circumstances that he was "wanted" at Toronto, and must march westward accordingly. His prisoner became confused, and after adjusting his spectacles, glanced seriously at the representative of justice, and intimated his intention of submitting to fate and the law with as good grace as possible; hinting at the same time that if he thought the magistrate would deal summarily with him it would be better to confess. Upon this point the detective gave no advice: his duty was to arrest and convey his prisoner to Toronto—not to act as a legal adviser. The prisoner was taken from Richmond to Ottawa on Wednesday and lodged in the jail in that city from whence he was conveyed to Toronto yesterday afternoon by Detective O'Neil.

In order to give the reader an idea of the manner in which the prisoner operated upon the dupes who placed faith in his statements, we append the following verbatim copies of letters sent by him to several parties, and the answers thereto. The words "general agency" are printed at the head of the letter in blue ink, in order, doubtless, to give his circulars a bona fide appearance. The letters will explain themselves!

"GENERAL AGENCY,
"TORONTO, June 26, 1865.

"James Dickson, Esq.—Sir,—By the death of a relative at Hillsboro, Ireland, you have been left the sum of £180 sterling. You will please remit me the name of an agent or cashier of any bank in Canada whom you may desire to constitute your agent or attorney to receive it. You will please remit me $8 (say eight dollars) to defray lawyers' fees here in preparing the legal documents; upon receipt of which I will send you the papers, with instructions and full particulars.

"Be good enough to inform me of the residence of your brothers, Samuel Dickson and Hugh Dickson, and of your sister Jane Dickson it may be necessary for me to go down. Upon hearing your reply to this letter, I will determine.

"Your obedient servant,
"JAMES CASSELMAN,
"Agent for J. A. Crawford,
"Solicitor, Belfast.

"James Dickson,
"Clayton, Ramsay, C.W."

The following is the reply to the above:

"CLAYTON, June 29, 1865.

"JAMES CASSELMAN,—Sir: I received your letter of the 26th inst., and enclose in return $8 for defraying lawyer's expenses in preparing the legal documents which you wrote to me about. I appoint Mr. Richardson, agent of the Perth Branch of the Montreal Bank, as my agent. My brother, Samuel Dickson, or Mrs. Jane Conney, you will find by addressing Cedar Hill Postoffice, Packenham, C. W. My brother, Hugh Dickson, died a year ago last January, leaving no family.

"Your obedient servant,
"JAMES DICKSON."

Mr. Casselman acknowledged the receipt of the above in the following words:

"GENERAL AGENCY.
"TORONTO, July 3, 1865.

"JAMES DICKSON, Esq.—Sir—I duly received your letter, and will send down the papers properly prepared on Wednesday or Thursday next. In the meantime you will go before the head of the corporation at Packenham, where you formerly resided, and declare before him the documents I herewith transmit.

"Your obedient servant,
"JAS. CASSELMAN."

"P. S.—(Turn over)—You will sign your name under the first declaration of the first cross; the receiver will sign at the second cross, and the town clerk will sign at the third, and he will affix the seal of the township to it in the circular place in which I have written 'seal.' Return the papers to me as soon as executed. J. C."

The postscript refers to an affidavit which the prisoner appeared desirous of obtaining before sending the legal documents, &c., but upon the receipt of it he neglected to forward the "documents," and proceeded to operate upon some other credulous individuals. It is said that his operations in Upper Canada have been very extensive. Several letters having been sent to the police authorities here on the subject. He will be brought before the Police Court this morning for examination.

McNab is a well-known character throughout portions of the province, and has been in hot water before in consequence of his confused notions of moral ethics. When he was arrested the detective made a swoop upon all the papers in his lodgings, and found among them what appeared to him to be strong evidence of his swindling operations. A half-finished letter to a newspaper, which the officer discovered on his table, points to he probability of his being a correspondent of the New York Herald. The tenor of what was written resembled that of several letters which have recently appeared in the columns of that paper from Canada.

AMERICAN NEWS.

A TROOP STEAMER WRECKED.

MUTINY AT MORRIS ISLAND.

FORTRESS MONROE, July 23.—The United States steamer Quinebaug was wrecked on the bar off Morehead city on the 21st inst., and about 30 persons are reported lost or missing. Capt. Jerome was in command of the steamer, which had on board 350 soldiers, the most of whom were landed on shore. The Quinebaug left Morehead city on the morning of the 21st, for Fort Monroe, with 250 soldiers belonging to the 9th Maine, and 76 to Pennsylvania regiments. After passing outside the bar the steamer became unmanageable and went ashore, and is a perfect wreck. From 20 to 30 lives were lost. Names not known, except Lieut. F. Denning, of the 9th Maine, whose body washed ashore and is buried on the beach.

NEW YORK, July 24.—The steamer Zodiac brings Savannah dates to the 20th.

The Savannah Herald's Orangeburg, South Carolina, correspondent says that place is yet mostly lying in ashes. General Hartwell commands the post. The railroad is being rapidly repaired. The laborers are receiving $12 per month. The crops are in fine condition. All the towns of South Carolina are or soon will be occupied by national troops.

The Charleston Courier of the 18th says that the 163 New York volunteers, Darrea's Zouaves, removed to Morris Island for taking part in the disturbance in the city, have exhibited a mutinous spirit since their removal. General Gilmour sent an order demanding the colors of the regiment but the Colonel refused to give them up. He was placed under arrest and the colors demanded of the 2nd officer in command. He, too, refused, but on Gen. Hatch explaining that his conduct would be mutiny while the Colonel's would simply be disobedience of orders he promised to deliver the colors. The delivery was made when it was found that only the staffs and rubber covers had been delivered. It was then determined to disarm the whole regiment. Other troops were brought forward, a gun charged with grape and cannister, was trained upon the mutinous troops, and orders given to fire upon them in case any resistance was offered. The Zouaves, seeing all further opposition was useless, quietly stacked their arms and marched under guard to Fort Sumter, there to expiate their crime.

Another steamer left Savannah for Augusta on the 19th, loaded with head boards and other freight for the national cemetery at Andersonville.

The steamer Liberty brings Havana dates to the 19th and Vera Cruz to the 14th.

The Vera Cruz Reriea says 3 columns under Gens. Mejia, Brincourt, and Jeaninigros were ordered to operate against Negrete, each column taking a separate road. They failed to make their connection as laid out and Negrete, learning their intentions, retreated on the Monclova road, sending one thousand in the direction of Tamaulipas Jeaningros followed closely in pursuit of Negrete, skirmishing with his rear guard, but returned to Saltillo and thence took possession of Monterey, leaving the foreign legion under Saussier at Saltillo. Mejia was still at Matamoras. Two important points on the frontier, Carmargo and Piedras Negras, will soon be occupied and if any filibusters present themselves they will be well received.

Officers, soldiers and munitions of war continue to arrive at Havana from St. Domingo. Health of Havana good.

The United States double ender gunboat "Suarce," arrived at Panama with news from Callao to the 6th.

The rebellion in Peru appears to gain ground. On the 5th a bloody engagement occurred six miles from Lima, between 12,000 rebels and 6,000 government troops, in which the latter were successful, taking prisoners 100 men and 25 officers, besides killed.

A few days previously a mutiny broke out aboard the flagship "Amazons," blockading Arica. The mutineers gained possession of the ship, under the direction of the officer of the deck. The Admiral, Gen. Panizo, was shot in Cabria and afterwards hanged from a yard. The mutineers afterwards deceived the Captain of the "America" on board and captured his vessel. They also captured the "Tumbes," leaving the Government with only two vessels of real service.

From Central America we hear of the capture of ex President Barrose, of Salvador, who left Panama recently in a small vessel, expecting to find the party successful who revolted in his favour in Salvador. On reaching Ton Leca, however, he found his party beaten and dispersed at Launcon, and endeavored to return, but a stroke of lightning happening to shiver the mast of his vessel he was obliged to run into Realgo, where the vessel was confiscated, and all aboard made prisoners. Barrus will probably be handed over to the Salvadorian Government and summarily shot. The schooner is the "Encantora," built, but being bought by naturalized Americans, and having procured papers from the United States Consuls at Panama and Guayaquil, it is claimed PAINFUL AND STRANGE.—A friend writes to us the following incident:—"Coming," he says "to Adamsie on Monday last, I saw an old lonely woman lying on the side of the road dead, and two younger ones standing by her remains. I asked what had been the matter with her. The reply from one of the girls was: 'She perish to dat, sir, but she free, do.'" Alas, for such freedom! The incident affords room for grave reflection, and shows how necessary it is that the sad delusion under which the negro labors in regard to freedom should be dissipated, the sooner the better. He must be made to understand that labor must follow his changed condition, else perish he must. He must learn that the freedom bestowed upon him is not to roam over the country in idleness till, like the old woman referred to, he perish by the way side, but it is freedom to labor and to reap such fruits thereof, as, in equity, he may be entitled to, to support and maintain with food and clothing his wife and his children, or, they doing their part, his mother and his sisters. He is not free to perish in idleness. This is contrary to the divine fiat, and so he must be taught.—Macon Telegraph.

A WHOLE FAMILY POISONED.—On Friday last the whole of the family of Mr. Richard Dell, of this township, were laid prostrate by the effects of arsenate of lead. It appears, that on the day previous some curd cheese had been made and placed in a glazed crock, and in the morning the family ate some at breakfast. About ten o'clock they were all taken ill. Drs. J. Clarke and G. W. Wood were sent for, and under their treatment they were soon out of danger, although for a time their sufferings were most excruciating.—Norfolk Reformer.

A few weeks ago, a young woman, named Robinson drowned herself opposite St. Louis, in full view of a number of people, because she had been disappointed in love by Antonia Funkhauser. Since the sad event, Funkhauser had been very much dejected. On Monday, after dinner with some friends, he crossed the river, and seating himself upon the same log from which his deceived and betrothed had cast herself into the water, took from his pocket her miniature, and holding it with one hand, with the other, deliberately shot himself through the heart with a revolver.

INQUEST.—An inquest was held yesterday at the house of Thomas Foley, Wildred street, by Coroner Patterson, on the body of a child that had suddenly died on Sunday morning. The following is the verdict:—"That Ellen Foley came to her death by spirits of salts being administered to her by her mother, who has been insane for the last two months." The jury were of the opinion that the druggists should be more cautious in dealing out poisonous drugs without a label.—Ottawa Citizen.

Emeretto T. Howe, a young lady of 24, committed suicide by drowning herself in the Chenango canal at Deansville on Monday. She returned home on Sunday from a visit, attended during that day and the next upon an invalid mother, complained of having a nervous headache, went to the canal bank, and tying up some fifteen pounds of stones in her skirts, plunged into the water.

The startling mortality among the attendants of the British Museum, six or seven having been carried off within an interval of a few months, must have the early and earnest attention of the trustees of the institution. The close atmosphere of the museum is declared to be favourable to pulmonary disease, and the employers now breathe it for many long hours, the liberty of leaving the buildings during refreshment time having been recently withdrawn.

A letter from Mexico says that the Imperial Government is considering a plan for the introduction of 100,000 native Africans to colonise and cultivate the Tierre Caliest, but the scheme meets with much opposition.

A GREAT COMFORT IN TRAVELLING.—In travelling about this season of the year, you are liable to colds, coughs, sore throats, hoarseness &c.; now just you put a box of Bryan's Pulmonic Wafers into your pocket, occasionally slip a wafer into your mouth, and observe the elegant and soothing effect. Sold by all Druggists at 25 cents a box.

PRINCE OF WALES.—The Prince of Wales will now, thanks to the skilful and vigilent management of his father, enter into an enjoyment of an income of $251,000 a year, and a half million of ready money from the revenues of the Duchy of Cornwall. This is a nice little sum of money for an annual dividend, but with all that vast amount of money which will be under his control, it will not go so far to relieve rheumatism, pains in the side and back, tooth ache, burns, bruises, frost bites, &c., as a bottle of the 'Canadian Pain Destroyer,' which is sold by all Medicine Dealers, at the low price of 25 cts per bottle.

BALSAM OF WILD CHERRY IN CANADA.

The following testimony from a well known and highly respected Merchant of Prescott, is corroborative of the general approval given to Dr. WISTAR'S BALSAM OF WILD CHERRY:

PRESCOTT, C. W., Dec. 8th, 1860.

Messrs. S. W. Fowle & Co., Boston.

Gentlemen:—

Being solicited by your Travelling Agent, for an expression of opinion of Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry. I with pleasure assert that it is, in my belief, the best remedy before the public for coughs and pulmonary complaints.

Having tested the article with myself and family, in case of severe coughs and colds, for years, with uniform and unexceptionable success, I unhesitatingly recommend it, with full confidence in its merits.

Yours truly,
ALFRED HOOKER.

PIANO-FORTES

DERBY'S NEW PATENT.

ARE THE ONLY INSTRUMENTS constructed on a truly scientific principle. They have greater strength, and will remain longer in tune than any other Piano. The construction is simple and natural, all the extraneous lumber in the body of the instrument as designed with; the sound boards are merely two arched planks of thin wood, like the front and back of a violin; the strings are attached to a strong iron frame, which is separate and entirely independent of the case, thereby dispensing with the old harp form of stringing by substituting straight bridges, preserving at the same time The Over Strung Bass, of which Mr Dawson is the inventor. By these improvements we gain much more vibratory power, at the same time preserving all its purity and richness of tone.

They have received the highest testimonials from the Press, and all the principal artists in the country, among which are:

Harry Sanderson,	L. M. Gottschalk,
Max Maretzek,	S. Thalberg,
Theodore Eisfeld,	Wm. Mason,
Herman Wollenhaupt,	A. Bazili.
Francis H. Brown,	M. Strakosch,
Wm. Henry Fry.	Charles Fradel.

MR. SIGISMUND THALBERG, the great pianist, says:—I have examined your new Piano-fortes and I cordially approve of its system of construction. Its principle, by which great increase of vibratory power is obtained, being very simple and perfectly philosophical. The tone is grand and noble; it has great capacity for sustaining the sound or singing, and its volume of tone or power I have never heard excelled in depth, purity and sympathetic sweetness.

WM. HENRY FRY, late musical critic of the N. Y. Tribune says:—I have examined your newly invented Piano-Forte. They merit all the praise given to them by Messrs. Thalberg, Gottschalk, Strakosch, Mason and others. As regards the structure, they are original and philosophical; in purity, volume, and sustainity of tone; in vocal verisimilitude, that crowning excellence which enables the pianist to "sing" on the instrument. Your Pianos deserve the highest rank. Your invention, in my opinion, is destined to work radical changes in the manufacture of Pianos throughout the world.

From the N. Y. Herald, Sept. 5—Upon a careful examination of Derbys Piano-Forte, we find the results obtained are a very fine singing tone, great purity and brilancy throughout the entire instrument, not often found in Pianos constructed upon the old plan.

The N. Y. Times, July 12, says:—We have now an instrument without an equal. It can sing with a smoothness delicacy, perfectly unattainable on any other instrument; an ordinary player obtains with no exertion, the fullness of a Grand Piano Forte and they must speedily supercede the old styles.

GENTLEMEN:—Having thoroughly examined and tested the Piano-Fortes invented and patented by Mr. S. B. Derby, I am of the opinion that the tone resulting from his improvements, as exhibited in the instruments under examination, in point of richness, depth and brilliancy, equals that of the best Grand Piano-Fortes, and excells them in pure, musical and actual tone, power thus approaching closer to what I consider perfection in the instrument than has yet been achieved by any other system of manufacture.

Yours respectfully,
L. M. GOTTSCHALK.

HOMŒOPATHY.

HOMŒOPATHY AND LIFE ASSURANCE.—The directors of a London life assurance office—the "General Provident"—at its recent meeting have placed on record their opinion "that persons treated by the Homœopathic system enjoy more robust health, are less frequently attacked by disease, and when attacked recover more rapidly than those treated by any other system; that with respect to the more fatal classes of disease the mortality under Homœopathy is small in comparison with that of Allopathy; that there are diseases not curable at all under the latter system, which are perfectly curable under the former; finally, that the medicines prescribed by Homœopathists do not injure the constitution, whereas those employed by Allopaths not unfrequently entail the most serious, and in many instances fatal, consequences." The directors further propose to summon a meeting of the shareholders to lay before them the facts they have collected, and the decision at which they have arrived, namely, "to open a special section for persons treated by the Homœopathic system, at a lower rate of premium than that charged on other lives."—London (Eng.) Observer.—Toronto Globe.

SEWING MACHINE!

COMPANY.

627 BROADWAY, NEW-YORK.

THE BUTTON HOLE made by this entirely simple and novel machine, are not only equal to the best hand-made in the pearl or right side, but greatly surpassing them in beauty on the wrong side, which is formed by a beautiful braid stitch, made by an extra stitch, which no hand made button-hole possesses; thereby imparting to the same a much greater strength, which renders cording or barring altogether unnecessary.

One Needle and Two Threads are only Used.

Unlike other Sewing Machines it manufacture its own Braid and Cord.

The best Merchant Tailors freely admit that its beauty, finish and strength cannot be attained by the most skilful hand.

Simplicity is one of its great merits, therefore not liable to get out of order, and it can be worked with ease by any young lady, who will, after a few days' experience, make from 1,000 to 1,200 perfect button-holes in one day.

This is the only machine produced that will throw a stitch over the edge, so as to bind and cover it in a manner indispensible for Button-holes, Cording and Braiding, each of which can be done with colored, shaded or chine silks, and produce a fabrique of varied colors unexcelled for beauty and taste.

To Ladies at home, Dress, Mantilla and Cloak makers, Shoemakers, Tailors, Hatters, Bookbinders, Saddlers, &c., &c., it is indispensable; it is also admitted to be of great value, to other branches as it Braids, Embroiders, and Cords plain and fancy on all kinds of Cloths, Cassimers, Linen, Velvet Leather, &c., &c.

TRAMP! TRAMP! TRAMP!

(THE PRISONER'S HOPE.)

By the prison cell I sit,
Thinking mother dear, of you,
And our bright and happy home so far away;
And the tears they fill my eyes,
Spite of all that I can do,
Tho' I try to cheer my comrades and be gay.

CHORUS:

Tramp, tramp, tramp, the boys are marching,
Cheer up comrades they will come,
And beneath the starry flag,
We shall breathe the air again,
Of the freeland in our own beloved home.

In the battle front we stood,
When their fiercest charge they made,
And they swept us off a hundred men or more,
But before we reach'd their lines,
They were beaten back dismayed,
And we heard the cry of victory o'er and o'er.

So within the prison cell,
We are waiting for the day,
That shall come to open wide the iron door,
And the hollow eye grows bright,
And the poor heart almost gay,
As we think of seeing home and friends once more.

WHY DON'T HE COME.

Why don't he come—he promised me
He surely would be here;
And Pa and Ma are out to tea—
For once the coast is clear.

I wonder what he wants to say?
When last his leave he took
He asked me twice at home to stay,
I wonder how I look.

Oh, why I'm almost out of breath
Suppose he'd ask, what then?
I'll certainly be scared to death;
I'm so afraid of men.

I think I'll have him at the last,
But first I'll answer no,
For many a girl, by hurrying fast,
Outstrips her tardy beau.

Oh, here he comes, his steps I hear,
And now he'll soon begin;
I would not for the world appear
In haste to let him in.

Court Scene.

A funny scene, and one not altogether in accordance with that chapter of the code regulating the duties of Justices of the Peace, was presented in a Justice's Court not ten miles from Dubuque the other day.

A man was brought before the squire to be tried for assault and battery. Now be it remembered that the said Squire has an ardent love of the crayther, and when his love is indulged to any great extent, he is outspoken, and betrayed the leanings in the trial of a case.

Well, the principal witness for the prosecution was called in the above trial. He proceeded to tell his story. I was going along the street, said he, and I saw the plaintiff standing near the curbstone. The defendant came up to him, looked at him a second, and then struck him a square blow, and knocked him over.

Bully for him! Bully for him! shouted the Justice in evident delight. That's what I like to see, a square blow.

The counsel and spectators were amazed, and sat looking at the delighted Justice like statues; then three or four of them burst into a laugh.

Order in the Court, cried the squire.—This Court must be respected in a proper manner. Proceed with your case, gentlemen.

Well, but your honor, said the counsel for the prosecution. I'd like to know what kind of a proceeding this is. How can we try this case under such circumstances.—Your honor shows—

Order in the Court, roared the squire.—Gentlemen proceed with your case. I 'gad it was a square blow he struck him! he continued, ending the sentence in a hearty laugh.

Of course the prosecution rested here, and well they might. The square blow had settled their bash in that Court. The defence offered their testimony, and the Justice dismissed the case.

The following is perhaps the most laughable incident that has occurred in reference to a locked up jury. It is the case in which a Galway bailiff, having been questioned as to whether he had spoken to the jury during the night, gravely answered, No, my lord; they kept calling out and calling out for me to bring them whiskey, but I always said, Gentlemen of the jury, it's my duty to tell you that I'm sworn not to speak to you.

Why Mr. B——, said a tall youth to a little person who was in company with half a dozen huge men, I protest you are so very small I did not see you before. Very likely, replied the little gentleman, I am like a sixpence among six copper pennies—not easily perceived, but worth the whole of them.

TABLE OF INTEREST.—The dinner table, on which roast beef (juicy and tender—not the sole-leather kind) with the accompanying etceteras of seasonable vegetables and delicious plum pudding, have a prominent place.

The correspondent of an agricultural paper having asked what was the best article to increase the milk of cows, was answered by another (no doubt an experienced milkman) "Good unadulterated spring water."

Men often attempt by the light of reason, to discover the mysteries eternity. They might as well hold up a candle to see the moon.

A philosopher asserts that the reason why ladies' teeth decay sooner than gentlemen's is because of the friction of the tongue and sweetness of the lips.

A MISSOURIAN thus expresses his opinion that his official returns are correct; I hereby certify that the four going A Count is no near Rite as I now make it if there is any mistake it is not Don a purpus.

'Pa,' said a fashionably educated farmer's daughter—'Pa, if I should marry a farmer, what shall I do with my French? 'Call the chickens, Betsy, call the chickens.'

The officiating clergyman, at the marriage of a deaf and dumb couple, wittily and gallantly wished them unspeakable bliss.

Consanguineous Intermarriages the Cause of Deaf-Dumbness.

In my paper on the statistics of the Deaf and Dumb in the Lower Provinces of B. N. America, published as an appendix to last Annual Report, special reference was made to the undoubted fact that deaf-dumbness appears to be more prevalent in the Colonies, and especially in Nova Scotia, than in Great Britain or the United States; and the opinion then expressed as to the chief cause of this disparity has been confirmed by subsequent investigation. The following facts, elicited by special inquiries, and recorded in the registers of the Institution, serve to show that this calamity is, to a striking extent, the immediate result either of hereditary predisposition, or of the intermarriage of blood relations.

Out of one hundred and three deaf mutes, belonging to sixty two families, connected with the Halifax school, since its commencement, thirty-eight are known to be the offspring of parents related in various degrees of consanguinity,—38 others belong to families not so related, while in three cases out of these, deaf-mutes exist in collateral branches of the family; in 2 other cases the offspring are cousins, and there has been deaf and dumb in the family three generations back; in one there was partial deafness in other members of the family; and in one case the child was illegitimate.

In 33 other cases where no definite information has been obtained, further enquiry would probably discover several more as the offspring of first and second cousins, which, with the 38 cases above, would give an average of between 40 and 50 per cent. as the children of cousins! An impressive and melancholy example of the pernicious consequences flowing from such unions, and the solemn warning both to individuals and communities of the inexorable and inevitable retribution with which nature visits the violation of those physical laws on which the welfare of society so largely depends.

Out of the 103 cases above mentioned it also appears that there are 7 cases of 4 mutes in the family 28

5 cases of 4.....15
10 " 3.....20
40 " 2.....40

62 families containing a total of.....103 Deaf-mutes. Being an average of about two to each family!

In 5 out of 22 families, each containing more than 1 deaf child, the parents were related as second cousins; in 7 other families as first cousins.

Similar statistics in other countries exhibit similar results, establishing beyond doubt the intimate connection between consanguineous intermarriages, and a large proportion of the suffering and privation which philanthropy is called on to relieve; pointing out at the same time, the necessity of a Legislative prohibition of such unions, so as to cut off one of the most prolific sources of idiocy, insanity, blindness, deaf and dumbness, and other forms of physical and mental affliction entailed upon an innocent and hapless posterity.

Already, in some of the neighboring States, has this policy been discussed and adopted; and I trust that ere long our Colonial Legislatures will also deal with the question as its interest and importance demand. Meanwhile in the hope of directing attention to the matter, I would present some additional statistical considerations, for comparison with the state of things in Nova Scotia, and in confirmation and illustration of the views now expressed.

The Irish Census Commissioners, for 1861, report as follow:—

"Among the predisposing causes of hereditary disease, the too close consanguinity of parents has long been looked upon as paramount; and consequently an enquiry was made as to its probable effect in producing deaf-dumbness. Returns of this kind must be expected to be deficient; still 170 cases were recorded, in which the parents were related in the degree of second or third cousins. The result of these intermarriages was 109 cases of one in a family deaf and dumb, of which 94 were congenital and 5 acquired, 3 dumb only, and 7 dumb and idiotic.

Thirty-seven cases of congenital, and one of acquired deafness occurred where two of the family were effected, including four out of fifteen cases already specified; of the remainder, 17 instances occurred in which three of the same family, and three where four to the one family were deaf and dumb. In one of the instances six in the one family were deaf and dumb, and in the cases of both, seven and eight deaf and dumb in families, the parents were also nearly related.

In France the births of deaf and dumb children, in marriages within the limits of consanguinity, are in the proportion of 25 to 20 per cent.; in Kentucky, U. S., 20 per cent., and in Illinois 12 per cent.

In England 6 per cent. of such children born are deaf-mutes, which when compared with other countries, shews that the English are careful on this point, and when they marry cousins they are more distant. It would be well if the Colonies displayed the same rational regard to the interests of propriety and humanity.

Popular opinion and scientific induction equally lead to the impression that although one marriage between near relations may be unattended with evil consequences, immediately perceptive, yet it is very rare that the second or third is so innocent.—There usually arises from the children of such unions, a tendency to disorders, functional or organic, of the nervous system, and of the nutritive organs, tending in the former case to unsoundness of mind, and in the latter, to conditions bordering on scrofula or an allied affection."

The following case related by Mr J. B. McGann, of the Deaf and Dumb Institution in Toronto, C. W., is worthy of particular attention:—

"In one family 4 out of 7 brothers married their second cousins, the melancholy result of which is witnessed in 9 cases of deafness 2 of blindness, and one of idiocy in their offspring. Two other brothers of this family did not intermarry cousins, and the pleasing result may be witnessed in a vigorous and healthy offspring of two sons and three daughters, but unfortunately however, there sons married first cousins. In the first case, after the birth of one child, a mutual separation was the lamentable result.

"In the second case, the husband died at an early age, leaving a young widow to tell the sad tale, that 'she and her husband called the same woman grandmother!' The saddest part of the case of this unfortunate family is of too delicate a nature for publication. One of the four brothers to whom reference has been made, as having married a first cousin, had two deaf mute daughters and a son, all of whom grew up in ignorance in consequence of there being no schools for the deaf and dumb in Canada West, and in due course entered into the bonds of matrimony with hearing and speaking partners, and we have heard of one case of deafness among their offspring, consisting of fourteen children. This case did not lose hearing till after the marriage. She has two children, one of whom is idiotic."

Mr. McGann further states that "the heads of their families have with much earnestness of manner, entreated him to raise a warning voice against such unnatural unions."

Of 25 pupils in Mr. McGann's school at Toronto (1863) there were 6 who were the offspring of cousins.

In conclusion I would invite attention to the following statistics for which I am indebted to the artists "Deaf and Dumb" in vol. VI., of Appleton's "New American Cyclopædia."

Statistics of American Asylum at Hartford.—Of 542 cases 95 had either parents, grandparents, uncles, aunts, or cousins, deaf and dumb; 27 more remote relatives deaf and dumb. Of 911 families, 728 had each only 1 deaf and dumb child; 109 had 2; 41 had 3; 18 had 4; 11 had 5; 2 had 6; and 2 had 7.

Statistics of National Institution, Paris.—Of 102 families, 81 had only 1 deaf and dumb child; 9 had 2; 7 had 3; 3 had 4; 1 had five; 1 had 7.

Statistics of Yorkshire Institution at Doncaster, England.—Of 110 families 76 had but 1 deaf and dumb child; 17 had 2; 7 had 3; 2 had 4; 1 had 5.

Statistics of Report of Secretary of State, Ohio.—Of 407 families, 427 had but 1 deaf and dumb child; 49 families had 2 each; 17 had 3; 8 had 4; 2 had 5; 1 had 7; and 1 had 9. Of these 407 families the parents of 47 were known to have been cousins. Of these 47, 30 had 1 deaf and dumb child; 10 had 2; 4 had 3 2 had 4; 1 had 5.

Statistics of Ireland, prepared by Dr. Wylde.—Of 170 families where the parents were known to be first cousins, 109 had 1 deaf and dumb child; 17 had 2; 3 had 4; 1 had 7; and 1 had 8. In 471 cases of deafness was found to be hereditary, of which 249 were cases in which the father, or some relative of his, were deaf dumb; and 222 where the mother or some relative of hers was deaf and dumb.

Illinois Institution.—In twenty years there had been admitted into the Institution 512 pupils, from 447 families—of whom 173 were deaf from birth; 2 families had 4 deaf-mutes; 13 had 3; 34 had 2; in 2 cases the father was deaf and dumb; in two others, both parents were mutes; 28 had 1 brother deaf and dumb; and 19 had 1 sister deaf and dumb, while 4 had 2 sisters and 1 brother, and 3 had 2 brothers and 1 sister deaf and dumb; 2 had 3 deaf-mute sisters; 23 had relatives, other than parents and brothers and sisters, deaf and dumb.

The benevolent principles upon which social science is founded, assume that public beneficence should be exercised with an unsparing hand to throw a flood of light upon the causes which operate to produce these fearful calamities, and thereby enable us to discover the means by which they may be mitigated, and it possible removed: The great aim and end of secular education, is to advance our knowledge of nature in her numerous forms and by an adjustment of her own laws remove the obstacles which impede the progress of civilization, compel her to minister to our wants and subserve the general purposes of our life.

There has, for the last few years past, been a very strong feeling in the community with regard to the marriage of relatives, as the result of investigations upon this subject show, in a most striking manner, the sad consequences of such connections. It is estimated that from 25 to 30 per cent. of deaf-mutes are the children of first cousins—a fearful warning this to those who entertain a notion of forming an union of this kind.

By a close observance of the laws which govern and regulate life and health—a proper universal care of mothers and children, and by a law prohibiting the marriage of cousins, the number of deaf-mutes might be greatly diminished—probably one-half, possibly three-fourths. It is a point which is certainly worthy of the most careful attention, and the evil should be met by a stringent law if it cannot be prevented by milder measures.

* British Quarterly Review, quoted by Mr. McGann.

A PARIS ANECDOTE.—M. Legouve, of the French Academy, tells this story of his body servant in Paris. Some years ago he let it be known to his baker that he wanted a body servant. He received fifty applications a day, none of which suited. One morning while hard at work in his study, it was about five o'clock, in winter, somebody knocked at the door He opened it. I am told that you want a confidential servant, sir? Yes, and you think you are the man I want; you have first-rate recommendations, and lived I dare say, ten years in your last place. No, sir, I am just out of jail. You may imagine the astonishment of M. Legouve. Just out of jail? Yes sir, I lored a woman who required money, she pressed me every day to give her more money. I gave her all I earned honestly—'twas not enough—I thieved to gratify her extravagance. I was arrested, tried, convicted and sent to the penitentiary for three years, which expired last Saturday. Do you think that a recommendation to a place of confidential servant? Yes, sir. A man who loses his character in an hour of folly will be on his guard against temptation, and will strive to regain his reputation. Besides I know that I am at heart an honest man. There was in the fellow's tone such an honest accent, Legouve took him at once, and has never repented it. The released convict has now the keys of the house, pays all the bills and does all the marketing. M. Legouve says his household expenses are 33⅓ per cent less than they were before.

The city authorities of Bangor, Maine, have ordered to be placed at convenient points, on the public streets, large tanks, to be filled daily with pure water, and supplied with ice, for the relief of the thirsty people. They are of sufficient capacity, it is supposed, for a day's consumption. A portion of the expense is borne by one of the citizens.

The greatest instance of red tape on record occurred recently in the British army in India, where the entire clothing of a regiment was returned a distance of two thousand miles, because there was a requisition in it for two "sergeant major's overalls," instead of "two overalls, sergeant major's." In the meantime the regiment was reduced to wearing rags.

A good story is told of a northern merchant who was eating his dinner at the Battle House, at the time of the recent explosion in Mobile. Although badly cut by the flying fragments of the windows, he managed to rush to the telegraph office, and send a message to his partner to "ship nothing but putty and glass." This duty done, he fainted, and has been in brain fever ever since.

A new worm disease is raging among the cattle in Pennsylvania. The worms get on the back of the cattle and eat their way into the flesh. The animals are greatly troubled with the affliction, and roll over the grass as though in great agony. Sometimes, while grazing, they start off suddenly and run wildly over the meadows, as though suffering intensely.

INCREASE IN METHODISTS.—The Christian Guardian says there has been an increase in the membership of the Church during the past year, of more than eight hundred, which, added to other signs of active life and progress apparent, more than compensates for the decrease we noticed in last year's returns.

See what the most popular and widely circulated periodicals say of our Establishment:

From the "Dispatch" of February 26, 1865.

We take pleasure in calling the attention of our readers to the announcement of Messrs. Devaugh & Co.'s Great Sale of Jewelry, Silver Ware, and Fancy Goods, in our advertising columns. We are personally acquainted with the members of this firm and know them to be gentlemen of sterling worth and integrity. Their stock of goods, for variety and extent, we have scarcely seen paralleled.

From the "Mirror of Fashion," March 1, 1865.

Messrs. Devaugh & Co.'s Great Sale of Jewelry, etc., opened on the 15th ult., and we venture to say that no finer display of goods was ever exhibited by any establishment in this city. The ladies thronged their bazaar almost to suffocation, although the streets were rendered nearly impassable by the melted snow and slush. We predict for them a wonderful success.

From the "Ledger," February 28, 1865.

Our lady friends should visit the extensive establishment of Messrs. Devaugh & Co., No. 15 Maiden Lane, if they wish to indulge themselves with a sight which they will long remember. Such a profusion of elegant Watches, Chains, Rings, Earrings, and, in short, of Jewelry of every name, kind and description, we never before witnessed. Their silver and plated ware is superb and almost casts into the shade the other splendid establishments which have long been the boast of our city. It is estimated that their stock is worth not less than one million of dollars.

ARE YOU IN AGONY?

A WELL SPRING OF HOPE FOR ALL!

CAN BE FOUND IN

Holloway's Pills.

Be of Good Cheer! The Sinking may be Saved!

BY THE USE OF

Holloway's Ointment.

THE history of these great Remedies is the most wonderful medical revelation that the world has ever known. It establishes the all important fact that WHEREVER, and in WHATEVER SHAPE internal diseases exists, the disinfecting, searching and healing properties of the Pills are fully equal to its subjection and cure, and that, with the Ointment, they are

The Great Ambassadors of Health to all Mankind.

This is not a history written by one man, or even derived from the experience of one nation. It consists of a compilation of testimonials from the sick of every country—an unimpeachable record, the like of which has never been adduced in favor of any discovery or invention since time began.

These Mighty Healers, World Known and World Tried are a Boon to the Sick

The want of a sterling medicinal to meet the ills and necessities of the suffering portion of humanity, and one entirely free from mineral and other deleterious particles, was severely felt till this all powerful medicine was ushered into the world; HOLLOWAY'S INVALUABLE PILLS have become the HOUSEHOLD REMEDY of all nations Their attribute is to PREVENT as well as to CURE; they attack the ACRID ACRIMONY of the complaint, and thus, by removing the hidden cause of disease, re-invigorate and restore the drooping energies of the system, assisting nature in her task of VITAL and FUNCTIONARY RESTORATION.

Disorders of the Stomach

Are the sources of the deadliest maladies. Their effect is to vitiate all the fluids of the body, and to send a poisoned stream through all the channels of circulation. Now, what is the operation of the Pills? They cleanse the bowels, regulate the liver, bring the relaxed or irritated stomach into a natural condition, and, acting through the secretive organs UPON THE BLOOD itself, change the state of the system from sickness to health, by exercising a simultaneous and wholesome effect upon all its parts and functions.

Woman in all her Difficulties

is invited to test the regulating and restorative powers of this harmless but effective preparation. At the two epochs of life in which the female system undergoes the most important and critical changes, the Pills will prove a positive safeguard against evil consequences. They are also confidently recommended as a specific in every disorder to which females are exclusively a bject.

Be it Understood,

That the above statements can at all times be verified by the written testimony (extending through a quarter of a century) of tens of thousands of unimpeachable witnesses.

Bilious Maladies, &c., &c.

In whatever form disease attacks the liver, it is repelled and exterminated by this searching, painless, and irresistable curative. Bilious remittents, bilious purging, and all the ordinary disorders of the organ, indicated by pain in the right side and between the shoulders, yellowness of the whites of the eyes, weakness and debility, &c., are relieved and removed by the remedy, with a celerity which astonishes the sufferers and their friends. Let the sick whom the faculty have abandoned, resort with confidence to this powerful anti-bilious agent, and a restoration to health and activity will be the unvarying result.

Dyspepsia, Diarrhœa, Weakness, &c. &c.

The terrible bodily and mental pangs which characterise Dyspepsia are at once mitigated by the Pills. Diarrhœa, constipation, headache, physical prostration, nervous tremors, hot flushes, spasms, affections of the kidneys, hemorrhoids or piles, and, in fact, all internal complaints, from whatever cause arising, give way before the salutary influence of this extraordinary remedy. As a specific for dyspepsia, and the disorders connected with it, or growing out of it, the Pills are always to be relied on when every other medicine and mode of treatment has utterly failed.

Holloway's Pills are the best Remedy known for the following diseases:

Asthma, Bowel Complaints, Coughs, Colds, Chest Diseases, Costiveness, Dyspepsia, Diarrhœa, Dropsy, Debility, Fever and Ague, Female Complaints, Headaches, Indigestion, Influenza, Inflamation, Inward Weakness, Liver Complaints, Lowness of Spirits, Piles, Stone and Gravel, Secondary Symptoms, Venral Affections, Worms of all kinds.

CAUTION.

If the readers of this "notice" cannot get a box of Pills or Ointment from the drug store in his place, let him write to me, enclosing the amount, and I will mail a box free of expense. Many dealers will not keep my medicines on hand because they cannot make as much profit as on other persons' make.

None are genuine unless the words "Holloway New York and London," are discernible as a Water Mark in every leaf of the book of directions around each box; the same may be plainly seen by holding the leaf to the light. A handsome reward will be given to any one rendering such information as may lead to the detection of any party or parties counterfeiting the medicines or vending the same knowing them to be spurious.

 Sold at the manufactory of Professor HOLLOWAY, 80 Maiden Lane, New York, and by all respectable Druggists and Dealers in Medicine throughout the United States and the civilised world, in boxes, at 25 cents, 63 cents, and $1 60 each.

☞ There is considerable saving by taking the larger sizes. 33

HOMŒOPATHY.

HOMŒOPATHY AND LIFE ASSURANCE.—The directors of a London life assurance office—the "General Provident"—at its recent meeting have placed on record their opinion "that persons treated by the Homœopathic system enjoy more robust health, are less frequently attacked by disease, and when attacked recover more rapidly than those treated by any other system; that with respect to the more fatal classes of disease the mortality under Homœopathy is small in comparison with that of Allopathy; that there are diseases not curable at all under the latter system, which are perfectly curable under the former; finally, that the medicines prescribed by Homœopathists do not injure the constitution, whereas those employed by Allopathe not unfrequently entail the most serious, and in many instances fatal, consequences." The directors further propose to summon a meeting of the shareholders to lay before them the facts they have collected, and the decision at which they have arrived, namely, "to open a special section for persons treated by the Homœopathic system, at a lower rate of premium than that charged on other lives."—London (Eng.) Observer.—Toronto Globe.

DR. POOLE, (Water st., Peterborough,) is a Graduate and Licentiate of both the Allopathic and Homœopathic Schools, and confidently recommends the latter system of treatment, as by far the safest and most successful, in both Acute and Chronic diseases.

THE DYING CHRISTIAN.

BY JOHN CRAWFORD, A KILMARNOCK WEAVER.

My day is dippin' in the west,
'Tis gloamin' wi' me noo,
I hear the nough o' Jordan's wave,
That I maun travel thro';
But 'tis na' Jordan's wave I fear,
Nor tremble at the strife,
But oh! this sunderin' o' hearts,
This leavin' wean and wife.

What tho' we ken o' better things,
A fairer worl' aboon,
Where lost friens' a' are waitin' us,

An' let us join in prayer to him,
That's wantin' me awa',
That He may be a faithfu' frien',
And faither to ye a'."

He turned his glassen e'en to Heaven,
And raised his withered hand,
Noo safely won through Jordan's wave,
He reached the better lan.'

Miscellaneous.

PANTALOON ENCORE.

BY CHARLES DICKENS.

Ah! great changes have taken place in the world since I last had the pleasure of seeing you sir. Maybe you will remember. It was in the jug and bottle department of Joey's public house—Joey the clown you know—nigh three years ago, though it seems but last week. I dare say it seems a long time; for you are yet young; but with us elderly folks time hurries so, as if he thought we were growing tired of it and wanted to get home. It's a mistake on Time's part, though. Old people are like young people as far as that goes. They have a strong objection to be sent to bed while there is a single companion left to sit up with.

You remember my telling you how Joey and I tossed up, for our line when we first coming to play at the Bower, and how I won pantaloon, worse luck. It did hurt me a bit that night, when I thought of Joey coming home from Hornsey Wood House where he had been pigeon shooting with the swells, to his pheasant supper in that fine parlor of his, while I was sitting down to a bit of cheese and an onion, with missus and the kids behind the shop. Madame Pollonio, too, Joey's wife, in her black satin gown, and gold watch and chain, drawing the beer with those white fingers of hers all over diamonds and pearls! What a contrast, my poor missus in her lindsey-woolsey, toiling and slaving for me and the children, with never a bit of jewelry to show, but the plain ring I put upon her finger the day we were married. I could not help thinking how different we might have been if that penny had turned up-tails, and I had won clown. I would have been in Joey's place, and Joey would have been in mine, though for the matter of that, I didn't wish Joey any harm. They were right, sir in making Fortune out to be a woman. When she takes a thing in her head, she goes the whole hog with it. If she gives you butter to your bread at all, she lays it on thick, sometimes on both sides; but if you are no favorite with her, she won't allow you as much as a scrape.

What set me thinking in this way was the very large family party I had, that evening, to partake of about a quarter of a pound of Dutch cheese—the Dutch have no great talent for cheese, I think sir—and half of a stale half quartern loaf. There were six of them round the table, all my own, with no particular views in life, but with appetites which I would describe as raging. The three eldest were out doing something for themselves; but here were six of the youngest all at home, doing nothing and demanding food at every meal with no consideration for the ridiculous inadequacy of sweetstuff as an article of commerce. I have heard of the philosopher's stone, that turns any kind of rubbish into gold; but it's my opinion that sweet stuff beats all to nothing. Think of turning hardbake, jumbles, and peppermint stick into a joint of meat! It requires a sanguine temperament to see a clean slate as to rent, in Noah's arks and you will allow, I think, there is not much suggestion of credit with the baker in farthing kites. When I took to the business there was nothing in all the stock, considering the times and breech loaders for the volunteers, that looked so unpromising as bows and arrows.

But you never know, sir. Bows and arrows turned out better than sweetstuff. It was what I call a fundamental mistake for a man with a young family to go into the sweetstuff line. The friend who recommended me to it was in it himself, and he couldn't make a do of it though he had neither chick nor child. In winter he did very well, but in summer the flies ate all the profits. But in my case sir what with the flies and the kids, it was a dead loss. I gave up the sweets-stuff department shortly after I saw you last, and substituted the periodicals, and found it to answer better. Now, sir, it had never struck me before, but on this evening that I am alluding to, when I had entertained so large a party to supper, it came across me all at once to question the justice of my being burdened with so large a family, whilst Joey had never a chick. He could afford to keep them, and bring them up to something useful, and I couldn't. I knew very well how his supper party would be conducted.—'There would be Joey at one side of the table and madame at the other, and they'd divide the pheasant between them, and when they had done, give the bones to madame's lapdog on a china plate. And here am I and the missus, with six two legged dogs around us all snarling at the heel of a Dutch cheese! It's unequal, I thought to myself. It is highly necessary, I know that the population should be kept up; but why should so much of that important duty be thrown upon those who can scarcely keep themselves? Children are hostages to Fortune, I've heard say; but it's rather a shabby proceeding to take hostages and make the enemy pay for their keep I said that night, in the bitterness of my heart.

'These children are a curse to us.'

'Oh don't say that Alf,' my wife said, and she looked so hurt that I was sorry immediately. 'Think what it would be to loose one of them!' she said.

'My love,' I said, 'I wouldn't loose one of those dear little wolves for the world.'

'I know you wouldn't, and you won't talk like that again, will you!' said she.

I promised I wouldn't, and went and kissed them all around as they lay in their beds, sleeping with their mouths open like hungry young chaffinches in a nest dreaming of worms.

Our family sir, was a good deal like one of those long tales in the periodicals—rather spun out like. I got tired of it about the sixth number, and thought it might just as well wind up there; but it didn't. It was still 'to be continued,' and somehow, when the new characters were introduced. I got to like them, and so the interest was sustained to the end.

But the problem now was, what to do with them all? What to put them to? My own career in the theatrical profession had not been so brilliant that I should wish to put them to that. No, sir, I wouldn't wish a dog of mine to be a pantaloon, and the clowns position is a prize in that lottery that you must have luck to draw. I know by experience that talent won't do it without luck. So I said to myself, 'I won't let any of them go nigh the theatre; but I'll give them a bit of schooling, and do my best to fit them for business or something of that sort.'

Sam being the eldest boy—he was turned twelve then—I took him in hand first. I had paid expence a week for him at a day school in the neighbourhood, but he had not made the progress I could have wished. He could read and write a little, and that was all. But nothing had been done to bring out his engine like; so I tackled him myself. "What's this boy cut out for?" I said to myself; and being a bit of a phrenologist, I took opportunities whilst he was eating—which was the only time he was still—to study his intellectual development. But it would have puzzled What's his name himself, sir, to make out Sam's intellectual development. He was such a boy for tumbling about and bumping himself all over the head, that you couldn't tell which was the natural bumps or which was the accidental. I think it was casuality sir, that Sam was strongest in. Well sir, I tried him with Arithmetic, with an ultimate view to mensuration and surveying, which I have heard they get a guinea a day at, but he stuck fast at the begining of the multiplication table. Five times I licked him. Give him three times five, and in a few minutes, when he had counted it up on his fingers, he could answer you quite correct; but ask him five times three, and he was all abroad. I soon discovered figures wasn't his line. Then I tried him with geography, in case he should have a genius for navigation and discovering places, like Columbus and Captain Cook, I bought an old map of Europe at a rag and bottle shop, and hung it up for Sam's benefit in the parlor; but though I only paid ninepence for it—on account of Spain and Portugal being mildewed—it was a waste of money I was in hopes that I might be able to rouse Sam's interest by the familiar example dodge; and I tried to make him know Italy by its being like a boot.

But Sam could't see it. Of course, in our days, we wore Wellingtons, and then Italy was like a boot, but now with Balmorals and spring sides, the likeness isn't so striking. After that I tried him with Astronomy, and the use of the globes, and all sorts of things, hammering away at him day after day to no more purpose than if I had been trying to drive a nail through a brick. Sir, I found I had made this mistake that is often made in education. I hadn't sufficiently studied the direction of the lad's talent. I found it out at last quite by accident. You must know sir, there is a beer shop two or three doors from us; and one afternoon, when I was sitting in the shop, I heard a stamping of feet to the tune of a tin whistle, and the people laughing and crying 'Bravo.' I goes to the door, and what do you think is the sight that meets my eyes? Why, Sam dancing an Irish jig on the cellar flap outside the beer shop and a regular crowd around him applauding.

'Come here, my dear, and see this,' I says to my wife; and when she sees Sam performing, she looks at me and I looks at her, and from that moment I knew that I have been making a grand mistake about Sam, and hammering at the wrong end of him.

So I resolved to let Sam's head alone and devote myself to the cultivation of his heels. It's astonishing what a flow of application a boy discovers when you once touch him in the right place. I showed Sam all the first steps, which as you know are the necessary foundation of all good dancing, and he picked them up in no time. I was thinking of him for a harlequin, when my old friend Jimmy Jorum who at that time took the chair at the Polyhantican Music Hall, came in one afternoon and saw Sam dance a jig.

'Jemmy,' I said 'I was thinking of the boy for a harlequin.'

'Harlequin be hanged,' he said, 'you ought to know better, having been in the line yourself and knowing what it is to be out for nine months out of the twelve, unless you have an academy and a connection. You have been out of the world, Alf, since you gave up the profession.'

'Since the profession gave me up, Jemmy,' I said.

'Well it's all the same thing. What I mean is, that since your connection with the stage terminated, you have been out of the theatrical world and don't know what's going on. Why there's a score of music halls sprung up since then, where talent like that your boy possesses is in constant request. It's becoming a better game than the stage, I can tell you. Four turns a night thirty pounds a week if you are tip top, and a brougham to drive you from one hall to the other. Lor' bless you there is many a walking gentleman, who a few years ago couldn't raise two pounds a week at the theatres, who's now getting his ten and fifteen at the music halls, and driving his own trap. You bring that boy of yours down to the Polyhoptican some night and I'll see what can be done for him.'

I took Jemmy at his word, and walked down with Sam one evening before the performance commenced. The proprietor saw him dance and said he would do with a little practice, but thought it would be better if he had a girl with him to make a duet of it.

'Have you a girl to match?' he said.

Had he asked me if I had one shilling to clink against another, I should have been obliged to answer in the negative; but as to girls to match Sam I had plenty, and to spare.

'I have four of them, sir,' I said.

'Very good,' he said. 'If there is one as good as this boy, teach them to do a song and a dance together, and I'll give them a turn.'

I had never thought of Jemima for anything of the sort until this put it in my head; and when I went home and spoke about the matter, the girl was mad for it. Well, sir, I paid a popular author half a crown to write a duet for them, and took a great deal of pains to teach it to them, along with an Irish jig, and Sam and Jemima came out at the Polyhopticon as 'Patrick and Shelah, and Jocular Juveniles of the Green Isle,' and made a tremendous hit. It wasn't long before they got other engagements, and had three turns a night, and it took all my time of an evening to go round with them and look after their wardrobe.

Ah! that wardrobe! what a job it was to get it together! The missus with her clever managing ways, dogged up a very pretty dress for Jemima out of her old bits of finery that were of no use for anything else; but Sam's frieze bob tailed coat and corduroy smalls which fell to my share, were only to be got for money, and I can tell you, the tailor's bill came a good deal heavier than the author's. Sam's dancing shoes I managed myself by nailing two or three bits of hard wood on to the soles of an old pair of na mother's. The bits of wood you know, were to made the klippety klop noise, without which a jig or a break down goes for nothing. Perhaps you wouldn't think it, now, but the old cared in hat without a crown or a brim was a difficulty. I cut off the brim and knocked out the crown of an old one of my own, but the thing was to get it into that limp state which the correct Irish costume requires. If you had seen us all taking turns dancing upon the hat you would have thought us mad. It's easy, I know, to make old port and old pictures; but it's not so easy to give the requisite degree of age to a characteristic Irish hat.

The first week, sir, Sam and Jemima came home with thirty shillings between them. They came straight home with it and never spent a penny, and the first thing they did when they entered the little parlor, was to run up to their mother, put their arms around her neck and kiss her, and pour the money into her lap all in shillings. Providence is kind that way sir, as in many other ways. If he doesn't give a creature much of a head, he makes up for it in heart. Sam is not bright except in his heels, but he is good to his father and mother, and so is Jemima. And that's what stings me when I think of those harsh words that I said to their mother about them when they were born to us. I thought them a curse then, but they are a blessing now. Two of the other girls have grown up and taken to the business, and no doubt, if you are in the habit of visiting the first class music halls, you have noticed the talented Devanni family. These are my curses sir, all turned into blessings, earning good salaries, keeping themselves respectable, and honoring their father and their mother so like Christians, that you wouldn't know the difference though they are only performers at a music hall, and their father is a broken down Pantaloon.

There is no art or science to difficult for industry to attain to. It is the gift of tongues, and makes a man understood and valued in all countries, and by all nations; it is the philosopher's stone which turns all metals, and even stones, into gold, and suffers not want to break into its dwelling; it is the north-west passage, that brings the merchants ships to him as soon as he can desire. In a word, industry conquers all enemies, and makes fortune itself pay contribution.

Annie, said an ardent youth, do you love your mother? Oh, indeed I do, said Annie. Well, then, will you give me a kiss for her sake. And the young woman did.

KISSING IN THE DARK.

One of the prettiest and pleasantest mornings of May, near the close of that delightful month of balmy airs and fragrant flowers, the train for Louisville was freighted with an unusual number of elegant women, and gay, nicely dressed men. As usual, amongst the latter, was a large proportion of Uncle Sam's pets with shoulder straps. There was no longer any apprehension of guerillas or other marauders on the road, and after getting fairly under way the passengers, catching the spirit of the lovely morn, addressed themselves to the task of making time pass off pleasantly.—It was not long ere all who were so disposed were enjoying themselves in some way. On one of the seats in the ladies car was a married lady with a little daughter; opposite, facing them, was another child, a son, and a colored "lady"—we believe they are all 'ladies' now—with the baby. The mother of these children was a beautiful matron, with sparkling eyes, in exuberant health, and vivacious spirits.—Behind her sat a young Lieutenant, dressed to kill, and seeking a victim. He escaped up an acquaintance with the mother by attention to the children. It was not long before he was managing to make himself very agreeable to her, and by the time the sun began to decline, one would have thought they were old familiar friends. The Lieutenant felt that he had made an impression—his elation manifested it. The lady dreaming no wrong, suspecting no evil, was apparently pleased with her casual acquaintance. By and by, the train approached the tunnel at Muldrough's Hill. The gay and festive Lieutenant leaned and whispered something in her ear. It was noticed that she appeared as thunderstruck, and her eyes immediately after flamed with indignation. A moment more and a smile lighted up her features. What changes? That smile, it was not of pleasure, but was sinister. It was unperceived by the Lieutenant. She made him a reply which rejoiced him apparently very much. For the understanding properly of this narrative—this o'er true tale—we must tell the reader what was whispered, and what reply. Whispered the Lieutenant, "I mean to kiss you when we get into the tunnel! Replied the lady, "It will be dark; who will see it?" Into earth's bowels—into the tunnel, ran the cars. Lady and colored nurse quickly changed seats. Gay Lieutenant threw his arms around the lady's waist, raised her from her seat, and fast and furiously implanted kisses on her lips. In a few moments the train neared the end of the tunnel and glided out into broad day light. White lady looked amazed, colored lady bashful, blushing; gay Lieutenant befogged. "Jane," said the white lady, "what have you been doing?" "Nothing," responded colored lady. "Yes, you have," said the white lady, not in an under tone, but in in a voice that attracted the attention of all in the car. "See how your collar is rumpled, and your bonnet is smashed." Jane, poor colored beauty, hung her head a moment, the "observed of all observers," and then turning around to the Lieutenant, replied, "then man hugged and kissed me in the tunnel!" Loud and long was the laugh that followed among the passengers. The white lady enjoyed the joke amazingly. Lieutenant looked like a sheep-stealing dog—left the car, and was seen no more during the trip.

Reward for a Humane Act.

Among the numberless stories floating about the Universities is one, founded on fact, of a man who had the misfortune to save a boy from drowning. A harmless undergraduate was one day taking his 'constitutional' in the direction of the river, when he saw a lad out of his depth struggling violently, and evidently on the point of sinking. In the most thoughtless and inconsiderate manner he plunged in—the river is not very deep—caught hold of the unhappy little wretch, and brought him to shore. That evening he went to bed feeling like a Christian Titus, who had not lost a day. He little knew what was in store for him. The next morning the father called; his gratitude was affecting, but at the close of the interview he expressed a wish—which was gratified—to drink the gentleman's health in a glass of beer at the butterin's. Thenceforward the University man was installed as the friend of the family. The boy saved from drowning was constantly in want of something or other, and it was the obvious duty of the man who, by prolonging his life, had exposed him to such hardships, to supply his needs. The other children had the measels, and the hand which had saved one was, as a matter of course, called upon to help the rest.—An addition was made to the family, and who so proper as the undergraduate to give the wine necessary to recruit the mother's strength in her time of weakness? Till the hour of his departure from the University the well-meaning creature was never free from fresh calls, and at length he registered a vow that if he ever again saw a boy drowning, he would divert his walk into another direction.—Times.

A MODEL GOVERNOR.—Parson Brownlow, the present Governor of Tennessee, delivered a lecture on slavery some eight years ago in New Orleans. To show the radicals in what esteem they were held at that time by their present idol, we make the following extract:—"The Southern portion of the Methodist church was doing more for the temporal and eternal welfare of the negro than all the freedom shriekers out of hell; the pious Abolitionist would enter the church on Sunday, with a face as long as the moral law, descant upon and bewail the miseries and wrongs heaped upon the son of Africa, and on the following day in his picayune grocery or candy store would, if he could, swindle a Louisiana negro out of the pewter ornament on the head of his cane, and do it in the name of the Lord. When I get to heaven, if I find an Abolitionist there, I shall conclude that he practised a fraud upon the door keeper.

History of a School Section.

School section No. 3.—in the Township of P—— advertise for a Teacher, to enter upon his duties January, 1864. Mr. O. had been their teacher for two years and got along for a time pretty well; but Squire Z's son being naturally devoid of brains although considered by the Squire a perfect prodigy of genius; though unseen by everybody but Z. Poor Mr. O. after repeated trials to bring out this hidden talent to pronounced by the Squire to be no Teacher at all. Former G. is of the same opinion also, so is mechanic L, and ploughboy Y. D, has a boy who is constantly in mischief; Mr. O, for punishing the boys' D's displeasure. These with their friends over of poor Mr. O, on every occasion, and the Trustees being influenced by them, give Mr. O, notice to quit. No sooner done it become public that Meeting No. 3, engaged another Teacher at January, then Mr. Q, who has taught a few years, and M, and N, and P, fresh from school, but all of them possessed with a strong desire for wielding the School masters birch sat upon the Trustees. Each of them backed by letters of recommendation, do their best to obtain the School. Q, whose offer is the highest is soon discarded, and the contest is now between the three young gentlemen M, N, and P. N's offer being the lowest, he obtains the situation to enter upon his duties at 1st January.

The 1st of January having arrived, N, proceeds to school, where the young girls are in attendance. He is pleased with the appearance and manners of his pupils, and Bob, Bill and Mary Anne and the rest are also pleased with their "new" master.—After a time N finds that he has got into a situation, but "how" to go about his work he knows not. True he is a good reader, knows something about English Grammar and arithmetic, writes a fair hand, and is intimate with the geography of the four quarters of the globe; true his "Certificate" from the Board states that he has been examined on them branches of school education, &c., but says nothing concerning his knowledge of the methods of teaching;—that is a work that time and practice only can supply. N fails in giving satisfaction to the section. The people become dissatisfied, and the result is the school is again vacant. At the end of the year, another being again advertised for, thus money and time are wasted, blunder succeeding blunder.

Again there is no lack of applicants, R, among a multitude of unclean youngsters obtains the school. He enters upon his duties with an honest determination to promote the welfare of his young charge. He brings experience with the aid of a good scholastic library to aid him; and he and others hope he will be successful. For a time it is all "up hill" work with him; for he finds he has not only to teach, but to correct the errors and blunders of his predecessor, and just at the very time he is getting his school into working order, the cry gets up "he is not doing his duty," the section is dissatisfied, and a new teacher is again loudly called for. N failed because he knew not how to do his work; and R, because the section would not let him.—Indiana and Ohio Review.

The Terra Haute Express says that a German in that city, for the sake of being economical, collected a quantity of beef's blood to paint his house with. After finishing his job in the most approved manner, several cows passed near by, and smelling the blood they set up such a bawling as the poor fellow never heard before. In vain he strove to drive them off by brickbats and rocks. As the bawling increased, the number of cows increased, and at last accounts the poor fellow was still being serenaded in the most terrific manner.

The Lord Chancellor observed the other day at the Royal Academy banquet that the use of portraits was well described by one whom he might call a savage. The Prince Le Boo, when his portrait was taken, was asked whether he understood the object of it. He replied—Oh, yes; me understand it well. This Le Boo die; that Le Boo live. This was a commentary upon portrait painting the most appropriate that could be made.

John was thought to be very stupid. He was sent to the mill one day, and the miller said:—

John, some people say you are a fool. Now tell me what you do know, and what you don't know.

Well, said he, I know that miller's hogs are fat.

Yes, that's quite so; now what don't you know?

I don't know whose corn fats them.

MAKING GAME.—A man was recently brought up by a farmer and accused of stealing ducks. The farmer said he should know them anywhere, and went on to describe their peculiarities. "Why," said the counsel for the prisoner, "they can't be such a rare breed. I have some very like them in my yard." "That's very likely," said the farmer, "these are not the only ducks of the sort I have had stolen lately."

'I feel,' mussed a cobbler, 'that I was weaker and weaker each succeeding day, and that I am fast approaching my end—a few more stitches and all will be over. In heaven there is rest for the sole—earth hath no sorrow that heaven cannot heal.' Having said awl he wished, he easily breathed his last.

QUALITIED ABUSE.—'I wish to know sir, if you called me an ass?' 'Yes, sir but I qualified it.' 'Abe! sir, you qualified it, did you? The better for you, sir; and pray how did you qualify it?' 'I said you were an ass, sir,—all but the ears!'

A Dutchman on seeing one of the posters announcing the coming of the panorama of "Paradise Lost," and reading this line, "A rebellion in Heaven," suddenly exclaimed—"A Rebellion in Heaven! Mein Gott! Dat lasts not long now. Ochie Abe sib tare."

THE CHANGES OF JUSTICE.

The great bulwark of the liberty of a people is established to be the right of being tried, in case of being accused of any serious crime, by a jury of the compeers of the accused—individuals who were of the same locality in which the alleged crime has been committed, and who, it is to be supposed, are more or less cognizant of the parties and matter of the accusation. And as no man ought to be put to death before he is so tried and found guilty, it is necessary for the safety of his and the security of the subject, that those, who are to sit in judgment on those who may be so unfortunate as to be charged with serious misdemeanor, should be qualified to understand the nature and charge of crime, both according to the civil and sacred codes, and be aware of the awful responsibility that rests upon them in sitting on any fellow-citizen, not only that they may deal fairly towards him who is accused, but justly towards the community whose safety and security depend upon the healthy discharge of justice as well as of mercy. It must, however, be acknowledged that there is some reason to fear for the ends of justice being duly answered, when we take a review of some of what may be called aggravated cases of wilful murder, both in this and other countries. The Miss Harris case, lately tried at Washington, lets us see how far popular sympathy may frustrate the ends of law, and prevent a guilty party from suffering the penalty due to the crimes of which they may be accused. Popular sympathy may go, as this case shows, so far as to completely ignore the fact of the crime being proved, and set at naught every concomitant circumstance. Miss Harris, with full intent, destroys her victim. No seduction is proved—no real cause is set forth, while this an abrupt breaking off of company [illegible] of insanity of course was set up, but not established. Under these circumstances, we should have expected a verdict of "guilty" at least. This would not necessitate the execution of the individual. She might be recommended to mercy, which recommendation would always have its due weight. Nothing of the kind, however, is done; she is entirely acquitted of the crime of murder, the verdict being "not guilty." How an intelligent jury could be found to do so, we cannot for the life of us imagine. Yet so it is.

In our own country, not many years since, we have had an instance of the same class; but the scale is turned, it was then a man instead of a woman. The clearest case was proved of murder; a determination to do so having shown to have existed for some weeks. Of course there were strong provocations; but what provocations can justify the taking of the life of any human being, unless when duly tried and found guilty. Yet twelve Canadians were found who rendered a verdict of "not guilty," while the clearest evidence established the fact of the murder of the man, and no doubt with malice afore thought. What can justify such verdicts?

Within a week or two we have had the case of Miss Manson, who shot Kerr, and although it did not prove fatal, it does not affect our reasoning. From the state of public feeling, as generally and freely expressed, we do not think that a jury could be found in the counties where the affair took place that would have found her guilty. Yet had Kerr died would she not have been guilty of murder? Most undoubtedly she would. And that the feeling of the community was in her favour there can be no doubt. We ask then is the public mind under proper ideas of the magnitude of the crime of murder? Do men consider that in allowing the crime to go unpunished they thereby increase the insecurity of the community generally, as well as of themselves in particular.

It may be asked, however, what has led to this state of feeling in favour of criminals directly or indirectly accused or considered guilty of seduction. It is urged, however, that there is very great difficulty in legislating wisely on the matter. This must be admitted. Many instances have been brought to courts when the accuser is as guilty as the accused; and when if justice was done both would undoubtedly suffer the penalty of violated law. Many of these cases are set forth in their worst aspect, designing deceivers and lawyers leaving nothing undone to free the accused. One party does suffer, (under pay circumstance), a severe penalty, very often the other goes free, and it is this that calls for legislation, in order that such may be forced to endure an equal penalty of violated justice. If proper tribunals could be established in which there would be a reasonable guarantee of proper redress, we are persuaded that there [illegible] would follow a very different course of conduct. But when the law will not grant proper redress, the offended seek it by other means. And this the people question from the very fact that parties is called for, and [illegible] be granted, even at the expense of violating both civil and divine law. It is vain to say that popular sympathy is all on one side—the side of the woman; it is found also on the side of the man; and thus it will be until a healthy change is affected in our statutes on the matter.

The Death of the Premier.

It is with extreme regret that we announce the death of the head of the Government, Sir E. P. Taché, which occurred at his residence on the morning of July 31st. Col. Taché was not very long ill; only a few days before his decease he was at Quebec, attending to the business of his high office. At his advanced age, however, it could not be expected that he would hold the reins of Government very long, as he was at the time of his demise in his seventieth year.—It would appear that his health has not been very good ever since he assumed office, as he has been several times forced to go to his home to recruit. His death will involve a new Premier and some change in the Cabinet, and at the present time may cause some uneasiness to the Government. It is to be hoped, however, that his place will be filled by one possessing the confidence of the House and the people, and that the business of the country will suffer no serious delay by his demise. The following we clip from an exchange:

Sir E. T. Taché, who was descended from an old French family, was born in St. Thomas, Canada East, in the year 1795. On the breaking out of the war of 1812 Taché, then a lad of 17, enrolled himself a member of the Lower Canada militia, and marched to the frontier in defence of the country. Entering as an Ensign, he was during the war promoted to a lieutenancy in the Canadian Chasseurs, and in that capacity bore a creditable part in several engagements. On the termination of the war he retired from the military service, and prosecuted the study of medicine, in the practice of which profession he was engaged until 1841 when he was elected a member of the Provincial Parliament. In 1847 he was appointed Deputy Adjutant General, which position he held until March 1848, when he entered the Lafontaine-Baldwin Administration as Commissioner of public works. In 1849 he was transferred to the Receiver Generalship, which he retained until April, 1856, when he was elevated to the Speakership of the Legislative Council (a body of which he had previously been made a member), which position he took on becoming the head of the Taché-McDonald Government. In November, 1858 he received the honor of knighthood from the Queen, he being at that time at Windsor Castle on special invitation. In July, 1860, he was appointed to the honorary rank of Colonel in the British army, and at the same time was made an aid-de-camp to the Queen, in which capacity he, together with Sir Allan McNab, upon whom like honours had been conferred, attended the Prince of Wales in his progress through Canada. From this time he remained in comparative retirement, until last year, when the exigencies of the political situation, that, much against his will, he was forced by the appeals of his friends to again enter actively into political life. He was called on to form an Administration, and with the assistance of the Hon. Mr. Campbell succeeded in bringing into existence the Cabinet which, with more changes, continues to rule as yet, and by which the gravest matters that have ever disturbed Canadian politics, have been dealt with. But the burden proved too great for him, and in the midst of his anxious labors he has been called away. He died in the harness working to the very last on behalf of the country which, while yet in his teens, he went forth, like a brave man as he was, to defend.

Farewell Concert.—Mr. T. Brown, long and favorably known here, and one who has often contributed much to the amusement and pleasure of the people of the Town, announces a farewell Concert to take place on Friday, to-morrow evening, in the Victoria Hall. No trouble is being spared to render the evening's entertainment everything that could be desired. We trust that a full house will prove the unmistakable esteem for Mr. B., and the high appreciation of his many past efforts and labors for our recreation and pleasure. See advertisemen in another column.

Oil at Lakefield.—The oil mania has extended to Lakefield denizens, and there, according to report, the genuine article has been discovered, issuing from the crevices of a rock in the neighborhood, where they have been quarrying stones for a new building.—From reports in circulation we understand that some of the crude fluid has been submitted to the test of burning, and has been consumed (?) We hope our good friends will realise it in paying quantities.

Steamer Rochester.—In consequence of the accident to the Christhian, the favorite steamer Rochester assumed the place of the Christhian on Monday last, and is now running regularly, leaving Port Hope every morning at 9½ o'clock.

Steamer Burned.—The steamer Norelly, owned by M. Boyd, Esq., Robcaygeon, was burned on Tuesday morning last. She was used as a tug on the Lock lakes, and was lying at the head of the canal at the time. The fire is supposed to have originated from the cooking stove.

Ashburnham School.

The semi-annual examination of this school took place, according to announcement, on Friday last. There were a number of parents and visitors present, among whom we noticed the Rev. Mr. Beck, Local Superintendent of the village, Dr. Poole, Local Superintendent of schools for Douro, and several members of the Board of Trustees. The school, which has been under the care of Mr. Stratton, assisted by Miss Dowling, appears to be in a very healthy state.—There was a large attendance of pupils present, although for various causes several had not come on that day. In the forenoon the Junior classes and reading were heard. The small children doing very well for their ages, and showing care and labour in training. The reading classes, especially the fourth and fifth classes, read with ease any place opened at random, and the exercise in spelling embraced not only the lessons read, but various places as they presented themselves to the teacher. About 12 o'clock R. D. Ewing, Esq., came and took a photograph of the school and those present, which will no doubt be a very interesting group.

The Grammar, Geography and Arithmetic were heard in the afternoon in the presence of J. King, Esq., M. A., Principal of the Grammar and Union School, Peterborough, who took a very warm interest in the whole, and appears to be quite at home among children. The exercises were brought to a close about five o'clock, when Mr. King, in a few remarks, spoke in the very highest terms of the manner of training the pupils had received in those classes he had heard, declaring that he had not seen any children of their age come up to them in the clear answers given in Geography, the intelligent manner they had analyzed and parsed the grammatical exercises, and most pointedly remarking that he knew there were not the equals of the senior class in Arithmetic in any place within his knowledge. Mr. King also remarked that the mental training was excellent, and shewed care and aptitude on the part of the teachers, as otherwise the children would not have arrived at their present status, and concluded the highest encomiums on the teacher and school by requesting the members of the Board present to be careful as to whom they would chose to fill the situation Mr. Stratton was now resigning. Mr. Stratton then in a few remarks referred to his giving up the charge of the school, said he would ever take an interest in the progress of the pupils, and also referred to and applauded the energy and ability of Miss Dowling, the female teacher. After which prizes were given to the most successful in the different branches.

THOSE WHO RECEIVED PRIZES:

Miss Frances A. Stratton, 1st; Miss Mary Malone, 2nd; and Miss Margaret Ingram 3rd; for general advancement in reading grammar, writing and arithmetic; and Master A. B. McDonald, for general advancement.

Fifth Class.—Miss Margaret Johnston, 1st; Miss Susan Morgan, 2nd; and Miss Janet McDonald, 3rd.

Fourth Class.—Master W. H. Thompson, James Johnston and James R. Stratton, for reading, and arithmetic as far as compound proportion.

Third Class.—Miss Mary Jane Chrow, 1st; Miss C. Cook, 2nd; and Miss Eliza J. Chrow, 3rd.

Sequel.—William Johnston, 1st; Wm. Chrow, 2nd.

Junior Classes.—For progress in writing: Wm. Swanston, 1st; Maggie Malone, 2nd; Wm. Morgan, 3rd. For progress in arithmetic: F. Adams, 1st; James Swanston, 2nd: Sophia Hefner, 3d.

There were also several special prizes given on recommendation of the Teachers, for good conduct, attendance, &c.

Yesterday the annual pic-nic in connexion with the school came off. There were above 100 children present, and a large number of parents and others. After the tea was served, Robert D. Rogers, Esq., Secretary of the Board of Trustees, and on behalf of the children, presented Mr. Stratton with a beautiful inkstand. In doing so Mr. Rogers remarked that he had been deputed to present it as a mark of the esteem of the pupils and their appreciation of Mr. Stratton's labours among and over them during the period of three years and a half, now brought to a close by his (Mr. S.'s) resignation; and concluded by conveying the best wishes of the pupils for him in his future career.

To which Mr. Stratton replied that he thankfully and unexpectedly received the beautiful present, especially as a mark of their esteem and good will. Thanking them for the kindness thus manifested, he remarked that he received and would retain it, as a grateful memento of their good will towards him. Mr. Stratton also stated that he would ever feel a lively interest in their well being and progress; he hoped they would be happy in life, but doubly happy in the end of their career, which was now only commencing.

Board of School Trustees.

The Board of School Trustees for the town met on Tuesday night. There were 8 members present.

A communication was received from Mr. Dumble, Local Superintendent, resigning said office for certain reasons understood but modestly not set forth in his letter.

The report of the standing Committee on Appointments was then read, and on motion the Committee were requested to examine into any further applications until the next meeting of the Board.

Mr. Dumble's resignation was accepted, and the Board expressed regret that anything should have arisen to offend Mr. Dumble, and also expressed their respect for and confidence in him.

An estimate of the amount required by the Council for the year was made, amounting to $2,387 nearly.

It was also recommended that 29 free pupils be admitted.

A committee was appointed to report on salaries at next meeting.

The chairman was directed to take the necessary steps to have a Trustee elected in the room of J. R. Walton, absconded.

A Report of the Principal in reference to the Mid-summer Examination of the School will be given next week.

Fire Alarm.—Alarm being given on Tuesday evening about 9 o'clock, the firemen were at once on the road and proceeded to the scene, when, lo! and behold you, it was a bunch of shavings set on fire by a few boys; better that than if worse.

Militia.—From Militia Orders No. 1, in the Gazette of the 28th ultimo, it is decreed "that Volunteer corps may proceed with their Annual Drill at any time that may be most convenient for them."

SIGHTS AFOOT.

After leaving Toronto, I proceeded by the Great Western Railway to Hamilton, where a connection is made at 9 a. m, with the train from "the bridge" for Detroit. The only object of interest to the traveller is perhaps the noted Desjardines Canal Bridge. A person will naturally feel anxious to see the place where only a few years ago, situated as we were then, a train of cars, proceeding at its usual rate, (the passengers unconscious of their impending doom) approaches the margin of the precipice, dashes headlong into the dreadful abyss, depriving the country of so many valuable lives, and what was still worse, changing the homes of once happy families into sorrow and mourning and distress, for dearly beloved relatives and friends. As a precautionary step, the trains now in approaching the bridge, whether from the east or west, stop and make a thorough examination, and see that all is right. On the top of the mountain, before arriving at the station, stands "Dundurn Castle," the residence of the late Sir Allan McNabb, one whose name will be recorded in the pages of Canadian History, and handed down to posterity as the erudite statesman, the noble and gallant soldier, and the polished gentleman, one who participated to a great extent in the affairs of this country for nearly half a century.

The scenery between Hamilton and Dundas, (the first station after leaving) is magnificently grand. It is often said that Nature smiles; but here it may be said emphatically to grin, in some places. It would be impossible for me to give a description of it, and only can be appreciated by passing through and over it. The Railway is built on the slope of the mountain: as the train dashes along with lightning speed, you look out and behold, with a certain degree of terror, on your right the mountain towering to the heavens, in some places to an immense height, on your left the valley at about an equal distance below, with its languid and sluggish stream, indifferent to the obstructions which interrupt its course. Sometimes you would not be drawing too much on your imagination to conceive the possibility of being suspended in mid-air and borne by wings to your destination. In this quiet valley is situated the pretty town of Dundas, surrounded by an undulating but good agricultural country, and noted principally for its manufactures. We pass such flourishing towns as Paris, London, Woodstock, Chatham, &c., besides a good many of less pretentions, still occupying prominent places in the list of towns and villages. At Paris I noticed the foundation and smouldering remains of the station house destroyed a few evenings before, containing a good many goods and other valuable property. After passing Chatham you get into the prairie country. A more beautiful tract of country I never saw. It looks much like the prairies in the southern part of Illinois, but is more level and picturesque. As far as the eye can reach is one level plain, without a stone to be seen, and scarcely a tree. And the worst of all, thousands of acres in a barren waste common, used only as a grazing ground for the cattle in the neighborhood. After passing this we come to the long marsh, which is also without tree or shrub, and extends about ten miles. Shortly after entering this miasmatic region we tap Lake Erie and follow the shore for a considerable distance. From Hamilton to Windsor the trip is very enticing on account of the changeableness of the scenery. The road is very smooth—all of which tends to lessen the tediousness of railway travelling.

The crops between Toronto and Windsor do not appear as good as in your locality. They have felt the want of rain in many places, while in others they have been troubled with too much of it. We had a continuation of rain showers from 9 a. m. to 4 p. m.

We arrived at Windsor at 5 p. m, where the large ferry-boat belonging to the road was waiting to give us safe conduct to the land of "Uncle Sam." A specimen of the "wooden nutmeg" Yankee—I mean a green mountineer, a cadiverous, pale, lean, lanky, six and-a-half-foster—happened to turn up on board. He appeared much overjoyed to think he had got safe out of Her Majesty's dominions, and dilated to a "big" extent on the greatness and freedom of his country, and the glory and beauty of his flag. He took especial pains to inform me of all this, and wished to impress on my mind the desirability of "you" Canadians coming into Sam's arms, and wrapping ourselves up in the ample and protecting folds of such a beautiful piece of bunting. Fearing there might be some trouble were I to utter sen iments not exactly to the liking of such a sensitive people, and the old adage recurring to my mind that "discretion is the better part of valour," I answered him in as polite a manner as possible, that Uncle Sam might be a very nice man and all that, also that the cloth from which the flag was made might be a good article, (would not dispute it) and there was no denying the fact that the painting was decidedly pretty—something that would attract the attention of children, being very starry—but still, it only waved over 20 millions, and was only 80 years old; while on that pole (pointing to the Canada shore) hangs a flag unfurled to the breeze for over a thousand years, and controls the destinies of over 250 millions of people, who are delighted with it, and do not feel disposed to sell it or exchange their nationality at present. As soon as we are ready, "we will write to you," and then accept your advice. I bid him good afternoon; he turned on his heel, and I heard him trying to articulate such words as "d—m fool," "go to h—l." When I last saw him he was making a bee line up some avenue for the Soldiers' Home, where I believe he had a couple of "returns," relatives of his, who had been in two or three skirmishes, they were respectively 17 and 18 years old.

Detroit, July 26th, 1865. L.

Lord Monck Going to England.

THE APPROACHING SESSION.

THE CLERGY RESERVE FUND.

Quebec, July 26, 1865.

It is understood that Lord Monck will leave for England, on a visit, immediately after the close of the Session. An effort will probably be made to bring the Session to a close as speedily as possible, to enable the Governor General to start at the earliest possible moment. The Session it is anticipated will not last much more than a month; if it be extended to five weeks, that will be the outside.

A dull Session is anticipated; and it is believed that scarcely anything will be done. If it were not for the desirability of keeping the promise Ministers made to the Legislature to hold a summer Session, there would have been no Session till winter. There will be some talk about Reciprocity, which cannot possibly amount to anything; the delegates will make their report, but of all the ambitious measures before the country, it is believed that not one will be advanced. Fortifications, Canal enlargements, North-western territory purchase, Confederation, and Reciprocity are all questions which are likely to be allowed to wait, some on one thing, some on others; one on the Maritime Provinces, another on the re-establishment of the Provincial finances, and so on.

Great complaints are being made of the withholding of the payment of the Clergy Reserves monies due to the municipalities, for an unprecedented period.—Leader's Correspondence.

Confederation Pretty Sure to Come.

The firm tone of despatches from the Imperial Government on the subject of Confederation of the Provinces, and the allusion to the subject in the Speech from the Throne, together with other indications, make it more than probable that this scheme will yet be successful. We are told that a very great change is apparent in public sentiment in New Brunswick in reference to this subject, and that, in the event of a new election, or even without so direct an appeal to the people, the probabilities of a majority in favour of the measure grow stronger every day.

Lieutenant-Governor Gordon, who, it was understood, was not very favourable to the scheme, who had been ordered to Hong-Kong, it was supposed to replace him with one less opposed to the project, has asked to remain, and is about to take to himself a wife from among the New Brunswickers. This indicates that the firmness of the Imperial policy is having its effect, and, we have no doubt, will greatly aid the revulsion of public opinion in a similar direction.

The proposition now before our Boards of Trade, to entertain hospitality the leading commercial men of the Provinces, in return for similar courtesies on their part last year, cannot fail, also, to have a beneficial influence: and we trust that definite and liberal arrangements will be consummated to this end without delay. Nothing would more effectually contribute to the removal of opposition to Confederation.—Trade Review.

From Montreal.—About 10 o'clock last night, a young man and a female were walking near the Hotel Dieu, when three ruffians came up and assailed the former with clubs, inflicting severe wounds on the head and legs. They robbed him of his watch and escaped. A man fell from a third storey of a house in St. Paul street. No bones were broken, although he was badly bruised. When the steamer Magnet was leaving Murray Bay, a large number of Americans being on board, the British and American flags were hoisted. The latter being raised first created some hissing.—Archibald Campbell, of Quebec, sprung on board, ran up the mast, and cut down the American flag. The boat having started, he jumped in the river and swam ashore. The excitement among the passengers, particularly the Americans, was intense.—Judge Morin, aged 63 years, and the Hon. De Beaujeau are dead. Col. Taché is not much improved. Hon. John A. Macdonald is in the city. The French at the Military School complain of being treated as inferiors. The new Richelieu Company's steamer, Quebec, built at Sorel, is nearly ready. She is 280 feet long and 66 feet wide, and has 150 state rooms. The weather continues very warm.—Globe's Correspondence of July 28.

Latest from Montreal.—Five men of the 30th regiment were discovered to-day in a large box in a waggon which was destined for the frontier. Four of them were captured. The flour market is improving. $4.90 was paid down to-day for 1,000 barrels of superfine from Western wheat. Great preparations are being made for the Lower Canada Provincial Exhibition, which is to be held here in the last week of September. Mr. Pell, on behalf of the Exhibition Committee, has visited all the manufacturers in the Provinces, and the greater number of them have promised to exhibit. About $12,000 are offered in prizes. A Horticultural show will take place at the same time.—Globe.

Arrest of John Mitchell.

From the Dublin Nation, July 1.

John Mitchell has been arrested by the government and flung into a dungeon, awaiting trial for high treason. We are recording the events of 1865, not the events of 1848. We are recording the acts of the American, not of the English Government; for America has progressed far of late days in copying "the mother country," and can now proudly boast of a "national debt," and brag about putting down "rebellion" a l'Anglaise.

John Mitchell must stand in the dock once more to brave a courageous "rebel's fate." The country that with wild raptures of welcome hailed and glorified him eleven years ago as a "rebel," now consigns him to a dungeon for being a "rebel." The streets that witnessed his triumphal entry eleven years ago, have seen him dragged to a prison for the same virtue, or crime—whichever the Americans now may call it. The jailor general this time is not Lord Clarendon; his name is Andrew Johnson. How England and Russia must chuckle at all this!

Copying "the mother country," America has been an enthusiastic sympathizer with "rebels" and "rebellions"—everywhere but within her own dominions. Like "the mother country," America largely admired "rebellion" against neighbours, but not against herself. England worshipped Kossuth and murdered Lord Edward; glorified Garibaldi and manacled O'Brien; was virtuously indignant with the King of Naples for disembowling the assassin who sought his life, while she herself blew from the guns the Indian "rebels" who rose against the regime of the Kittee! So America, also, could welcome Kossuth, but can slowly murder Davis Mitchel, the "rebel" against somebody else, is worthy of welcome; but Mitchell, the "rebel" against "us"—ah, that is quite another business; let him taste a "rebel's" doom! If this be the "glory" and "triumph" of America, we should like to know what would be her shame and humiliation, unless, indeed, it be the terrible reproach of neglecting to discinter and hang in chains the skeletons of those wicked "rebels" whose example Mr. Mitchell has followed: George Washington and Benjamin Franklin! America the jailor of John Mitchell! What next from that "land of the free?" "The Star Spangled Banner" is being rapidly reconstructed on the model of the Union Jack.

THE MURDER AT HIBBERT.

One of the most atrocious murders was committed in this township last Tuesday morning that ever disgraced the annals of crime. The murderer is an old man, named Edward Purcell, residing on lot 23, 2nd con., and his victim a young man, his own nephew, named Michael Purcell, formerly of Silver Creek, township of Tuckersmith. It appears Edward Purcell had, some time ago, rented his farm to Michael Purcell, the deceased, reserving a small patch which was in hay. Early on the morning in question the deceased entered the old man's house, (on the same lot,) while he was still in bed, and accused him of cutting his (the young man's) hay. This the old man stoutly denied, and after further angry altercation the old man raised a pistol which he had by him, and deliberately shot the man dead. After acquainting his neighbors of what he had done he proceeded to Carronbrook and acknowledged his fearful crime before Joseph Kidd, Esq., J. P. He seemed to reflect on the enormity of his offence and manifested signs of penitence.—Intelligence having been conveyed to Dr. Hornbrook, Mitchell, one of the Coroners for the County, that gentleman proceeded to Carronbrook and opened an inquest the same evening in the Railway Hotel (Felix Gallagher's) a post mortem examination having been made by Dr. Shaver, Stratford, and Dr. Bowie, Mitchell.

The prisoner expressed a desire to communicate something about the sad catastrophe, and on being cautioned by the Coroner made the following statement. The deceased, Michael Purcell, pushed in my door this morning (Tuesday,) and asked me why I cut his hay. I said I did not cut his, but I cut my own. He said I would never cut any more, and was coming towards the bed, when I told him to keep back or I would hurt him. He kept advancing; so I drew the pistol, intending to shoot him in the arm, but it went into his body. He stood still five or six seconds after being shot, and then fell down and died. I did not keep the pistol loaded to shoot deceased. I used to shoot rats with it occasionally. I had no ill-feelings towards deceased so long as he kept away from me. Never told any person I would do him any injury.

The Jury, having been locked up till about two o'clock on Thursday morning, then returned with a verdict of wilful murder against Edward Purcell, who was sent to Stratford to await his trial at the Assizes.—Stratford Beacon.

Extraordinary Casualities in Russia—Fires, Murders, Suicides, Drownings, Accidents and Robberies.

Fires continue to prevail in various parts of Russia. The Russian Correspondent of St. Petersburg says:

"A conflagration has destroyed 108 houses in Gorodok, in the government of Witna. Nearly all of them belonged to Jews. Two children perished in the flames. Three days after another fire broke out in the Jewish quarter at Grodno, and destroyed 32 houses. A considerable fire has also taken place in Borisoff, in the government of Mobilew. The church, the synagogue, 205 houses and 135 shops became the prey of the flames. The government uses all its efforts to prevent these disasters. A sum of 5,020 roubles has been granted by the Governor General of the western provinces for the purchase of fire-engines. Hereforth every district town will possess one, constructed according to the French system: a hand-pump, hatchet, ladders, &c. It remains now for the inhabitants to organize the service properly."

As appears from last year's returns, there occurred in European Russia (a term in which the capitals of Moscow and St. Petersburg, as well as the two separate dependencies of Poland and Finland are not included) no less than 746 fires in towns, and 4,005 fires in villages within the four months from May to August. The damage in the towns was estimated at 2,813,507 roubles; in the villages at 9,202,216 roubles. Large as these figures are, they must be small in comparison with the damage of the current year.

Within the same period, 260 murders and 542 suicides were reported to the authorities. 137 people were killed in affrays, 408 were killed by horses or carts and trees falling upon them and crushing them to death, 81 by engines and machines, 421 by lightening, 107 died in consequence of injuries received from fire, or were suffocated by gas inhaled from stores, 470 succumbed to delirium tremens, 4,084 were drowned, and there were 472 cases of accidental death, and 2,316 cases of sudden death not coming under any of the above categories. 1,922 human corpses were found in the fields and public thoroughfares, of which 144 bore the marks of a violent death. In strange contrast to these terrible figures, no more than 131 robberies are recorded.

Colonial Governors.—There is a great movement among the Colonial Governors of British America. Lieutenant-Governor Gordon of New Brunswick is recalled; Lieutenant Governor Dundas goes from Prince Edward Island to England, but whether for good or not he himself hardly seems to know; Lord Monck, Governor-General of Canada, is to pay a visit to England immediately after the coming Session. It is well enough known that Governor Gordon's recall is owing to his having opposed the Imperial policy of Confederation; and it may be taken for granted that Governor Dundas is required in England to explain the line of conduct he has pursued on the same subject. Lord Monck will, of course, further Confederation by every legitimate means in his power. The Imperial Government is giving evidence of its determination to use the influences at its command in favour of the projected union, and to prevent its agents secretly thwarting the policy it desires to carry out.

The Richmond Elections.—A Philadelphia paper has a despatch to the effect that General Terry has issued an order declaring the recent elections in that city null and void, and prohibiting the candidates elected from exercising their functions. The Richmond papers, however make no mention of the suppression, and expressly state that the matter had been under the consideration of General Pierpont, who told the members of the council that they could organize as soon as they pleased, and instal the new Mayor.

The Accident to the Corinthian.

NARROW ESCAPE OF THE PASSENGERS.

The Kingston papers have some particulars, in addition to those already published, concerning the accident to the steamer Corinthian, which was brought into that port on Thursday morning by the tug Wales. The News says:—

"The accident happened in mid-lake while on the way to Clarence harbor from Port Hope, on Tuesday afternoon, about 4 o'clock by the breaking of the under strap of the walking beam attached to the rocking shaft. The beam, which is of skeleton form, is formed of an iron casting, with wrought iron straps enclosing it of about four inches square. The break arose from having set the welding of the iron, the fracture showing that less than an inch of the outer perpendicular edges on either side were joined, and the wonder of all who have looked at it is that it did not occur on her trial trip some six weeks ago. The strap, we learn, was imported from England in its complete state, and the fault therefore lies with the English workmen who did the work; but the imperfection was so well concealed as to stand a strict scrutiny, and which the accident alone has revealed. It is a most happy circumstance of an unlucky accident that the flaw was beneath, while the piston was ascending in the cylinder: had it been above, in all human probability the boat and its freight of precious lives would have been engulfed in the waters of Ontario, by the breaking through of the bottom of the boat. The result of the accident has been the breaking of the cylinder-head and cross-head, and the destruction of a portion of the deck by the descending part of the beam, which is still attached to the shaft. Captain Chrysler, immediately after the occurrence, sent off a boat, which succeeded in reaching Colborne, and Mr. C. Gildersleeve, the owner of the Corinthian in this city, was telegraphed to for assistance, and the tug Wales immediately despatched.

The Corinthian meantime was drifting at the mercy of the gale which sprung up after the accident; and was in danger of drifting ashore at Wellington beach, which is a very insecure anchorage but fortunately her anchors held her till the arrival of the tug. To make assurance doubly sure, Mr. Gildersleeve chartered the William yesterday to search for the Corinthian on the south side of the lake, in case she should have drifted thither. The passengers were landed here this morning to go on to their destination by the American boat to-day. Previously to separating they passed the resolutions which will be found below. The repairs to the Corinthian will require at least six weeks to complete; meantime it is expected the Banshee will be got to supply the route which the Corinthian's mishap has left unprovided."

"At a meeting of passengers held on board the steamer Corinthian on Wednesday evening, 20th July, the following resolutions were unanimously passed:—

"1st. We desire unitedly to recognize the Providential care of Almighty God in the fact that the serious accident which yesterday befell this steamer has been unattended with personal injury to any on board, or with loss of life.

"2d. Whilst regretting the loss which this accident occasions to the owners, and also to the travelling public, in the withdrawal for a time of this fine steamer from a navigation of Lake Ontario, we feel called upon to express our high sense of the uniform courtesy and general qualities as commander evinced by Captain Chrysler in the discharge of the onerous duties which this accident entailed upon him, together with a drift of twenty-four hours with a helpless vessel in a high sea.

"3d. To the officers and crew generally the best thanks of the passengers are tendered for the attention paid by them to the safety of the vessel and cordial kindness to all; and as the Corinthian has proved herself to be to-day a first-rate steamboat, we hope a long course of prosperity is before her.

"4th. That a copy of these resolutions, signed by the passengers, be handed to Captain Chrysler."

These resolutions are signed by nearly forty passengers.—Leader.

The Glasgow Poisoning Case.

CONFESSION OF DR. PRITCHARD.

HE ADMITS OF POISONING HIS WIFE.

HIS CONDUCT AFTER CONDEMNATION.

The North British Mail reports Dr. Pritchard's confession, which was made on Tuesday afternoon:—

The first symptoms of an inclination to relieve his heart of the terrible truth were shown during a visit paid to him on Monday evening by his brother, Mr. Pritchard of Plymouth, his sister, a married lady living in Dublin, and his eldest daughter, Miss Queen Victoria's Appearance.

Of late years, especially since the sad loss of her husband, Queen Victoria has undergone a great change, both in mind and body. She never was possessed of great beauty, and the charms of her presence always arose more from the natural expression of an amiable disposition, than from any regularity of feature or grace of manner. She never was endowed with the irresistible fascinations of the Queen of Scots nor with the imperious airs of Elizabeth which extorted a reverence that could not be refused. Her eyes are blue and bright her hair dark, and her complexion is now somewhat sallow. It is marked by deep lines of affliction, and yet these do not make her expression less attractive. It has been well observed, that sickness and sorrow refine most countenances, and here is another illustration of the truth of this saying. In the approaches of age she has gained that which may be called the beauty of goodness. It is undoubtedly true that old age, provided that it be found in this way of righteousness, gives to the features a beauty not their own.

If the motions of the mind be good, the lines of the face will become more and more beautiful as time wears on, and the sermons she writes, of color, delicacy, and the regularity of feature fade. This is certainly apparent in the face of Queen Victoria at present.

In stature she is rather inferior to the average height, and looks far more majestic when seated than standing; and yet where ever and whenever she is seen, she always bears the obvious mark of a noble lady. No one could meet her under any circumstances without perceiving at once that she is high-bred, and accustomed to command. She cares little for dress; and at Balmoral, Osborne, or any of her palaces where she is in the bosom of her family, she wears plain, unpretending garments, such as some at least of our fair country-women would not allow themselves to be seen in at any time. She dislikes pomp and display, and does not often appear in public; never, except when some great State occasion seems to demand it.—Among all the Americans who have visited Europe very few have seen Queen Victoria, while nearly every traveller has looked upon Louis Napoleon and Eugenie, who are frequently seen driving about Paris with the greatest freedom. In consequence of this reserve, the spectacle is much more imposing and attractive when she does appear.

She is an extremely good horsewoman and manages her steed with great address and fearlessness. At the encampment at Colcham, a few years ago, she appeared on horseback, and was, of course, the admirer of all beholders, as she rode on the field on her dark bay Tempier. She wore a long dark green robe, of some thick, rich material, a closely fitting jacket, with but few ornaments, and a low dark hat, with a long black ostrich feather. In her hand she carried an elegant riding whip, with a handle of gold, and a carbuncle set in the top of it. She rode along the lines with grace, and really, for the time, one recalled to mind, irresistibly, the energetic presence of Elizabeth, as she passed before her soldiers at the time of the threatened invasion of the Grand Armada, and with burning words urged them to do and dare every honorable deed in behalf of Old England and its Virgin Queen.

Victoria always appears well at a review and has that magnetic glance of the eye which leads every soldier to believe that his sovereign looks directly at him on such an occasion. This quality is not unfrequently possessed by great generals, though few women ever have sufficient nerve to show it.

The Paris letter in the Independence states that the French Government is in a difficult position with reference to the arrangements for the naval review. The English fleet is invited to go to Cherbourg, and will probably do so on the 15th of August, but the Emperor wishes that the visit should be preceded by one from two or three French ships of war to Plymouth. The writer of the letter assigns as the reason for this wish the desire of the English government to force its allies to take the first step.

A tower, commanding a view of the entire city and surrounding country, has been built in Cork, dedicated to the memory of the late Prince Consort, on the occasion of the Prince of Wales' marriage, and named the "Albert Tower." A considerable revenue is derived from a trifling charge for admission to its summit, and those funds devoted to the relief of the sick poor of Cork.

DR. RADWAY'S PILLS.

THE ONLY PURE PURGATIVES.
THE ONLY PURE PURGATIVES.
THE ONLY PURE PURGATIVES.

Purgation in all cases of Indigestion, Constipation, Costiveness, Dyspepsia, Liver, Spleen, and Kidney Complaints, in Small Pox, Scarlet Fever, Bilious Fever, and other malignant fevers, is the only sure means of cure. But to accomplish this end it is necessary that purgatives that will expel the faeces and diseased humours from the system, without producing weakness, irritation, straining tenesmus, or piles, be used. All others are hurtful and will never cure the patient. Dr Radway's Pills are the only pure purgative pills in use. One to six boxes will perfect a cure—not only relieve, but cure. Price 25 cents per box. Sold by Druggists.

A Duel.—A quarrel between Ensign Stebbins and the Lieutenant of the Thunderbolts Invincibles, last fall, terminated in a broadsword fight between these two officers. After cutting at each other with desperation for twenty-five minutes without doing each other the least injury, the Lieutenant wanted to have a little rest as he felt somewhat fatigued; but not wishing the Ensign should know it, he said:—I have a very severe cough, which begins to trouble me; will you give me time to put a few of Bryan's Pulmonic Wafers in my mouth, they are the only thing that gives me relief, and I always carry them in my pocket in case of necessity." Only 25 cents a box.

Canadian Oil Wells.—Enniskillen, C. W., is situated some sixteen miles from the St. Clair River, and nearly opposite to Newport, and is one of the richest Oil Districts in the world; there are now sunk and in progress nearly 300 wells, most of them yielding largely; in one case the well has been overflowing for some time, and it is estimated that about two barrels a minute is running to waste, and so far they have not been able to stop it. This truly is one of nature's wonders, though not more wonderful than the power of the "Canadian Pain Destroyer" in curing sudden colds, rheumatism, pleurisy, spinal affections, sprains, bruises, &c. Sold by all Medicine Dealers at 25 cents per bottle.

BALSAM OF WILD CHERRY

The following testimony from a well known and highly respected Merchant of Prescott, is corroborative of the general approval given to Dr. WISTAR'S BALSAM OF WILD CHERRY:

Having tested the article with myself and family, in case of severe coughs and colds, for years, with uniform and unexceptionable success, I unhesitatingly recommend it with full confidence in its merits.

Yours truly,

AMERICAN
Button-hole, Cording, Braiding and Embroidering
SEWING MACHINE!
COMPANY,
627 Broadway, New-York.

THE BUTTON HOLE made by this entirely simple and novel machine, are not only equal to the best hand-made in the pearl or right side, but greatly surpassing them in beauty on the wrong side, which is formed by a beautiful braid stitch, made by an entirely new and unique stitch, which no hand made button-hole possesses; thereby imparting to the same a much greater strength, which renders cording or barring altogether unnecessary.

One Needle and Two Threads are only Used.

Unlike other Sewing Machines it manufactures its own Braid and Cord.

The best Merchant Tailors freely admit that its beauty, finish and strength cannot be attained by the most skilful hand.

Simplicity is one of its great merits, therefore not liable to get out of order, and it can be worked with ease by any young lady, who will, after a few days' experience, make from 1,000 to 1,200 perfect button-holes in one day.

This is the only machine produced that will throw a stitch over the edge, so as to bind and cover it in a manner indispensible for Button-holes, Cording and Braiding, each of which can be done with colored, shaded or chine silks, and produce a fabrique of varied colors unexcelled for beauty and taste.

To Ladies at home, Dress, Mantilla and Cloak makers, Shoemakers, Tailors, Hatters, Pocket-binders, Saddlers, &c., &c., it is indispensable; it is also admitted to be of great value, to other branches as it Braids, Embroiders, and Cords plain and fancy on all kinds of Cloths, Cassimers, Linen, Velvet Leather, &c., &c.

Instructions and Needles accompany each Machine.

Every Machine is Warranted for Twelve Months.

Machines can be seen in full operation at our spacious store, 627 Broadway, near Bleaker, where instruction Rooms are reserved for Ladies.

Poetry.

NEVER MORE NIGHT THAN DAY.

Ah! don't be sorrowful, darling,
And don't be sorrowful pray.
Taking the year together, my dear,
There isn't more night than day.

'Tis rainy weather, my darling;
Time's waves they heavily run;
But taking the year together, my dear,
There's isn't more cloud than sun.

We are old folks now, my darling;
Our heads are growing grey;
But taking the year all round, my dear,
You will always find a May.

We have had our May, my darling,
And our roses long ago;
And the time of year is coming, my dear,
For the silent night of snow.

And God is God, my darling,
Of night as well as day,
And we feel and know that we may go
Wherever he leads the way.

A God of the night, my darling,
Of the night of death so grim;
The gate that leads out of life, good wife,
Is the gate that leads to Him.

Artemus Ward's Brother.

The following quaint letter, from a gentleman who professes to be the brother of the celebrated Artemus Ward, says an eastern exchange, reached us the other day by the regular mail, and we give it because it embraces so much of the special kind of humour for which Artemus is so renowned. The whole family seem to be labouring under a very bad "spell," which is a disorder that in their case, however, seems to operate as disease does upon certain oysters, in producing a pearl where we might only expect puridity:—

Shecargo, March, 11, 1865.

To the Edytur of the Sunday Times, N.Y.

6 years ago, while in indianopeles, injyania. I rote to Mr. Prentis off the Loosville Jurnil, regarding the whereabouts of my brother Artymus Ward off boom I have not heerd since I was a boi.

"And we romed the fields together."

Lappe as a mackeral in Kashmeer Sox.—There was four of us berothers all bois. The fillering is a pedagog off our family. Our parents of which there was 2, consisted of our father and mother, namely:

Hannah and Erysipelas Ward. The latter (my father) was given heavily to Plugg tabacker, of which he chawed incessantly, though Biled Baken done rair was his best hold. He was a man that could not go long between drinks; the kannil did not then predo minate in him, and G. Hoover took him at the age of sicksty, and after 2 dais sikness. The following is applicable to his kase:

"Oakum! Oakum! with me."—S. Spere.

After the old man's deth, our mother was left with four bois aforesaid whizz, namely, i. e.

Erysipelas (named after father).
Artemis (the Long Lost).
Rodney and myself,
Olonzo (named after olonzo of pizzroonean celebrity).

My eldest brother, Ery, went into the wool bizziness, while Rodney went out to Origone territory and Mbarked in the Fur trade. Ery did poorly at the wool, and busted, but Rodney is still in the Fur Coning money.

Artymis, at the tender age of eleven, was suddenly mist from hoam. In this konnexhin I would remark an old stockin belongin to my mother, containin fore dollars in Silver and fifty too cents in koppers disappeared about the same time. There was a party of akrobats, of double sumerset prokl ness, in our naburhood a few days preevis, and by many it was supposed Arty had been invigled

"To leave his ma and happi home,
Sands eggs, sands iveth brush,
Sands pale ale.
The worrild is all a sting,
The rest is lemon and vanilla."

—Jake Spere.

At all evinks, I have heern of him but once, i. e., when I rote to Mr Prentiss, who did not answer mi letter, he bein engaged in translatin a French letter sent to him by Soosan M nday, a noted gorriller, of the femail gender. Off her more hereafter; but Rexpause on our mution, as the French have it. I he rd that mi brother A. Ward had bekum rich, be having been to Salt Lake city among the Mormen women (he was also given to the latter, erer from a child), and that, moreover and above, he had got a show of wax figgers, and never-theless was perfectly decayed with money; in which event I would remind him,

"I still live."—Webb.

And as his absents cost me many tears, I carried sul the water and chopt sul the wood for too years after his leving us) and as I am his only surviving berother in poor nuckernatane, Ery being rich and Rodney when last heard from was in a big contract furnishing phine toothed komes for the Confederut army, with his hed quarters in Richmund) therefore I do think Arty might come and see me. He is ever welcum to mi poor but happi hoam. Owe, ove, brother! if this should meet your i, I ink kindly off one who loves not wisely but too well; but owe, owe, deer Artymis! do not try to shake me.

OLONZO WARD.

Deer brother, don't! don't go back onto me. O. W.

"Why do I wepe 4 thee." O. W.

OLONZO WARD.

Afore I comments this letter from the late reble capitol I desire cimply to say that I have seen a low and scurrilous note in the papers from a certain person who sines himself Oliver Ward & sez he is my berruther. I did once have a b rother of that name, but I do not recognize him.—To me he is wuss than ded! I took him from colligt sum 16 years ago and gave him a good situation as the Bearded Woman in my Show. How did he repay me for this kindness? His base'y undertook (one day while in a Backyusian mood and rum and right in sight of the aujence in tent) to stand upon his head, whereby he betray'd his sex on account of his boots and his Bard fell'n off his face thus roonin my prospect is that town & likewise incurrin the sevje displeasure of the Press, which said boldly I was trifl n' with the feeling's of a intelligent public. I know no such man as Olonzo Ward. I do not even wish his name brothed in my presents. I do not recognize him. I perfectly disgust him.

ON A LINE.—'I don't like to patronize his line,' said a culprit to a hangman. 'Oh, never mind this once,' was the reply, 'it will soon suspend its operation.'

PIANO-FORTES

DRIGGS' NEW PATENT.

ARE THE ONLY INSTRUMENTS constructed on a truly scientific principle. That have greater strength, and will remain longer in tune than any other Piano. The construction is simple and natural, all the extraneous lumber in the body of the instrument is dispensed with; the sound boards are merely two arched planks of thin wood, like the front and back of a violin; the strings are attached to a strong iron frame, which is separate and entirely independent of the case, thereby dispensing with the old harp form of stringing by substituting straight bridges, preserving at the same time The Over Strung Bass, of which Mr Driggs is the inventor. By these improvements we gain much more vibratory power, at the same time preserving all its purity and richness of tone.

They have received the highest testimonials from the Press, and all the principal artists in the country, among which are:

Harry Sanderson,	L. M. Gottschalk,
Max Maretzek,	S. Thalberg,
Theodore Eisfeld,	Wm Mason,
Herman Wollenhaupt,	A Barili,
Francis H. Brown,	M. Strackosch,
Wm. Henry Fry.	Charles Fradel.

Mr. SIGESMUND THALBERG, the great pianist, says:—I have examined your new Piano-fortes and I cordially approve of its system of construction. Its principle, by which great increase of vibratory power is obtained, being very simple and perfectly philosophical. The tone is grand and noble; it has great capacity for sustaining the sound or singing, and its volume of tone or power I have never heard excelled in depth, purity and sympathetic sweetness.

Wm. HENRY FRY, late musical crit ic of the N. Y. Tribune says:—I have examined your newly invented Piano-Fortes They merit all the praise given to them by Messrs. Thalberg, Gottschalk, Strackosch, Masof and others. As regards the structure, they are original and philosophical; in purity, volume, and continuity of tone; in vocal versimilitude, that crowning excellence which enables the pianiste to "sing" on the instrument. Your Pianos deserve the highest rank. Your invention, in my opinion, is destined to work radical changes in the manufacture of Pianos throughout the world.

From the N. Y. Herald, Sept. 5—Upon a careful examination of DRIGGS Piano-Forte, we find the results obtained are a very fine singing tone, great purity and brilliancy throughout the entire instrument, not often found in Pianos constructed upon the old plan.

The N. Y. Times, July 12, says:—We have now an instrument without an equal. It can sing with a smoothe delicacy, perfectly unattainable on any other instrument; an ordinary player obtains with no exertion, the fullness of a Grand Pi no Forte and they must speedily supercede the old styles.

GENTLEMEN:—Having thoroughly examined and tested the Piano-Fortes invented and patented by Mr S. B. Dumas, I am of the opinion that the tone resul ing from his improvements, as exhibited in the instruments under examination, in point of richness, depth and brilliancy, equals that of the best Grand Piano-Fortes, and excells them in pure, musical and actual tone, power thus approximating closer to what I consider perfection in the instrument than has yet been achieved by any other system of manufacture.

Yours respectfully,
L. M. GOTTSCHALK.

SALT FOR ANIMALS.

Few persons are aware of the immense importance of salt in the animal economy, not only as an indirect producer of flesh, but as a sanitary agent in the prevention of disease. The farmer himself cannot endure a dish of hay tried, fish, flesh, fowl, bread, or vegetable, without a quantum of salt for seasoning; and indeed statistics show that salt is the only article of food which is absolutely in universal use by the whole human family; and yet it seldom occurs to him that it is just as necessary for the perfect comfort, health, and thriftiness of his horses, cows, sheep, and hogs, as for his own, and as a general rule they never know the taste of it during their whole lives, except near the coast, where salt hay is cut as a matter of economy. Where salt hay is not used in a considerable proportion to the whole amount of fodder, the English hay, and straw, and roots, or whatever is fed out to the stock should have a sprinkling of salt, as much as a matter of course as does our own food when preparing for the table.

While the beneficial effect of salt is thoroughly established as a matter of fact, and while it has long being known that a total privation of it proves disastrous and even fatal, yet the exact nature of its functions is in a great degree a matter of speculation and doubt. It is certain, however, that it acts as an appetizer by stimulating the stomach, and that its antiseptic qualities counteract tendencies to disease. But it is supposed that its great and essential province is to furnish muriatic acid for the formation of the gastric juice in the stomach, without which the process of digestion, and consequently all the functions of life would speedily cease.

A regular course of experiments were instituted a few years ago by a German agriculturist, which demonstrated beyond all possibility of doubt the absolute necessity of salt for domestic animals. He first commenced with his sheep, that were pastured on low damp land, and were supplied with a daily ration of salt. He selected ten sheep and struck off their salt for the period of one year, during which five out of the ten died of rot and worms, while the rest of the flock, five hundred in number, which were supplied with salt as usual, lost only five. The second year he selected ten more and put them on an anti-salt diet, and seven of them died, while the remainder of his flock, about four hundred in number, lost but five. The third year sixteen sheep were selected, and it being a wet year all of them died of rot and pneumonia, the rest of the flock remaining as healthy as in the former years.

His experiments with horses and neat cattle, though they did not show that salt was with them so much a matter of life and death as with sheep, at least for the short period of his experiments, yet he proved conclusively that it was essential to their best condition and greatest profit. The cattle that had salt were entirely exempt from hoove, which prevailed at that time extensively on the continent, and a much smaller per cent. were subject to the pneumonia. Their coats were in better order; they kept themselves in better flesh, and their meat was of better quality; they fattened upon food which other animals refused to eat; and what is perhaps of the most importance, their milk was greater in quantity and much richer both in butter and cheese.

In the epidemics among cattle, salt has more than once proved a specific.—Exchange.

Sharp Mowing-Machine Knives.

The cutting edge of all kinds of knives is composed of numerous saw-tooth like scratches made by the file, grindstone or whetstone. The same exists on the edge of a razor, but they are exceedingly fine. The cutting edge of a grain sickle consists of very fine teeth made as a file is cut, with a sharp cold chisel, cutting creases sloping obliquely backward on the under side of the blade, extending quite to the edge.—When the serratures thus formed become battered, or bent over, the tool is dull; but so long as they are kept sharp-pointed and erect, which is done by grinding on the smooth side, the edge is sharp.

For cutting straw, hay, or cornstalks, when knives are worked with a drawing stroke, they are usually most effective if their cutting edges are made of coarse serratures, as when ground on a rather coarse stone. On the contrary, when knives operate with a direct stroke, the finer the edges are ground the easier they will cut. This is particularly true of knives of mowing machines. If ground to an edge on a stone of fine grit, and then whetted with a fine whetstone, even the momentum of the cam which works the knives will be almost sufficient to cut an even swath though heavy grass. Where the ground is smooth and hard, and the grass not very thick at the bottom, and the knives of a mower are sharpened with a fine gritted whetstone, no difference can be perceived in the exertion of the team, whether the mower cuts a full swath, half of one, or none at all.—Dull knives, however, or those having a coarse edge, will require sometimes twice as much power to mow heavy grass, as if they had been put in order with a fine whetstone. Knives of mowing machines are often filed to an edge. If they were operated with a drawing stroke, they would cut grain better than if sharpened with a fine stone. But, as the cut is a direct or crushing one, they should always be rubbed after filing, with a fine stone. Great efficiency in such knives depends almost entirely on the perfection of the cutting edge.

PREVENTION OF THE HOOVE.—When neat cattle and sheep eat too much red clover, their stomachs soon become so much inflated with gas, that without immediate relief they often die in a few hours. We have known neat cattle to be horen and die, in defiance of all efforts to save them, even after they had been grazing in a clover field more then two weeks. Where they can have access to other grass, they will seldom eat enough clover to make them bloat; but as soon as they are required to subsist entirely on red clover, unless they have free access to an abundance of salt, there is great danger that they will eat too much. We have always been accustomed to keep salt in a tub in the field where the stock were grazing on red clover; and the animals would eat freely of it many times a day; and we never had an animal affected with the hoove, as long as the salt tub contained a good supply.

LICE ON HOGS.—The swine louse is readily destroyed by a strong decoction of quassia wood; tobacco water is also used but requires especial caution in its application. A little benzine, dissolved in alcohol, applied with a shaving brush, or a peice of sponge is said to be a certain cure, but like tobacco water, it requires care in its use.—American Agriculturist.

CHIPMUNCKS.—A correspondent says that his neighbors soak their corn in a decoction of tobacco, and it has invariably put a stop to the depredations of chipmuncks.—Am. Agriculturist.

See what the most popular and widely circulated periodicals say of our Establishment:

From the "Dispatch" of February 25, 1865.

We take pleasure in calling the attention of our readers to the announcement of Messrs. Devaugh & Co's Great Sale of Jewelry, Silver Ware, and Fancy Goods, in our advertising columns. We are personally acquainted with the members of this firm and know them to be gentlemen of sterling worth and integrity. Their stock of goods, for variety and extent, we have scarcely seen paralleled.

From the "Mirror of Fashion," March 1, 1865.

Messrs. Devaugh & Co's Great Sale of Jewelry, etc., opened on the 15th ult., and we venture to say that no finer display of goods was ever exhibited by any establishment in this city. The ladies thronged their bazaar almost to suffocation, although the streets were rendered nearly impassable by the melted snow and slush. We predict for them a wonderful success.

From the "Ledger," February 28, 1865.

Our lady friends should visit the extensive establishment of Messrs. Devaugh & Co., No. 15 Maiden Lane, if they wish to indulge themselves with a sight which they will long remember. Such a profusion of elegant Watches, Chains, Rings, Earrings, and, in short, of Jewelry of every name, kind and description, we never before witnessed. Their silver and plated ware is superb and almost casts into the shade the other splendid establishments which have long been the boast of our city. It is estimated that their stock is worth not less than one million of dollars.

ARE YOU IN AGONY?

A WELL SPRING OF HOPE FOR ALL!
CAN BE FOUND IN
Holloway's Pills.
Be of Good Cheer! The Sinking may be Saved!
BY THE USE OF
Holloway's Ointment.

THE history of these great Remedies is the most wonderful medical revelation that the world has ever known. It establishes the all important fact that WHENEVER, and in WHATEVER SHAPE internal diseases exists, the disinfecting, searching and healing properties of the Pills are fully equal to its subjection and cure, and that, with the Ointment, they are

The Great Ambassadors of Health to all Mankind.

This is not a history written by one man, or even derived from the experiences of one nation. It consists of a compilation of testimonials from the sick of every country—an unimpeachable record, the like of which has never been adduced in favor of any discovery or invention since time began.

These Mighty Healers, World Known and World Tried are a Boon to the Sick

The want of a sterling medicinal to meet the ills and necessities of the suffering portion of humanity, and one entirely free from mineral and other deleterious particles, was severely felt till this all powerful medicine was ushered into the world; HOLLOWAY'S INVALUABLE PILLS have become the HOUSEHOLD REMEDY of all nations. Their attribute is to PREVENT as well as to CURE; they attack the RADIX OR ROOT of the complaint, and thus, by removing the hidden cause of disease, re-invigorate and restore the drooping energies of the system, assisting nature in her task of VITAL AND FUNCTIONARY REFORMATION.

Disorders of the Stomach

Are the sources of the deadliest maladies. Their effect is to vitiate all the fluids of the body, and to send a poisoned stream through all the channels of circulation. Now, what is the operation of the Pills? They cleanse the bowels, regulate the liver, bring the relaxed or irritated stomach into a natural condition, and, acting through the secretive organs upon THE BLOOD ITSELF, change the state of the system from sickness to health, by exercising a simultaneous and wholesome effect upon all its parts and functions.

Woman in all her Difficulties

Is invited to test the regulating and restorative powers of this harmless but effective preparation. At the two epochs of life in which the female system undergoes the most important and critical changes, the Pills will prove a positive safeguard against evil consequences. They are also confidently recommended as a specific in every disorder to which females are exclusively a bject.

Be it Understood,

That the above statements can at all times be verified by the written testimony (extending through a quarter of a century) of tens of thousands of unimpeachable witnesses.

Bilious Maladies, &c., &c.

In whatever form disease attacks the liver, it is repelled and exterminated by this searching, painless, and irresistable curative. Bilious remittents, bilious purging, and all the ordinary disorders of the organ, indicated by pain in the right side and between the shoulders, yellowness of the whites of the eyes, weakness and debility, &c., are relieved and removed by the remedy, with a celerity which astonishes the sufferers and their friends. Let the sick whom the faculty have abandoned, resort with confidence to this powerful anti-bilious agent, and a restoration to health and activity will be the unvarying result.

Dyspepsia, Diarrhœa, Weakness, &c. &c.

The terrible bodily and mental pangs which characterise Dyspepsia are at once mitigated by the Pills. Diarrhœa, constipation, headache, physical prostration, nervous tremors, hot flushes, spasms, affections of the kidneys, hemorrhoids or piles, and, in fact, all internal complaints, from whatever cause arising, give way before the salutary influence of this extraordinary remedy. As a specific for dyspepsia, and the disorders connected with it, or growing out of it, the Pills are always to be relied on when every other medicine and mode of treatment has utterly failed.

Holloway's Pills are the best Remedy known for the following diseases:

Asthma,	Headaches,
Bowel Complaints,	Indigestion,
Coughs,	Influenza,
Colds,	Inflamation,
Chest Diseases,	Inward Weakness,
Costiveness,	Liver Complaints,
Dyspepsia,	Lowness of Spirits,
Diarrhœa,	Piles,
Dropsy,	Stone and Gravel,
Debility,	Secondary Symptoms,

HOMŒOPATHY.
HOMŒOPATHY AND LIFE ASSURANCE.—The directors of a London life assurance office—the "General Provident"—at its recent meeting have placed on record their opinion "that persons treated by the Homœopathic system enjoy more robust health, are less frequently attacked by disease, and when attacked recover more rapidly than those treated by any other system; that with respect to the more fatal classes of disease the mortality under Homœopathy is small in comparison with that of Allopathy; that there are diseases not curable at all under the latter system, which are perfectly curable under the former; finally, that the medicines prescribed by Homœopathists do not injure the constitution, whereas those employed by Allopathe not unfrequently entail the most serious, and in many instances fatal, consequences." The directors further propose to summon a meeting of the shareholders to lay before them the facts they have collected, and the decision at which they have arrived, namely, "to open a special section for persons treated by the Homœopathic system, at a lower rate of premium than that charged on other lives."—London (Eng.) Observer.—Toronto Globe.

BEAUTIFUL THINGS.

There are beautiful things in this world of ours;
There's a mine of beauty amid the flowers.
Beautiful, too, is the wild bird's dress,
As he shoots through the shadowy wilderness;
Brooklets that hum their unceasing song,
And dance to the tune as they speed along,
Clouds that career through a summer sky,
A drop of dew in the violet's eye,
Insects that glance through the forest glade,
Deer to rest in the grateful shade,
Moonbeams that tremble on sleeping seas,
Bl ssoms that cover the bending trees,
The hues of the rainbow when rain is o'er,
Pebbles that sprinkle the lovely shore,
The stars that watch when the world's at rest,
And live again in the ocean's breast.
But fairer than all, than star, cloud or sky,
Are maiden's fresh from Dame Nature's die;
Beautiful forms, and eyes whose light
Fires the brain with a wild delight;
Lips that but laugh at the sculptor's skill,
Where the thirsty lover may drink his fill;
Cheeks that can vie with the fairest rose,
Where dimples nestle in sweet repose;
Feet that seem scarcely to touch the ground,
We see them more, but we hear no sound
Voices that echo delights to repeat
As they reach her ear in her dim retreat;
Whose tones, as they fall on the listless ear,
Seem the whispers of angels hovering near.

You're Younger Than I Am.

BY AMY GRAHAM.

(From Godey's Lady's Book)

'Do you want to go?' asked my father, holding the invitation poised open, on his out-spread fingers.

'Of course she does,' said my youngest brother, Will, laughing: 'girls always want to go!'

I did want to accept that invitation, so I did not dispute Will's assertion. There was so exciting very tempting, to a city-bred girl just released from boarding school, in an invitation to spend some weeks in a country farm-house, and, added to this, there was still another inducement, to know my Aunt Fanny.

I was motherless from my very infancy, and I had never known my relatives on my mother's side. My father had married very young, the mother of his five boys, and had been left a widower when Will was two years old; for five years he mourned truly the wife of his youth, then he married a young girl who was visiting one of his friends, and in one short year she too died, leaving me a pale, sickly baby. My nurse was succeeded by my school-mistress, and I was not at home, except for a few short weeks in the summer holidays, until I had completed my seventeenth year, when I came home to remain; my father providing masters in music and languages, that I might not lose my time. And now, in the first month of this home-life, came an invitation from an unknown Aunt Fanny, who claimed to be my mother's oldest sister, and wished to have a visit from her niece. The letter was dated Davy's Corner, and I was directed to send word to Woodtown and I should find there an escort to my aunt's farm. My father debated the matter for some minutes, then looked at my pale cheeks, and no doubt sent a loving memory to my mother which opened his heart to her sister, and said:—

'Pack up, then! When can you be ready?'

'On Monday; but am I to go alone?'

'No; Willis shall take you.'

Willis was my father's old confidential clerk, who had escorted me to and from school in all my holiday trips, so I was quite prepared for this answer, and proceeded to pack up immediately. My four brothers, whose pet and plaything I had been in all our holidays, were loud in their complaints at such 'shabby treatment;' but the country and that unknown aunt were too tempting to be resisted, and I persisted in my resolve to go to Davy's Corner. The housekeeper, who had lived with my father since his first wife's wood packed up cakes and sandwiches enough to maintain a garrison in a state of siege, and had a breakfast that was a treat for an epicure ready for me when I came down on Monday morning dressed for my journey. Father filled my porte-monnaie liberally, kissed me warmly, and exacted a promise of frequent letters and then, with a hint as to the virtue of punctuality for a railway journey, I left the fire tall, manly figures standing on the steps, while I drove off, half doubtful already about my anticipated pleasure.

The journey was an uneventful one, and on the afternoon of the second day we came to the little station at Wood own. Willis had decided to remain there for the night and return home by the morning train, so we looked about for some vehicle to take our trunks and carpet bags to the hotel. The only wheeled article in sight was a large canvas-covered wagon which stood down on the road, below the arch which had been erected for the train to pass over.

We were still looking disconsolately at the little cluster of houses below us, forming the village, when a heavy tread made the wooden flight of stairs leading up to the platform creak, and a stock of light hair, a tall white hat, and a sunburned face appeared, followed by a pair of broad shoulders, and finally by two very substantial feet, clad in muddy boots, whose soles were about two inches thick. Heavy corduroy trousers and a grey flannel shirt made the costume of this tall figure, and a large riding whip was his only weapon. He looked at us from a pair of bright blue eyes, and then said in a very pleasant though loud voice:—

'Are you my cousin Amy Graham?'

His cousin! All my fluffed boarding-school ideas, and all the high-bred refinement of my father and brothers, rose up in defiance of the title. Willis, however, was only a fine, stalwart farmer, with a good, honest face, and a hearty, cheery voice, and Willis said:—

'Mrs. Brown's son?'

'Yes, sir! Gerald Brown is my name.'

Gerald—my own brother was named Gerald. And I looked with interest at my cousin. Oh, dear me! Before I had time to scream or exert any other feminine defence, this tall countryman put his great hands under my arms, lifted me up as if I had been a baby, and deliberately kissed me; then putting me down, he shouldered my big trunk, and with a steady, heavy tramp went down the wooden steps to the canvas-covered wagon, and shoved the trunk in. Up again, and the little trunk followed the big one, and Willis's carpet-bag was seized, when he said:—

'Not that, Mr. Brown, that is mine.'

'Well, you are coming over to the Corner, are you not?'

'Thank you, no. I return by to-morrow morning's train.

All the entreaties that warm hospitality could suggest were used to induce him to accompany me, but in vain, and having taken the direction of the hotel, he saw me seated on the seat of the wagon, and bade me good-by.

I think when Gerald took his place beside me on the board which formed the wagon seat, I felt something the same sensations as would have resulted from finding myself perched upon the box beside my father's coachman, James.

We rode for some time in silence, I resolutely staring forward at the dry, dusty road, but at last the kindly voice broke the quiet, as my cousin said:—

'Are you tired, Amy?'

I looked round. How could I have thought his face a common one? The profuse clusters of waving light hair made a thousand little crisp curls over his high forehead, and his large blue eyes were full of bright animation. His smile showed a sweet mouth, and unbroken rows of white, even teeth, and the sunburned features, though large, were handsome and regular. Having made this mental inventory, and indignantly asked myself if I expected to meet city dandies in a farm-house, I was already for chatting.

'Tired? No. How far have we to go?'

'Ten miles! The horses are tired coming down in the heat of the day, or we would go faster. You look tired or sick, or something. Such white cheeks!'

'I am never very rosy.'

'Then the Corner is the place for you. All the girls here have cheeks like peonies. You know how to ride?'

'Oh, yes. I brought my habit and hat.'

'Your—'

'Riding dress.'

'Oh—yes—I—in fact, we don't make any difference here. Some of the girls have a long calico skirt, but mostly they jump on just as they are. Will we've fine horses on our place trained to the saddle, so if you like to ride, why you can.'

He was very chatty now the ice was broken, and made me so many offers of service, so many promises of pleasures to come, that his 'Here we are!' at the gate of a winding road, was rather an unpleasant announcement, than the relief I had expected it to be when I first tried. The house at whose door he left me standing, while he drove to the barn, was small, with little windows, and a high, pointed roof, and I hesitated about knocking. He came back while I was still standing there.

'Not gone in,' he cried. 'Come this way!'

He led me round the porch which encircled the house, to a back door, and into the kitchen. Here, fast asleep in a rocking chair, we found a middle-aged woman, who so strikingly likeness to Gerald prepared me for his

'Hollo, mother!'

'Mercy on me, Jerry,' she said, peevishly opening her eyes; 'don't holler so. I ain't deaf.'

'Here's Amy, mother.'

'Come round here, Amy, I don't want to get up, and my head's just easy. You're younger than I am, and you can come to me.'

I obeyed, and after looking at me earnestly, she said, in a soft, gentle voice, entirely unlike her previous tone:—

'Just like what poor Amy was when she went to the city to teach. Heigho! Study and teaching killed her. Kiss me, dear and then take off your bonnet.'

'Tea ready, mother?' asked Gerald, as I threw aside my travelling cloak and bonnet.

'No, Jerry; is it six?'

'Past six, nearly seven; and I'm hungry as a hunter.'

'Can you make Johnny cake, Amy?' inquired my aunt in the languid drawl, which I afterwards found was habitual to her.

'I? No, ma'am. I—can't cook.'

'Can't! Why how old are you, child?'

'Seventeen.'

'And can't make a Johnny cake!'

The idea seemed to rouse up her dormant energies, for she left her rocking chair and began to move about the kitchen. I was dusty, tired, and heated with my long ride, and, after a few moments, ventured to ask if I could go to my room.

'Jerry, take her traps to my room,' said his mother. 'You'll sleep with me, Amy; there ain't but two sleeping rooms in the house, Jerry's and mine.'

I followed Jerry to a large, comfortably, though plainly furnished room, and when he had deposited my trunks, filled for me a large water-pitcher, he departed. I bathed face and neck, fished out a cool muslin from my trunk, smoothed my tangled curls into order, and donned a pair of slippers; by the time this operation was completed, Gerald's clear voice called me to tea, and I went down again to the kitchen.

Eating here, and the total absence of servants, did not surprise me, for numerous novels had impressed upon my mind the fact that this was the 'custom of the country;' but I was unprepared for Aunt Fanny's stare and Jerry's widely opened eyes as I came in.

Why, Amy, you're a perfect picture!' said Gerald. 'Ain't that a pretty gown, mother?'

'What's the use of dressing up so smart just for a tea at home?' said my aunt.

I glanced at my simply made white dress, and wondered what they would say to my more stylish barèges and grenadines, but only thanked Gerald for his compliment, and let his mother's remark pass unanswered. Johnny cake, I found, was a mixture of Indian meal with other ingredients, and particularly unpalatable from a superabundance of salt. Gerald complained loudly, but a hint of headache from his mother silenced him, or rather turned his grumbling to a tender care of her, which was very touching.

'Mother suffers very much, Amy,' he said to me; 'you will find her ailing most of the time, but I hope you will overlook any deficiencies.'

I answered politely and the subject dropped.

As soon as tea was over Gerald asked me to walk over the farm with him, and, as I pleaded fatigue, he took some chairs out to the porch, and we sat there chatting until nine o'clock, when my aunt called me in, and I found this was the usual bed-time at Davy's Corner. I was very tired, and, in spite of the novelty of my position, slept soundly.

'Amy! Amy!'

It seemed about the middle of the night when this call and a most energetic shaking roused me.

'Amy,' said my aunt, 'it is five o'clock, and Jerry has gone down!'

'Well?' I said, sleepily.

'You're younger than I am, you get up first, and put the kettle on; by that time I'll come down.'

'But, Aunt Fanny'—I began.

'Come, hurry. Jerry's whistling, and that's a sign he wants his breakfast.

I got up slowly, wondering what I was expected to do next, and began to dress myself.

'Mercy on me! don't stop to curl your hair; tuck it up anyhow.'

I twisted my curls into a roll and put on a black net, and then took a tucked skirt and wrapper from my trunk.

'Bless my heart! you ain't a going to put on that fixed-up thing to get breakfast?'

Get breakfast! I get breakfast; I, who, to my shame be it spoken, hardly knew a coffee-pot from a frying-pan. I thought of my father's elaborately prepared table, and wondered, for the first time, how hot rolls, steaks, eggs and coffee were made; if I had been informed that they all grew ready cooked on a tree, I could not have brought one item of actual experience to contradict the assertion.

Get breakfast! My French lawn wrapper must return to the trunk; but the thicker materials were ruffled and crimmed, open from the waist, and required embroidered skirts, so, in the plainest of them, I earned my aunt's contemptuous comment—

'Fixed off to kill!'

'What must I do,' I inquired, 'until you come down?'

'Well, I shan't be down yet awhile; my head aches. Just make the coffee, and boil some eggs, and fry some slices of ham; you'll find bread in the closet.'

Boil! fry! coffee! I started down stairs. Jerry was in the kitchen.

'Where's mother?'

'Got the headache?' I answered, shortly enough.

'Well, I've made the fire, and—and'—Gerald was eyeing my wrapper, and the embroidery on the skirt, 'and the kettle is on; but—but'—

'Well?' I said, laughing now.

'Ain't she coming down at all?'

'No. I'm to boil a ham and'—

'What?'

'No, boil an egg and fry a ham'—

'What?'

'Well, it's boil, and fry, and eggs, and ham, and that's all I can tell you.'

'But, Amy'—

'Stop, let me finish. I am fresh from a boarding school, and, as we have a housekeeper and plenty of servants, I never boiled or fried anything in my life; but I am not too old to learn, and if Aunt Fanny is sick, why I'll try now, only mind, sir, if you laugh at me, I'll retire from service and return to New York. Where is the ham?'

'Bravo! What a spunky little fashion-plate you are. Ain't—it's none of my business, to be sure—but won't those trimmings and the holes in your petticoat suffer in the boiling and frying operations?'

'S'pose they will.' Never mind.'

'Well, I'll get the ham and slice it for you, and bring in some eggs, and then you must release me until I attend to the live stock. Can you make out?'

'Oh, yes. Where are the pots and pans?'

Gerald did not leave me until all my materials were found ready for use, then with a shy, yet not unmanly, grace he bent down on one knee and said:—

'We are on a level, now; won't you bid me good morning?'

I understood him, and, gratefully inclined, I gave him a hearty kiss and 'thank you,' and he bounded off like a stag, leaving me to loneliness and breakfast getting.

I knew that boiling meant putting things in water and standing them on the fire, so I put the eggs in a saucepan, filled it from the pump, and stood it on the coals. Then I piled the slices of ham neatly in the frying pan, and put that beside the eggs; but coffee—how was coffee made? Really interested now, I flew up stairs and roused my aunt from her nap.

'Aunt Fanny, how do you make coffee?'

'Bless the child, what a start you gave me! Why, you put it in the coffee-pot, pour boiling water on it, and then set it down to boil. Put in an egg, Amy, to clear it.'

'Where is the coffee?'

'In the red tin can, in the closet. Put in plenty, Jerry likes it strong.'

I obeyed my directions literally. I put a double handful of coffee kernels in the coffee-pot, deposited an egg on top of them, filled up the pot with boiling water and set it on the stove. My eggs were boiling merrily, and a strong smell of burning ham filled the kitchen. The under slice was surely done so I drew it out. It was rather black on one side, but I put it on a plate, and resolved to watch the next layer more carefully.

It was half past six when Gerald came in, his bright face flushed with the early exercise, and his cheery voice ringing out like pleasant music—

'Breakfast ready, Amy?'

'Oh yes! Is that the way to set the table, Gerald?'

'Fust rate! How long have your eggs been boiling?'

'About an hour.'

Such a ringing burst of gleeful laughter as burst from my cousin's lips I never heard before. He laughed till the tears stood in his eyes, then, with a sudden gravity, he said:—

'I guess they're done,' and burst out again laughing.

Spite of a vexed feeling, I joined him.

'How long ought they to boil, Gerald?'

'Three minutes.'

'Three minutes? Why, the water wasn't warm in three minutes.'

'You didn't put them on in cold water?'

'Yes; is that funny too?' for his hearty laugh broke out again.

'It is rude, real rude, for me to laugh,' he said penetently, in a few minutes. 'I should know no more myself, if mother was right smart, but she's been ailing so much that I have done a good deal of woman's work, and pride myself on my cooking. Fish out the eggs, Amy, and I'll get some more. The water is first-rate.'

We sat down presently, and Jerry poured the coffee into the table coffee-pot.'

'The coffee's rather weak, Amy,' he said hesitatingly; 'how much did you put in?'

'A double handful.'

'Such wee fists as yours don't hold much,' he said, raising the lid and peeping in. 'Why, Amy, here's a whole egg. You ought to have crushed it.'

'Your mother said to put in an egg.'

'But you didn't grind the coffee,' and Gerald bit his lip; but seeing my woeful face, he did not laugh, but throwing out my mess, he showed me how to make coffee, and finally, at what he informed me was an 'unheard-of hour,' we sat down to breakfast. Aunt Fanny did ample justice to some toast, eggs, and coffee, which Gerald prepared and took to her, but languidly informed us that she did not feel able to rise congratulating herself on the fact that the 'spell didn't come on' till I was 'there to take the care.'

'I'm sorry I can't stay to help you clear up,' said Gerald disconsolately; 'you ain't used to it, and mother's fixing for sick, I see; but I must be off, for I'm nearly two hours behind time now.'

'Oh, never mind me. I'll get along, and I am glad I'm here to help.'

'What shall I bring in for dinner? Something to roast is easiest or no, I'll tell you, I'll bring you a leg of mutton to boil, and you've nothing to do but put it in a pot and stand it on the fire.'

'Do you grind it or smash it, or any thing?'

'No; I'll fix it ready for you.'

He was as good as his word, and left the mutton on the fire before he started off. The clearing up came next, and I could do nothing more after that until I had donned a new wrapper and skirt, hanging up the first to dry. How do people wash fishes in dryness? Every saucer dripped its allowance of soapsuds over me as I lifted it from the pan and wiped it. I wet five towels wringing wet, and was one set of greasy water myself.

'Aunt Fanny, what do you cook with boiled mutton, and how do you cook it?'

'It's too late for boiled mutton.'

'But it has been on for nearly two hours.'

'Oh! Well, boil some potatoes, and you'll find some cabbages cut in the shed; and, Amy, boil some rice; Jerry is fond of it with mutton.'

If, in the excess of my gratitude, she had informed me that Gerald had a partiality for fried elephant steaks, I should have undertaken to procure them, so boiled rice sounded simple enough. I bided Amy! I'm sure if I ever have a nightmare it will take the form of boiled rice.

I had ascertained that potatoes required more boiling than eggs, was 'posted up,' as Will says, on the cabbage question, and had received the most careful directions how to prepare the rice, prevent its scorching, and the accurate time required for boiling. One more question remained:—

'How much shall I cook, auntie?'

'As much as will fill a vegetable dish.'

Down stairs I went, feeling fully the importance of my new position. I filled the vegetable dish with rice, picked, and washed it, and set it on in a large pot to boil. Boil! I was watching my fire with one eye, and my rice with the other, when I saw the latter begin slowly to rise in the pot. It rose with a spiteful, bubbling noise swelling immensely like some live thing till it filled that great pot full, and still it swelled. I bore it until it threatened to rise over the edge, and then I got another pot and put half into that. I was beginning to believe the stuff bewitched, for with a steady swell, and positively malicious noise, it filled both pots, and I got a third. I was desperate. What if it was like the porridge in the fairy tale, which boiled porridge till it filled house, roads, and village, until all the inhabitants were smothered. Still it rose slowly, majestically, threatening to fill the third pot. I was acting at it with a perfect fascination when Gerald came in.

'Why Amy, what a lot of rice! What are you going to do?'

'Go crazy, I think! It has filled one pot, then another, and now a third; and it goes on swelling, and rising, and swelling. It has swelled up to this now. When will it stop? Will it go on swelling all day?'

'How much did you put on?'

'About two or three quarts?'

'Dry? Two or three quarts dry?'

'Aunt Fanny said that dish full,' I said, humbly, for the clear ringing laugh of the morning warned me that I had made a new blunder.

'After it was cooked, Amy. Mutton done?'

'I don't know. Does mutton swell up?'

'No, nor cabbages. These are done to a charm. Hilloo, mother!' for at that instant my Aunt Fanny appeared at the door.

'Dinner ready?' she inquired languidly.

'Yes,' said Gerald, gravely. 'We've got rice; do you like rice?'

Aunt Fanny's eye fell on my three pots, and that white mass which still steadily swelled up with its triumphant, insolent bubble.

'Bless my heart, Amy, what were you thinking about?'

'Never mind, mother, this is new work.' And Gerald put his mother in a chair, while he and I dashed up.

He praised my cabbages and potatoes, but could not resist a merry emphasis when he said:—

'Cousin, shall I help you to rice? Don't be bashful, there's plenty of it.'

I abhor rice! I hate rice! I abominate rice! I detest rice! I despise rice! Aunt Fanny made rice cakes for tea that night; rice balls for breakfast next morning, followed by rice pudding for dinner, and rice cakes again for tea. I am happy to say that the rest of the mass soured, and was given to the pigs. I sincerely hope they enjoyed it.

Whether it was my awful extravagance on the rice question that roused Aunt Fanny, I am unable to say; but she was about again for a week, trusting me with no responsibility, but making my years tell upon me very painfully in this style:—

'You're younger than I am, Amy; get me some water, will you?'

'You pick the vegetables, Amy; you're younger than I am.'

Up stairs and down, in doors and out, morning, noon and night, I travelled, spurred on by the eternal 'You're younger than I am,' till I wished I was as old as Methuselah, if only for the pleasure of retaliating once.

I was acquiring a vast amount of useful information on the cooking question, and under the early hours and exercise my cheeks were glowing as they had never done before.

One week passed, and at dinner time, one fine day, Gerald reminded me of our proposed ride.

'I will come in at four o'clock, so be ready,' was his parting cry, and I promised to comply.

It had been rather amusing to me to see my aunt and Gerald admiring so naively my city-made wardrobe, and I dressed for my ride with a pardonable desire to astonish the natives. I brushed my hair in waving bands in front, but let it fall in its own profusion of natural curls on my neck; then I donned my buff Nankeen habit, braided with waste, and put on my jaunty linen collar and black necktie. My straw hat was turned up round the rim, and had a long white feather encircling the crown, and falling on one side almost to my shoulder. I had just drawn on my gauntlets and taken my pretty whip, when I heard Gerald calling me. I gathered up my skirt and ran down. Gerald's whistle was just what I expected.

'You look good enough to eat!' he cried enthusiastically, and stooping his tall figure he lifted me up and placed me on the saddle.

'Jupiter, ain't that a gown! You a mute, how can you get so much fixings on one dress?'

'Do you like it, Gerald?'

'Like it! And that hat! Whew! won't the Woodtown folks stare!'

They did stare. As we cantered through the main streets, windows flew up in all directions, and 'Did you ever!' 'Well, I am beat!' 'Ain't that a beauty?' fell from lips on every side. Gerald enjoyed it hugely. His eye sparkled, and his lip curved in a thousand merry twists as he bowed right and left, sometimes reining up to speak to an acquaintance, but in a moment gaining my side again. It was a glorious ride, and we came home to a late tea, hungry and tired, but in high spirits.

'Amy! Amy!'

It was just after midnight when this call wakened me.

'Amy, get up. I am sick, very sick.'

There was a tone of real suffering in my aunt's voice, and I sprang out of bed and lighted a candle. She was lying with her hands pressed over her forehead, her face ashy pale, and her whole frame trembling.

'What is it, Aunt Fanny?'

'Oh, I don't know, I'm cold, so cold, and my head aches fearfully.'

She shivered as she spoke, and I felt really alarmed as I looked at her. I dressed myself hastily, and then knocked at Gerald's door.

'Hey! what's the matter?' he cried.

'You're mother is ill?'

'I'll be in in two minutes,' he said, and I heard him bound out of bed on the floor. He came in very soon, and one glance assured him, as it had me, that this was something more than the usual nervous attack.

'I'll go for the doctor. It is nearly two miles, so don't be alarmed if I am not back soon. Be patient, mother,' for she was shivering and moaning. 'I will be here as soon as possible.'

I heard his horse's hoofs die away with a forlorn, deserted feeling, but the shivering form before me stirred up my energies. I threw two large blankets from a box beside the bed, and ran down to the kitchen fire to heat them, then ransacking all the closets I found a bottle labelled brandy. Right or wrong, I was determined to warm the invalid, so I mixed a strong dose of brandy and hot water, and made her drink that, following up the prescription by a vigorous rubbing and rolling in the hot blankets. Before the doctor arrived, she was fast asleep.

'Pretty well for an amateur,' was the doctor's laughing comment. 'Why, Jerry, who is this?'

He had caught a good view of my face as he spoke.

'Aunt Amy's daughter!'

'Yes, yes, Amy's eyes, lips, and hair. Poor Amy! I knew your mother from the time she was a baby till she went to town to teach. Ah, well! She was a lovely girl!'

My dear, delicate mother, how they all loved her. I looked up with full eyes to the kind old face; but before I had time to speak, he turned to the bed.

'Chills and fever,' he said, to answer to Gerald's question; 'but, thanks to Doctor Amy, I hope it will not turn out much—Keep her quiet for a few days; I'll call

A New Trustee.

On Saturday it will be the duty of the inhabitants of the North Ward to select a fit and proper person to fill the place of J. B. Walton, who has absented himself from the town for such a long period. The selection of a trustee is of more importance than the selection of a councillor. The position we consider a more important one; the responsibilities are greater. A councillor is chosen to see after our financial affairs, and manage those concerns that relate to dollars and cents. The duties of a trustee are more extensive, and not only relate to the dollar and cent view of things; but to their trust is committed the management of the training of our children: our future men and women, our doctors, lawyers, merchants and mechanics, and the future of this community, hangs upon the proper discharge of the duties of those to whom the people of Peterborough commit the education of their sons and daughters. The Board of Trustees have the power of determining the amount necessary for educational purposes for the year, and to this amount the council cannot demur. But this, although important, is the less important part of their duty. The engaging of teachers—the remuneration to be allowed them—the hours of teaching (not more than six), is also determined by them. In fact the whole matter of the education of the youth of the town is committed to their trust for the time being; is it not necessary then to be careful in the choice of those men to whom so much is entrusted. The character of a trustee will be reflected also in the after course of those who are educated in the institution. The bickerings and disagreements of the Board will be reported and copied just as well as the doings of other mortals, and these will effect more and more evil in proportion to the position occupied by those members. The people should therefore elect a man that will know how to conduct himself properly in his general dealings and doings; one whose business talent will be sufficient to ensure a good degree of confidence in the management of the finances, and one whose soul is above bigotry or bias; one who shall do justly, one tempered with moderation and mercy. We warn the people in time. If the fault-findings of the past have to be continued the people will have no one to blame but themselves. Already we have pointed out the opinions held by the community concerning the Board. We trust all care shall be taken to work up the school to what it ought to be, and will be, if undue influence is avoided, proper trustees chosen, and reasonable opportunities given to bring about the desired result.

The New Premier, Sir N. F. Belleau.

Upon the death of the late Premier, it appears there was the usual amount of individualism to be considered, in the formation of a new Ministry. John A. McDonald was first called on, because of his seniority; but it could not be expected that the appointment would be popular. It was found necessary to pass by the three great leaders, Messrs. Brown, Cartier and McDonald, and choose one with whom the whole could work. Sir Narcisse F. Belleau was appointed and sworn into office on Monday as Receiver General; he succeeds Sir E. P. Taché as Prime Minister. Hon. Mr. McDougall has had transferred to him the administration of all educational matters in Upper Canada. Hon. John A. McDonald succeeds Sir E. P. Taché as Minister of Militia. Sir N. F. Belleau, we are told, is a wealthy and respectable French Canadian; he was formerly Speaker of the Upper House, and as such received the honour of knighthood. He would not have been chosen, however, to the Premiership under any other circumstances than the present. We have scarcely heretofore heard of his name on the political arena. He has been chosen in order that men who have hitherto been unable to work together harmoniously may, under him, be enabled to unite without dread of destroying either of the existing parties. The House was prepared to meet according to announcement; and although there appears little for the members to do, we trust that little shall be done well. The Delegation to England will soon report—and who knows what good they may have effected! let us hope, no evil.

Board of School Trustees.

An adjourned meeting was to be held on Tuesday evening, but there was no quorum. Present—Messrs. Cluxton, Edwards, Coulter, Helm and Eastland. Those present amused themselves in a chit-chat concerning teachers, teaching, &c., nothing to the praise of either in the opinion of some present.—There are about ten applications for Miss Hardie's vacated chair, and certainly until something more chaste in composition and better penmanship are exhibited by teachers, little can be said to the praise of many of them. There are honorable exceptions we are glad to say, even in those applications.

Mr. Calcutt, Ashburnham, is now purchasing the raw flax, and is prepared to purchase any quantity. We have seen some straw raised by Mr. Jno. Walton, which, considering the season, is a good article.

The Union School.

This institution will commence labours again on Monday next. The only change that is yet made is in the 3rd department, caused by Miss Hardie's resignation. This division will be under the care of a male teacher in future: let us hope that change will not be needed here for some time again.

There is all the means at command in the Union School to furnish a sound education, and let those means be applied without restriction for a year, till we see what can be done.

It is often used against home institutions that persons are forced to send to distant schools to obtain an education for their children. Has this not always been the case in every country and in every age, and will it not be the case hereafter? Most undoubtedly; and it is no mark of inefficiency in any school. Even here, gentlemen from a distance have been sending their sons.—And only a few days since we have seen letters from some of the first families in Toronto, with its universities, colleges, schools, &c., &c., ad infinitum, desiring to have their sons sent to Peterborough Grammar School. If we reasoned more we would grumble less: let us try it for a season.

Petroleum.

The company here have commenced operations to test the existence of the fluid in this neighbourhood. We trust they may be successful, so that the croakers who have done little to aid the trial, but very much to throw cold water on it, may be silenced. Not that one trial well is sufficient to prove or disprove its existence in this locality, unless indeed that oil be found, which, in that event, would convince the most unbelieving. In all those places where they have bored for oil, numerous wells have been sunk that proved useless, while wells sunk in the immediate vicinity produced oil in paying quantities. Not more than one in ten of the many wells bored have been paying wells, some indeed have been lost labour, producing nothing. If, therefore, the first trial should prove a failure, this would not be enough to prove that petroleum is not to be found in this locality. The Trustees of the company have the general confidence, and we may rely that nothing will be done to involve the company or injure any individual, and the small sums subscribed cannot embarrass any one, even if the whole be a failure. Let the trial be made. We are glad to find that operations have been commenced.

Accidents.

On Saturday last a man named Graham, from the neighbourhood of Lindsay, entered the saw-mill of Messrs. Craigie and Stephenson, Ashburnham, looking for a job of work. While looking at the machinery he carelessly placed his hands near a circular used for edging, and although the saw was right before his face, he allowed his hand unawares to move under it, and received a severe cut across the thumb and inside of the hand and into the fore-finger. One of the Messrs. Stephenson fortunately being present quickly seized the hand, and pressing closely on the wrist prevented the blood from flowing, which it was doing in a stream, until Dr. Kincaid was obtained. He dressed the wound, and there are hopes that the man will be able to use three of his fingers. On Tuesday the wound was progressing favourably.

Last week a man in the employment of Messrs. Hilliard and Snyder, named Graham also, while working among logs had his leg bruised, but nothing very serious was anticipated. On Friday it became evident that the bruise was dangerous, and amputation became necessary. Drs. Burnham and Harvey performed the operation. At last accounts the man was getting along well.

English Elections.

The liberals have been successful in the late elections. There numbers being increased largely in both Great Britain and Ireland. There can be no doubt now of the stability of their principles for some time at least. Mr. Gladstone was rejected at Oxford, but almost immediately returned for Lancashire. The whims of constituencies however are manifest in their choice of representatives. Second rate men being often chosen when first rate and tried men have been rejected. The gain is counted at 26.

Town Council.

There was no meeting on Monday, for want of a quorum. We understand that of late it is difficult to get a quorum at all.—Must the missing ones have their names laid before the public to induce them to do their duty?

Ashburnham Council.

This Council met on Monday evening, but adjourned, there being only three members present—Messrs. Rogers, Bennett and McGregor. The Council will meet again on the first Monday of September.

FAREWELL CONCERT ON FRIDAY EVENING LAST.—Mr. Brown's Farewell Concert came off and was a decided success. The house was crowded to excess, showing a general appreciation of Mr. Brown's past efforts for their pleasure. The songs were well chosen and the singers well received. "Music far away," was charmingly delivered, and this singer was decidedly the "star" of the evening. Several pieces were deservedly encored.

To the Editor of the Peterborough Examiner.

SIR, EDITOR,—I notice from time to time, through the columns of the daily Globe and other papers, the general feeling along the frontier in favor of having a holiday during the passing summer, almost every City, Town and Village along the front has had or is about to have a day for the pleasure of its inhabitants.

Well, Mr. Editor, at the present time business is not very pressing with us here, and as our own plucky little Town is always ready to follow her neighbors in any public act got up for the enjoyment of her inhabitants, I have no doubt she will do so now, if the hint is only thrown out to our City Fathers. Assuming then that we are to have our holiday, would not the completion of laying the Atlantic Cable be a suitable time.

We are sure that it will only require the recommendation of His Worship the Mayor, to be heartily responded to by the inhabitants.

If you think the above few thoughts on the matter worth a corner in your valuable journal I shall feel obliged and am

Yours &c.

HORRIBLE DEATH.—The Kingston News says:—A carter named John Boyd, an old citizen of Kingston, went out to Morton's distillery about noon one day, and fell into one of the vats containing hot 'slops,' which Boyd was in the habit of carting to the city, and was scalded to death. An inquest on the body was called for at four o'clock.

SIGHTS AFOOT.

In a few minutes after leaving Windsor, the ferry-boat struck the wharf at Detroit. The passengers make a rush for terra firma, but discover an obstruction at the gang-way, in the shape of a very short, little, fat man, with a very large stick, grinding his teeries and making the most terrific gesticulations. It appears no person is allowed to land until after the baggage is sent ashore. The man's business was to prevent the egress; and he did it by waving his stick personally and giving them to understand that unless they conformed with the rules, the probability was some person would get hurt. The baggage was sent ashore accordingly, and we were allowed to follow. From the way this wonderful country is harped in your ears from morning till night in Canada, a green-horn would be led to believe that by some unaccountable agency, (some might fancy it the mollifying influence of the genial soil, or the power of matter over mind) man would be transformed from a natural to a supernatural being, as suddenly as the electric shock changes the feeling in the body; that your intellect, your knowledge, wisdom, and, in fact, your very soul is exalted, after getting out of so miserable, backward and degenerate a country. Americans who have sucked the very life blood out of Canada and its people—who have gone there poor and returned rich—will prate to you in this way. You will also find an odd Canadian (simply an apology for one) so ungrateful as to give a cold shoulder to the country that gave him birth, that nourished him in infancy and that protected him through life, declare that he can instantly feel the change. Some people's senses are more acute than others, especially seeing, hearing and smelling. I must acknowledge that I did feel a peculiar sensational feeling shortly after landing, but it was when I was confronted with the weeping emblem of the country. It was that peculiar kind of feeling when the blood becomes partially congealed and almost refuses to course the ordinary channels. It is not unusual to look with pride on the flag of a country, although of a different nation, because of some great benefit to mankind, or for useful and beneficial discoveries in science. At the first sight of this flag you are reminded immediately of the foul, cruel, wanton and inhuman acts of tyranny, perpetrated in its presence and under its sanction for the last four years. The poor emblem hangs on a pole unwilling to stand to the breeze as of yore, bathed in crimson red hot blood, and shedding tears of sorrow and shame, for murdered friends and relatives. It is now justly considered the emblem of despotism—enforcing more absolute tyranny than the emblem that bears the double-headed eagle. This is Detroit the place that in 1812 surrendered as an army of 2500 men, in a strongly fortified post, to a British army of less than half the number, without firing a gun. What lively remembrances and historic recollections could be found to dilate on, if time and space would only admit. This is the oldest settlement in the west, being an ancient French post, intended to connect Canada with Louisiana. Unmistakeable evidences of a once dominant puissance yet exist. The city is beautifully situated on the banks of the river of the same name; it extends for a distance of about three miles, and has a population of about 30,000. The two principal streets are Woodward and Jefferson Avenues; they are paved with round stones and are very wide, in some places about 200 feet. The "Biddell House," a large hotel covering considerable more ground than your market block, and five stories high, is on one of those streets. There are some magnificent private residences, also, on those streets, with extensive grounds beautifully and tastefully laid out. I was very much astonished with the want of animation in the place. I was led to believe that a city of such great dimensions and vast population, situated on the south bank of those great waters that extend one arm to the shore of the Rocky Mountains and rests the other on the Atlantic, must do no ordinary amount of business, and that the air and bustle were unbounded, and, in fact, that the people were so prolific in worldly goods, that it was not uncommon to get property or money for asking. The only place I saw any great signs of business life was at the wharf. A great many persons pass through here, who step off the boat, go straight to the cars, and vice versa, perhaps buy a cup of coffee and a bit-cuit, and are never seen again. A large quantity of goods also pass through here at this point, from New York to the West, and returns. This is what is considered, to a great extent, business, and, without doubt it is; but, I imagine, of not much benefit directly to the place. I did not find any more generous people here than in Canada; they appear fully as close-fisted, quite as penurious, and, on the whole quite as hard to get them to give you anything as in Canada. After a few more hours, I got on board the Michigan Central Railroad cars for Chicago: this road is considered, and very deservedly so, one of the best managed in the West. It is a very pleasant road to travel on, exceedingly smooth and level. It is the regular thoroughfare between the East and the West; the amount of travel is most extraordinary. For a short distance a good section of country; at the distance of seven or eight or ten miles, are thriving villages and towns. The principal places on the way is Ypsilanti, the seat of the State and Normal Schools; Ann Arbour, another seat of learning, the State University being located here; Marshall, Kalamazoo, &c. The distance from Detroit to Chicago is 284 miles, and is travelled in 14½ hours. The land is level, with undulating, with an occasional flat prairie, and also marsh; here and there are dashing waters, beautiful hills and pleasant vales. The crops are only fair, rather inferior to those in your section of the country. Care appears to be the principal agricultural production, other cereals such as wheat, oats, &c., appear very scarce on the fields very small. The farmers say that in consequence of the great amount of rain this season, the wheat was actually sprouting standing in the field, and the potatoes rotting in the ground—so that the prospect of an extensive crop is rather poor. I forgot to mention one place on my way up—I mean Michigan city, a small town in Northern Indiana, and situated on the south-eastern shore of Lake Michigan. Formerly it was intended to build a harbour, (many years ago) make a piece of landing for the great mercantile marine of the lakes and an out-let for the great North west, and thus out-rival Chicago; but, alas! for human aspirations, the go-a-head-ative-money-making Yankee could not see any chance, and emigrated west. Thus, Chicago got a start, kept it, and this place almost sunk into oblivion. Evidences of this great undertaking yet remain. Steps are now being taken to again undertake the enterprise. The cost will be immense, but, there is no doubt, if once completed, it will be of great benefit to the town, and the only place that will now direct any of the Chicago trade. I cannot say that nature has done a great deal for this place. It is situated on a bed of sand. I never saw as much sand in one place before. The hills are mountains of sand; the streets run on beds of sand; the streets, the lanes and beaches are all sand; when "old Sol" sends down his scorching rays it is decidedly hot; when the wind blows, clouds of sand are flying. On the whole it is a pretty sandy place. Yet, sand and all, there are some pretty places. The front street is lined on both sides for nearly a mile with pretty houses, and nicely cultivated grounds, and rows of trees. The people are very kind and hospitable, and from appearances not at all displeased at seeing a live Canadian. While visiting a friend I met a good many of those people which I shall remember with gratitude for their kindness. I had the pleasure of visiting the new state prison located there. My friend and myself, through the kindness of the Deputy Warden, were allowed to go through it, the Warden politely showing us around. It is a vast enclosure of about 8 acres, surrounded by a brick wall about 20 feet high. The place and buildings are yet in their infancy, having been stopped (the work) for some time, on account of some change of administration. I was informed that the present officers in charge are a great improvement on the last, but should there be a change of Government, those men would be exchanged for men perhaps not fit to take charge of a lot of cattle. This is the American doctrine of "availability." There are only at present about 120 prisoners, ten only for life. Were it not for the peculiar style of clothing worn by them (grey and black stripe) they would be taken for a lot of mechanics or laboring men. I think the only things manufactured at present are waggons and barrels; a large farm is also in connection with the prison, and worked by the convicts. Notwithstanding all the sand, the city is one of much importance. The M. C. R. R. passes through it; it is also the terminus of a road running through the interior of the state; quite a stir is made when the trains arrive. There are 6 or 7 churches, and a population of about 4,000. The country is poor within ten miles of the town.

THE GREAT CABLE.—The telegraphic news reports the discovery of a defect in the main cable being connected with the shore end. Some portion of the line had to be overhauled, and the defective piece cut out. On the 25th, according to telegram from the Great Eastern to Valentia, all was going well.

Principal's Report.

GENTLEMEN,—

I have the honor to present the following Report on the examination held at the Peterboro' Grammar and Union School, on the 26th, 27th, 28th, 29th and 30th of June, 1865:

PRIMARY DIVISION.—(Boys and Girls)—Mrs. Flavelle Teacher. Pupils present, 60. In this division the pupils were orally examined in Reading, and Spelling. The Reading and Spelling of the 3rd class were pretty good; in the 2nd class, scarcely good. 1st class only commencing. In clearness of pronunciation and loudness of the voice, all the pupils were deficient. The answering in Arithmetic (merely adding three or four figures) was tolerably good.

SECOND DIVISION.—(Girls)—Miss Borrowman, Teacher. Pupils present, 32. The pupils in this division were orally examined in Reading, Spelling, Geography, (exercises on map of Europe) Grammar, (as far as verbs,) Arithmetic, (to Reduction) and Writing. The pupils of the 2nd class were deficient in Reading; the Spelling, fair. Reading and Spelling of the 2nd class more satisfactory than in advanced class. Both classes lacked clearness of pronunciation, and loudness of the voice. The Reading and Spelling of the 1st class, pretty good. In Geography and Grammar there were great varieties; the general answering, however, was pretty good. In Arithmetic, the answering for the most part was prompt. The Writing, not good.

THIRD DIVISION.—(Boys)—Miss Hardie, Teacher. Number of pupils present, 30. The pupils in this division were orally examined in Reading, Spelling, Geography, (exercise on the Map of the World) Grammar, (as far as Verbs) Arithmetic (to Reduction) and Writing. The Reading and Spelling of the pupils of the 3rd class, pretty good; of the 2nd class, bad; and of the 1st class, bad. The answering in Geography, Grammar and Arithmetic, bad. The Writing, bad,—one or two showed a little improvement.

FOURTH DIVISION.—[Boys.]—Mr. Peters, Teacher. Number of Pupils present 28. The subjects for the oral examinations in this division were, Reading, Spelling, History, (from Henry the Second to Edward first) Geography, (exercises on maps of Europe, Asia, and Western Canada) Grammar and analysis of simple sentences Mercantile and Mental Arithmetic and Writing. The Reading of the pupils of the 3rd class, good; the Spelling, fair. The Reading and Spelling of the 2nd class were not good. In the answering in Geography, Grammar and Analysis, there were great variations. Some of the pupils answered well. No classes examined in Mercantile Arithmetic, the pupils being absent. In Mental Arithmetic (most of the pupils absent) the answering of two, good. The Writing was pretty fair.

FOURTH DIVISION.—[Girls.]—Miss Beattie, Teacher. No. present, 29. The subjects for the oral examinations in this division were, Reading, Spelling, History, (from invasion of Britain by Cæsar to end of Edward 1st) Grammar and analysis, Geography, (exercise on maps of Europe, Asia, Africa, America, and Western Canada) English Composition, Mercantile and Mental Arithmetic and Writing. The Reading of the pupils of the 3rd class was very good, shewing that very great pains must have been bestowed on their training. The Spelling, [including prefixes and affixes] very good. The Reading and Spelling of the 2nd class, good. The answering of the 3rd class in Geography, was very good, evincing a thorough knowledge of the subject; the answering of the same class in Grammar and Analysis, was very creditable. The pupils shewed that they had a good knowledge of the English language, as far as they were examined. This division also answered well in Mental Arithmetic, but was not examined in Mercantile Arithmetic, for lack of time. The answering of the 2nd class in Geography, good. Not examined in Grammar and Arithmetic for want of time. Their English composition, in diction, was very good for girls of their age. The Writing, fair. The general answering of the different classes was creditable, and does great honor to Miss Beattie, the teacher, who must have bestowed much pains on their training.

FIFTH DIVISION.—Mr. Blaiscker, Teacher. Number present, 10. The pupils in this division were orally examined in History, [Ancient Fifth Book] Geography, Mathematics [Sullivan's], Mercantile and Mental Arithmetic and Writing. The answering in History and Geography was pretty good; and in Mercantile and Mental Arithmetic, very satisfactory. The solutions of the problems, clear and prompt. The Mathematical classes in this division were not, I regret to say, examined.

FIFTH DIVISION.—Miss Kyle, Teacher. Number of pupils present, 36. The subjects for the oral examination in this division were Reading, Spelling, History, (Roman, Saxon, and early Norman periods, Fifth Book Ancient History,) Geography, Mathematics, (Sullivan's) Grammar and Analysis, English Composition, French, Botany, Latin, (Grammar and Arnold's First Book) Mercantile and Mental Arithmetic, Algebra, Euclid and Natural Philosophy. The general answering of the pupils in History (Modern), Geography, Grammar and Analysis, Mercantile and Mental Arithmetic, was very good, and reflects great credit on Miss Kyle the Teacher, who must have bestowed great pains on their mental training. The pupils evinced a good knowledge of the different subjects on which they were examined. The Rev. Mr. Gilmour, who assisted to examine the French classes, says in his memorandum:—"Very good translation; they parsed well, and well acquainted with the grammar—read with ease." Col. Haultain who examined the classes in Reading and Spelling, says in his report:—"I was much pleased with the general reading of this division." The gentlemen who examined the Drawings and Writing, spoke very favorably of the proficiency which the pupils had made in both. The classes in this division were not examined in Book-keeping, Natural Philosophy, Latin and Mathematics, for want of time. The English Composition, very good.

GRAMMAR SCHOOL.—In this department the pupils were only partially examined in Greek and Latin in the forenoon, as no one attended in the afternoon, the classes were not examined. The Rev. Messrs. Burnham and Roger, and Mr. Coulter were present in the forenoon. The answering of the pupils as far as they were examined, I consider satisfactory.

In conclusion, I beg to state that on the whole, the answering of the girls, in both Miss Beattie's and Miss Kyle's Divisions, was decidedly superior to that of the boys. I regret that I cannot report favourably of the general improvement in the answering of the Boys. At the late midsummer examination, very few of the parents of the pupils, attended. This apparent apathy on the part of the parents of the pupils, and others who should both feel and take a deep interest in the education of the youth of this country, I consider highly culpable.

I am, Gentlemen,

Yours respectfully,

JOHN KING, A. M.

Rector

THE HOUSE OF MR. G. N. SANDERS ENTERED.—On Saturday night between the hours of nine and ten o'clock, Dr. L. G. Contri, son-in-law of Mr. G. Sanders, and a friend, entered the dwelling of Mr. Sanders, on McGill College Avenue, Plate Ste Sophie, and found that the rest of the family were absent on a visit to a gentleman's house in the neighbourhood. Dr. Contri and friend remained in the parlour a few moments, when the doctor went down to the cellar to obtain some ice, where he saw two men concealed. He immediately grappled with them and called for his friend in the parlour above. The struggle was severe for a few moments, when the ruffians succeeded in shaking him off and making good their escape. In the meantime the gentleman upstairs hearing the noise, proceeded thereto, and from the back yard, started in that direction, but had scarcely got out of the door when he was set upon by several men and severely beaten. The whole party afterwards succeeded in making good their escape, there being no police in the neighbourhood at the time. It is possible their object was the abduction of Mr. G. N. Sanders, the reward of $25,000 not yet having been withdrawn by the United States authorities.—Montreal Gazette.

ANOTHER FEMALE OUTRAGE.—An atrocious outrage was committed upon the person of a young lady residing just beyond Middlefield, Conn., while walking through the mountains on a visit to some of her friends. She was attacked by three persons in soldier's uniform, who dragged her into a neighbouring wood, stripped her of her clothing, and then successively ravished her person. The fiends then carried off the wearing apparel of their victim, leaving her in an insensible and entirely exposed condition. When consciousness returned to the unfortunate one, discovering her condition, she remained in the woods for quite a while, after which she succeeded in attracting the attention of a gentleman driving by, who immediately came to her assistance, covering her nakedness with his coat and vest as well as he could, and thus carried her home. —From the Hartford Courant, July 27.

Monaghan, August 7th, 1865.

The Council met at one o'clock. Present, the Reeve, and Messrs. Collins, Robson and Lockie. Minutes of last meeting read and confirmed.

COMMUNICATIONS.

From Theodore Clementi, Esq., informing the Council that at the request of some of the rate payers of the 10th concession he begged to inform them that he would furnish, deliver and plant a stone monument on the governing boundary line of said concession, for $22, or that if placed on the spot by the settlers, then he would do so for $20.

LATEST FROM QUEBEC.

THE MINISTERIAL CRISIS.

GENERAL GRANT AND MEXICO.

It appears that the Governor General, on the death of Colonel Taché, was much embarrassed how to proceed to keep the coalition together. He finally concluded that security was the only principle to guide him in a choice. Accordingly, Mr. McDonald being the senior councillor, the Governor sent for him, and stated his desire that the Cabinet should remain without change, and that Mr. McDonald, as senior, should take Taché's place.

The Governor then sent for Mr. Brown, and made the same statement. Mr. Brown immediately tendered his resignation, declaring that such a step would be fatal to the coalition. He stated that the selection of either Mr. McDonald, Mr. Cartier, or himself, (Mr. Brown) would have that effect, and that the only course was to select some member of the Legislative Council, under whom all three sections of the Coalition could act, and who would see the compact faithfully carried out.

The Governor declined to accept Mr. Brown's resignation, and sent again for Mr. Macdonald, and negotiations were then opened between Messrs. Macdonald and Brown, finally resulting in the selection of Sir Narcisse Belleau as Col. Taché's successor.

The whole correspondence will, of course, be laid before Parliament.

The Speech to-morrow will simply state that Parliament is called in compliance with the promise at the prorogation, that it would be summoned immediately after the return of the delegates from England. The Report of the delegates will be submitted, and the completion of all unfinished business recommended. The Americans will be congratulated on the termination of the civil war, and the militia commended for promptly volunteering for duty on the frontier.

It is expected that the Address will pass both Houses to-morrow. As soon as the Address is adopted, the Report of the England delegates and other important documents will be placed on the table.

Lieut. Gen. Grant has been a great lion yesterday and to-day. Lord Monck, Gen. Mitchell, Gen. Doyle, Admiral Hope, and most members of the Cabinet called on him to-day and paid their respects.

General Grant and staff were expected to dine at the Government House to-night, but were compelled to leave by steamer for Montreal this afternoon. Generals Michel and Doyle accompanied him to Montreal. He stays at the St. Lawrence Hall Hotel, leaving to-morrow evening by Grand Trunk for Niagara Falls, and will probably call at Toronto.

While here General Grant spoke without reserve to several persons on the Mexican question. He said he had placed one hundred thousand men on the Rio Grande as an army of observation, and that the French would have to leave Mexico peaceably, if they chose, but forcibly if they refused. The situation of Mexico he looked upon as one which had been created by the rebellion and the rebellion would really not be overcome until Maximillian was compelled to depart, and the Mexican people allowed to organize a Government without foreign interference.

With regard to the relations between the United States and England, he did not think the present friendly state would be disturbed, unless complications ensued by reason of England's mixing herself up with France in the Mexican question.

Funeral Obsequies of Sir E. P. Taché.

ST. THOMAS, August 3.—The funeral services of Sir E. P. Taché, both religious and military, took place to-day, and were of an imposing character. Several thousands were present, quite filling the village. The body was borne from the residence of deceased to the church at eleven o'clock. The pall bearers from Lower Canada were:—Hon Messrs. Cartier, Galt, Chapais, and Langevin, with the County members, Beaudoin, and Dr. Sewet of Quebec; from Upper Canada, Hon Messrs. McDonald, Brown, Campbell, and McDougall. Grand Vicar Lenoault chanted mass and pronounced a very just eulogium on the deceased. There were present from Montreal, Hon. Messrs. Quesnel and McGee, Messrs. Cherrier, Duverney, Daly, Major McPherson, Starnes, and several others. The chief mourners were the two sons of the deceased, two sons in law, Dr. Marmette, and Judge Ouimet, Dr. Taché, his nephew, and other relatives. A very large representation of both the Bar and citizens of Quebec arrived in a train of twenty cars.

11 a. m.—The special train from Quebec with the Cabinet, the military and militia detachments, and civilians from the capital, as well as many other gentlemen who occupied two cars of this morning's train from Montreal and other places westward, arrived safely at this city at 11 o'clock. They are now marching down from the station to the village in a long line,—the Fusiliers and their band taking the lead. The town is thronged with visitors from all the adjacent parishes, and great numbers of the country people of both sexes have assembled to see the arrival of the Cabinet and officials, military and civilians, and the last honors paid to the deceased. The day is beautiful, and though the rays of a hot sun are beaming down, and we are all in sable attire, a light westerly wind fans the air from time to time, and makes the temperature almost pleasant.

1 p. m. The appointed hour having arrived for the funeral ceremony, the cavalcade was formed at the residence of the Taché family, on the opposite side of the main road to where the Church is situated, and at a short distance only from the sacred edifice, which is open and draped in black. The mixed party of military forming the firing party, and the band of the 9th Regiment, occupied the square facing the church. As he procession moved between their ranks the band played the Dead March in Saul, and the troops stood resting on their arms reversed. The pall was borne by the members of the Cabinet, of which Col. Taché was the Chief up to the moment of his death. Nine of the Cabinet are present. The Church bell tolled as the corpse approached. The interior was darkened with black hangings, and the coffin was placed upon an elevated catafalque, surrounded by four rows of innumerable tapers; the mingling of the dim candle light from the many tapers and chandeliers around, with that of the sun's rays, occasionally let in from without, producing a remarkable effect. The imposing and simple solemn service of mass over, and the remains having been deposited in their last resting place, the detachment of Royal Fusiliers fired the customary volleys over the grave, and the large assemblage began to disperse; those from town preparing at once to return.

The Atlantic Cable.

The special correspondent of the London Times, writing from on board the "Great Eastern," gives the following particulars of the arrangements respecting the vessel itself:—

Capt. Anderson and his officers have taken every possible precaution as to her stowage and general equipment. From the outside she seems at the first glance to be almost alarmingly deep in the water. It is, however, less her actual depth which creates this unpleasant impression than the appearance which she presents of "sagging" amidships. Of course this awkward and most unpleasant appearance is merely an optical delusion, no doubt created by her deep trim astern. There is a difference of nearly five feet between her fore and aft.

Astern she draws 35 feet of water, while under the bows it is only 30. Levels have been carefully taken to ascertain if any deflection was perceptible under the ponderous weight she bears. No sign of change, however, has been observable. Before any of the cable was coiled on board, 1,400 tons of water were pumped into the after-most compartments of the ship, and 1,400 tons into the compartments most forward. Under these weights at her extremities the "Great Eastern" deflected nearly an inch and a half, recovering herself directly the water was pumped out. This proof of strength is, of course, very satisfactory. It would have been more so, however, if the test strains employed bore a closer relation to the enormous weights which she has now on board. All told, the "Great Eastern" will leave the Thames with rather more than 25,000 tons in her, a burden almost as great as the whole fleet with which Nelson fought the battle of Trafalgar could have carried. All the weights are stowed as high as possible to counteract to the utmost the "Great Eastern's" most unpleasant tendency to roll. All the compasses now on board were at first considerably affected by the magnetic influence of the cable. Some deviated as much as 32 points, while others strange to say, though almost similarly situated with regard to the tanks of wire, varied as little as six. Every one of them has now been carefully adjusted, and every one of them will again need readjustment when the cable is out of the "Great Eastern" at Newfoundland. All the running gear has been rove off from the rigging, so as to obviate the possibility of anything falling from aloft into the paying out machinery. Some of the yards have been lowered, and scarcely a spar has sails. The village of huts and workshops has disappeared from her decks, but their places have been more than occupied by shanty coverings of various kinds, leading troughs, buoy rope wheels, gigantic buoys for floating the cable at various depths from 600 to 3,000 fathoms, and, above all, the whole space of what in other vessels would be the quarter-deck is occupied by the paying-out apparatus. The praise which was at first bestowed upon the simple efficiency of this machinery has been amply vindicated by its every-day working. As far as can be known from mere preliminary trial it is absolutely perfect."

Jeff. Davis Meeting in New York.

Mr. Robert Brown, who was present at the Jeff Davis meeting in this city the other day makes affidavit to the following statement of facts:—The meeting was first composed of citizens of New York, when, at the suggestion of some one, several south ern gentlemen outside were invited inside when the doors were closed. There were then ten men present.—The object of the meeting being to raise funds to pay the expense of defending Davis, a committee was appointed for that purpose consisting of Mayor Gunther, who was not present, Carlos Butterfield, Theodore Martin, Messrs. Douglas, and Clancy. A general conversation ensued. They all agreed that the Davis trial was the most important one in the world's history. Mr. Cutler quoted from the Declaration of Independence to show that the Southern states had a right to secede. Other New Yorkers took the same ground, citing the action and opinions of citizens of New York and Massachusetts when the constitution was formed. Mr. Livingston, of Alabama, read from several free State constitutions the expressed right to secede. It was said the effect of the trial of Davis would be a revolution of sentiment everywhere in favor of the South. It would be proved on trial that the secession cause was right and entitled to the sympathies of the world. Mr. Livingston declared that in 15 years the man that now accuses the South of having committed treason will be looked upon as a madman and a fool. One New Yorker denounced the execution of Mrs. Surratt as a cool and deliberate murder. Mr. Martin said the court had no legal jurisdiction, and that the execution was deliberate murder. Mr. Livingston said several Englishmen had told him that this cruel murder would send a thrill of horror through Europe, and the how that would be sent back would so cower and terrify the American government that it will be afraid to bring Davis to trial! He believed that the intention was to keep him lingering in prison. His friends must keep agitating the matter until government is forced to put him on trial. Mr Livingston said western soldiers hated negroes so that they had lately killed six cold blood more than one hundred. He also said Alabama would send a solid delegation of staunch and true Southern men to Congress; that the feeling is universal in the South that no damned Yankee must be allowed a foothold in the South. Mr. Livingston informed the meeting that he was on his way to England to raise funds in behalf of Mr. Davis, and he was confident he would be able to raise the requisite amount. A New Yorker said the amount could be raised in New York city.

OUTRAGE ON TOM THUMB.—A recent attempt was made in Chicago to rob the General of his jewels, of which he has a large and costly collection, the burglars broke into the dressing room attached to where he was performing, and ransacked every thing they could lay their hands on, and among the articles stolen was a lot of the "Canadian Pain Destroyer," with which the General had supplied himself for the cure of coughs, colds, cramps in the stomach, lame back and sides, &c. Sold by all Medicine Dealers at 25 cts per bottle.

THE WORLD ON FIRE!—Geology and chemistry prove as conclusive, and even more irrefutably than the holy writ, that the destruction of this great world in the course of time must come by fire. The bowels of the earth are now one vast crater of fire, and although we cannot alter it, yet we have he consolation, when we have a cough or cold, of being soon cured by using Bryan's Pulmonic Wafers, only 25 cents a box.

PRESCOTT, C. W., Dec. 8th, 1859.

Messrs. S. W Fowle & Co., Boston.

Gentlemen:—

Being solicited by your Travelling Agent, for an expression of opinion of Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry. I with pleasure assert that it is, in my belief, the best remedy before the public for coughs and pulmonary complaints.

Having tested the article with myself and family, in case of severe coughs and colds, for years, with uniform and unexceptionable success, I unhesitatingly recommend it with full confidence in its merits.

Yours truly,
ALFRED HOOKER.

SEWING MACHINE!
COMPANY.
627 BROADWAY, NEW-YORK.

THE BUTTON HOLE is made by this entirely simple and novel machine, are not only equal to the best hand-made in the pearl or right side, but greatly surpassing them in beauty on the wrong side, which is formed by a beautiful braid stitch, made by an extra stitch, which no hand made button-hole possesses; thereby imparting to the same a much greater strength, which renders cording or barring altogether unnecessary.

One Needle and Two Threads are only Used.

Unlike other Sewing Machines it manufactures its own Braid and Cord.

The best Merchant Tailors freely admit that its beauty, finish and strength cannot be attained by the most skilful hand.

Simplicity is one of its great merits, therefore not liable to get out of order, and it can be worked with ease by any young lady, who will, after a few days' experience, make from 1,000 to 1,200 perfect button-holes in one day.

This is the only machine produced that will throw a stitch over the edge, so as to bind and cover it in a manner indispensible for Button-holes, Cording and Braiding, each of which can be done with colored, shaded or chine silks, and produce a fabrique of varied colors unexcelled for beauty and taste.

To Ladies at home, Dress, Mantilla and Cloak makers, Shoemakers, Tailors, Hatters, Bookbinders, Saddlers, &c., &c., it is indispensable; it is also admitted to be of great value, to other branches as it Braids, Embroiders, and Cords plain and fancy on all kinds of Cloths, Cassimers, Linen, Velvet Leather, &c., &c.

ROOM PAPER,

AN endless variety of patterns, from the cheapest to the best, at the EXAMINER Book Store, Simcoe street, Peterborough.

'No, indeed!' I echoed. 'I'll have your room ready for him in five minutes, Gerald,' and, leaving them together, I went to my cousin's room. The bed-clothes were tossed down in a pile on the floor, and although Miss Leslie says we mustn't say *mean*s, I am afraid no other word will describe the state of that bed. I had never made a bed; all my work here had been in the dress making department, but I was determined to make that bed; so I went to work. I am very small even for seventeen. Many a girl of thirteen could look over my head, and I am slight as well as short. Fancy me, then, trying to reach up to an old-fashioned high bedstead. I scrambled up until I stood on the bed, and beat it up by dint of kicking it and plunging into it, till the feathers lay in a great round ball in the centre. Then, still keeping my stand on the mattress near the foot board, I dragged up the heavy sheets, the blankets, pillows, and bolster fixing the latter into their places that I might not step on the feathers. It was a queer looking bed, but I did not stay to admire it, and all flushed as I was, I went back to Aunt Fanny's room.

Gerald took the doctor in, and I could hear the smothered laughter which greeted my efforts.

'Looks like an enraged snow bank with its back up,' said Gerald.

'I shall have to roll myself into a tight ball, and jump into the middle of it,' said the doctor.

'Like a Dutch bed, where your head and feet stick out at the ends.'

'I would be jolly if I could coil up like a snake, now.'

Mentally resolving to turn my attention to bed making at the earliest opportunity, I threw myself down beside Aunt Fanny to watch her.

I heard Gerald go down stairs to finish the night on the settee in the kitchen, and, creeping into the entry, I tossed two pillows and a blanket down on his head as he passed under the banister where I stood.

'Thank you!' he said, throwing them over his arm. 'You are the good genius of sleepy folks,' and, with a saucy laugh over the recollection of his own bed, he went into the kitchen.

I needed no call to send me down stairs in the morning, but hearing auntie still asleep, I arranged my dress and went into the kitchen. Gerald was up before me, and we prepared, together, a most substantial breakfast before the doctor made his appearance.

'Well, nurse,' was his greeting; 'how's your patient?'

'Still asleep!'

'You must have made her toddy pretty strong,' he said, with dancing eyes.

'Oh, Amy is a liberal provider,' said Gerald; 'when she cooks rice, for instance.'

'Now, Gerald!' I cried.

'Don't mind him,' said the doctor; 'what splendid coffee! Yours, Amy?'

'Yes; Gerald taught me to make it, or rather to grind it.'

'There is no great art in that,' said the doctor, taking a cake from the pile before him.

'It don't come naturally, though,' I said, gravely.

'I must go to Woodtown this morning, Amy, if you can get along alone,' said Gerald. 'Can you have dinner later, say two o'clock?'

'Yes, glad of the extra time.'

The doctor left me some powders, with directions about diet; forbade my allowing Aunt Fanny to rise, and promised to call the next day.

Here was a predicament. Gerald gone, Aunt Fanny asleep, and I to do the work. One week of errant girl duties had by no means prepared me for the whole responsibility of the house, and I felt rather dismayed. Fortunately, my aunt had a woman to take her washing, and I had a supply of clean clothes to start on. One week had drenched two wrappers, modelled two greasy three muslin dresses, and made a mountain of soiled things. I never passed the stove without carrying off a reminiscence on my dress, the pots and kettles left traces of my acquaintanceship on everything of mine they touched; and washing dishes invariably deluged me with greasy water. I had left a piece of trimming or muslin on several nails, and the wood-shed bare floating banners in honor of victorious wrenches given to my dresses or skirts. A month of this life would make me a walking rag bag, for I had no materials in my summer wardrobe fit for the warfare. Never mind! Dinner was to be cooked and I was to perform the task.

Jerry had plucked a pair of fat fowls the night before, and I knew that auntie intended them for dinner. I looked at them, as they hung in the spring-house, wondering how people could cook them, when I remembered that we had roast mutton a day or two before. I had seen that prepared, therefore I could cook chickens. Their heads were off, so I carried them up to the house to roast. I washed them very clean, laid them in the dripping pan, sprinkled some flour over them, put on salt and pepper, put some water in the pan, and shoved them into the oven. Cabbages and corn I could cook, so I resolved to serve them with the chickens. This off my mind, I went to Aunt Fanny's room. She was awake, complaining of headache and sore throat. The doctor had given me directions for the feverish symptoms, so I gave her a powder and told her she was to lie still. All my medical skill was exhausted, when I mixed some vinegar and water to lay on her forehead, but the grateful smile, when the cool bandages touched her hot head, was my reward.

Gerald came in about two o'clock, and I dished up my dinner. The fowls were browned to an exquisite color, and looked delicious, and we sat down contentedly.

'What is it, Gerald?'

His old twinkle was in his eye.

'I guess you forgot to draw these chickens.'

'Draw them?'

'Yes, take out their internal machinery.'

I beat a hasty retreat up stairs, and did not come down again. How Gerald dined I don't know, but I made my dinner after he left, on corn and butter.

The next day a strong, hearty country woman came to take my aunt's place, leaving me free for nursing duties. It was not unnecessary. My aunt grew worse as the day drew to a close, and the night found her in a high, delirious fever. Four weary weeks of watching made my cousin and I close, dear friends, and when at last the invalid was able to sit up and bear conversation, we had learned that life looked bright to us both only on condition that we could pass along its paths together. My dear father came down in answer to Gerald's letter, and one week at the farm-house decided him. A brave, honest heart was what he most wished in his little girl's protector, and he said, tearfully, 'So good a son must be a good husband.'

Aunt Fanny's remark was all her own.

'Well, Amy, Jerry's a good boy, though how you'll ever keep house is a puzzle to me; but these things have to be learned. I'd be over old to begin, but you're younger than I am, so you may perhaps get along.'

We do 'get along,' for Gerald is very kind to me, and will not allow me to be without servants, though I have learned much since that eventful summer. Whenever my husband has a lazy fit, or, what is much more common, a muscle sore one, he says, with the old merry twinkle in his eye:—

'Amy, you will do that—you're younger than I am,' and my brothers have caught the refrain inaccurately, that whenever any of them come to visit us, I am sure to hear,

'Amy, you're younger than I am.'

A Horrible Fate.—A Man Bitten by a Rattlesnake.

From the Dubuque Times.

One of the most horrible deaths possible for a man to meet is swallowing. Mr. Jacob Shuester, a farmer near Waupaton, in this county, who was bitten last Saturday. Mr. Shuester was in a field mowing hay, when he came upon the snake, and it attempted to crawl away. He cut it in two with his scythe, and as it still gave signs of life, he severed it again within about three inches of the head. It then seemed to be dead, and he stooped down to examine its mouth. He was approaching its mouth with his right hand when the snake sprang and fastened itself to his right thumb. He sprang to his feet, and after several seconds succeeded in loosening its hold and flinging it to the ground. The thumb pained him terribly, and he ran to the house. It immediately commenced swelling; his agony increased. Neighbors were sent for, who applied remedies of which they had heard. But they did no good, and in ten minutes Mr. Shuester commenced vomiting blood. All the remedies suggested by his neighbors having failed, they "doctored" him until last Sunday afternoon, when Dr. Staple of this city was sent for. He arrived at the house, a distance of 25 miles, Sunday evening.—He found him in a horrible state of body and mind. His right arm was swollen to four times its natural size, and was nearly black. This color had reached his breast and was spreading over his system. Below the elbow, the poison had effected the arm so that its surface was covered with large blisters, which were filled with blood. From one of these the doctor drew nearly a tea-cup full of blood. The palm of the sufferer's hand, although calloused by labour, was pulled out like a sugar loaf, and blood continually flowing from the wounded thumb. His breath was awfully offensive.

Mr. Shuester retained all his senses. Before he was bitten he was a large, well-built man, and possessed great strength. He is now haggard, as white as a sheet, and his eyes are ghastly.

Dr. S. administered powerful neutralizing medicines, and Mr. Shuester felt somewhat relieved almost immediately. The doctor stayed with him all night, and left him at ten o'clock yesterday morning with slight hopes of his recovery. When the doctor left Mr. Shuester complained of a feeling which was then coming on him for the first time—a sort of benumbing, yet painfully tingling sensations, which affected his whole body. He was alive a few days ago. Since that time we have not heard from him.

"James," said a schoolmaster to a dull scholar, we have been reading this morning that Noah had three sons, Shem, Ham and Japeth?'

"Sir?" said James, inquiringly.

"Why, James, you have seen that Noah had three sons, and that their names were Shem, Ham and Japeth. These were Noah's sons.

"Sir?" said James, dubiously pondering the full extent of the query.

"Why, James," said the preceptor: "don't you know who the father of Shem, Ham and Japeth was, after I've told you so much?"

"No, sir—I d'know!"

"You are very dull, James—very! You know Mr. Smith, don't you, that lives next to your house?"

"Sartain!"

"Very well; Mr. Smith has three boys, William, Joseph and Henry. Who is their father?"

"Mr. Smith?" exclaimed James instantly. "I guess I know that!"

"Certainly. Now, this is exactly the same thing. You see, as we have been reading, that Noah had three sons, like Mr. Smith. Now, who was the father of Noah's three sons?"

James hesitated a minute, and then as if the difficult question had been suddenly solved in his mind, he exclaimed:—

"I know now: Mr. Smith!"

OLD MAIDS.—Many of the satirical aspersions cast upon old maids tell more to their credit than is generally imagined. Is a woman remarkably neat in her person, she will certainly die an old maid. Is she frugal in her expenses, and exact in her domestic concerns, "she is cut out for an old maid." And if she is kind and humane to the animals about her, nothing can save her from the appellation of "an old maid." In short, we always found that neatness, modesty, economy, and humanity, are the never failing characteristics of an old maid.

A cowardly fellow having spoken impertinently to a gentleman, received a violent box of the ear. He demanded whether that was meant in earnest. 'Yes, sir,' replied the other, without hesitation. 'The coward turned away, saying, I am glad of it, sir for I do not like such jests.'

Samuel Sly, an old man in prison at New Haven, for murder, starved himself to death and died on Friday. He retained his perceptions of all that was going on around him to the last; retaining, also, his impression that he was the prophet Elijah.

A Greek maid, being asked what fortune she would bring her husband, replied: "I will bring him what gold cannot purchase—a heart unspotted, a virtue without stain, which is all that descended to me from my parents."

"Suicide is becoming very prevalent in my city, said a gentleman to an inhabitant of a neighboring town. "Well really, sir, I don't know of any city where it could prevail with greater advantage to the world at large.

British Pearls.—Tacitus says they were common in his time. They may still occasionally be met with, though rare. The best kinds are—a good wife, a thorough cob, a bottle of forty port, and a perfect beefsteak.

A STRANGE ANOMALY!—A man with a womanly heart; a heart which, despite all its world-scars, is, at the depth, tender and pure as any maiden's. There are such, thank God! but they are few indeed.

A wealthy but ignorant farmer, at a recent town meeting in England, moved with great dignity. "That the meeting now adjourn ipse dixit." The motion was unanimously carried.

Large license is accorded to beauty.—Every woman can venture to be saucy if she pleases, but not if she displeases.

Credit has been defined as "a wise provision by which constables and sheriffs get a living."

How Long to Make Plow Beams.

While there are various ways among some manufacturers of plows, for determining the correct length of a beam, many plow makers have a regular rule for fixing its length, and so every beam is made "by guess." If a beam looks too long, it is cut off. There is a correct length for every plow beam, and if that length be increased or diminished, the draft, or "balance" of the plow will be incorrect. We have ever maintained, that if a plow is constructed on correct philosophical and mathematical principles, with the beam of the right length, and the draught properly adjusted at the clevis, it will run without holding and plow well, unless some obstruction throws it out. We have made inquiry of manufacturers for more than twenty years, concerning the correct length for plow beams, and found it all guess work in every instance but the following. Solomon Mead, New Haven, Ct., communicates to us a rule which he has adopted in determining the length of beams, for his conical-mold-board plows. In order to put the principle to a correct test, we visited his farm and had his No. 6 adjusted to run about 5 or 6 inches deep and to cut 10 or 11 inches in width. The draught ring was fixed in the middle of the end of the beam. Having adjusted it as nearly right as practicable we let it run alone, and plowed around the land some six or eight times in succession, without touching either of the handles, except at the ends of the land, in turning out and setting in. As the principle is not covered by a patent any one may adopt it.

This is the rule: Hold one end of a ten-foot pole, with no sag in it, on the share or mold board, at the supposed centre of resistance, a point about 2 inches higher than the sole of the plow, and elevate the other end 4 feet and 2 inches—about the height of a horse's shoulders. If the beam is of correct length, a produced horizontal line (say the edge of a 2-foot rule) crossing the end of the beam in the middle will touch the edge of the pole. If the length of the beam be increased, the forward end must be elevated, in order to be in the correct line of draught. When a plow is properly balanced, it will run as straight as the team travels, without holding. But when it turns quickly aside, either to the right or left, and the plowman is required to hold it constantly in position, it is a certain evidence that there is an imperfection in the mechanical construction of some part of the plow, or it is incorrectly adjusted as to the clevis, gauge wheel, length of traces or draught chain.

What is "One-Horse Power?"

The use of the term "horse power" is very common, yet few, except good mechanics and engineers attach a definite meaning to it, but regard it as indicating loosely about the power which one horse would exert. It is, however, when used in the sense in our consideration, as definite as possible, and means the power required to lift 33,000 pounds avoirdupois one foot high in one minute.

A horse hitched to the end of a rope over a pully one foot in diameter placed over a deep well, travelling at the rate of about 2¼ miles per hour, 220 feet per minute, will draw up 150 pounds the same distance he travels. The force thus exerted is called in mechanics a "horse power," it being an approximation to the average amount of continuous power it is fair to demand of a strong horse. If we multiply the weight raised (150) by the number of feet it was raised per minute (220) the product will be the number of pounds which the same power would raise only one foot high in the same length of time. (33,000 pounds.)

The dynamometer is an instrument made for measuring power, particularly that exerted in drawing. Those used for testing the draft of agricultural implements are simply very strong spring balances, or spring steelyards, graduated to indicate the power required to raise any weight, within reasonable limit, at the rate of 2¼ miles per hour. When we apply the dynamometer, in ascertaining the weight of machines, if the index indicates 150 pounds, it is shown that the horse is required to draw just as hard as he would do, if raising 150 pounds out of a well with a rope over a pulley one foot in diameter, at the rate of 2¼ miles per hour, and so for other weights.

The velocity at which a team moves is to be considered, as well as the weight to be raised, or the load to be drawn. If a horse travels faster than 2¼ miles per hour, while raising 150 pounds out of a well, he exerts more than one-horse power. If he walks slower than this, he does not exert a force equal to one horse power.

In ascertaining the draught of a plough, or reaper and mower, by driving faster than 2¼ miles per hour, the dynamometer would indicate more than the correct draught; and by driving slower, the draught would appear to be less than it really is. In testing the draught of machines a train should always move at the rate of 2¼ miles per hour, or 220 feet per minute, which is the universally accepted rate with reference to which dynamometers are graduated, and an easy one to which to approximate in driving almost any kind of team.

Many people have supposed that 300 pounds—two-horse power—represented the same force that a team would exert when dragging 300 pounds along on the ground. A horse can haul 600 pounds on the hard ground with ease; but he could not draw hard enough on the dynamometer to mark more than 250 to 300 pounds, except for a few minutes. The power of a man is estimated at one-fifth of a horse power.

A Home-made Hearth Rug.

A lady subscriber to the American Agriculturist writes: "Procure a coffee sack, tack it tightly on a frame of the size you wish your rug. Get a blacksmith to make you a crotchet-needle about the size of a husking-peg, tapering rather more.—With charcoal and rule "lay out" on the sack the figure you wish for your rug. Gather all the old woolen rags such as are too much worn for carpet, Thrums, bits of wool, etc. Tear these in strips and with the hook in the right hand, hold the strip beneath in the left, thrust the hook through the meshes of the sack, catch the rag and pull it through a half inch, then through again as near to the first as possible. By sorting the different colors and following the patterns, a very beautiful article can be made. After it is all filled up in this way, take a pair of sheep-shears or common scissors, large size, and shear it all off to an even surface. Old dresses are the best; heavy cloth will not work in well. I have seen such rugs in handsome parlors, and when tastefully made they are equal to any."

CONTENTMENT.—Content converts everything near it to the highest perfection it is capable of. It irradiates every metal and enriches lead with the properties of gold; it brightens smoke into flame, flame into light, and light into glory; a single ray of it dissipates pain and melancholy from the person on whom it falls. In short, its presence naturally changes every place into a kind of heaven.

See what the most popular and widely circulated periodicals say of our Establishment:

From the "Dispatch" of February 25, 1865.

We take pleasure in calling the attention of our readers to the announcement of Messrs. Devaugh & Co's Great Sale of Jewelry, Silver Ware, and Fancy Goods, in our advertising columns. We are personally acquainted with the members of this firm and know them to be gentlemen of sterling worth and integrity. Their stock of goods, for variety and extent, we have scarcely seen paralleled.

From the "Mirror of Fashion," March 1, 1865.

Messrs. Devaugh & Co's Great Sale of Jewelry, etc, opened on the 15th ult., and we venture to say that no finer display of goods was ever exhibited by an establishment in this city. The ladies thronged their handsome saloons to auction, although the streets were rendered nearly impassable by the melted snow and slush. We predict for them a wonderful success.

From the "Ledger," February 28, 1865.

Our lady friends should visit the extensive establishment of Messrs. Devaugh & Co., No. 15 Maiden Lane, if they wish to indulge themselves with a sight which they will long remember. Such a profusion of elegant Watches, Chains, Rings, Earrings, and, in short, of Jewelry of every name, kind and description, we never before witnessed. Their silver and plated ware is superb and almost casts into the shade the other splendid establishments which have long been the boast of our city. It is estimated that their stock is worth not less than one million of dollars.

ARE YOU IN AGONY?

A WELL SPRING OF HOPE FOR ALL!

CAN BE FOUND IN

Holloway's Pills.

Be of Good Cheer! The Sinking may be Saved!

BY THE USE OF

Holloway's Ointment.

THE history of these great Remedies is the most wonderful medical revelation that the world has ever known. It establishes the all important fact that WHEREVER, and in WHATEVER SHAPE internal diseases exists, the disinfecting, searching and healing properties of the Pills are fully equal to its subjection and cure, and that, with the Ointment, they are

The Great Ambassadors of Health to all Mankind.

This is not a history written by one man, or even derived from the experiences of one nation. It consists of a compilation of testimonials from the sick of every country—an unimpeachable record, the like of which has never been adduced in favor of any discovery or invention since time began.

These Mighty Healers, World Known and World Tried are a Boon to the Sick

The want of a sterling medicinal to meet the ills and necessities of the suffering portion of humanity, and one entirely free from mineral and other deleterious particles, was severely felt till this all powerful medicine was ushered into the world. HOLLOWAY'S INVALUABLE PILLS have become the HOUSEHOLD REMEDY of all nations. Their attributes is to PREVENT as well as to cure; they attack the BLOOD on ROOT of the complaint, and thus, by removing the hidden cause of disease, re-invigorate and restore the drooping energies of the system, assisting nature in her task of VITAL and FUNCTIONARY REFORMATION.

Disorders of the Stomach

Are the sources of the deadliest maladies. Their effect is to vitiate all the fluids of the body, and to send a poisoned stream through all the channels of circulation. Now, what is the operation of the Pills? They cleanse the bowels, regulate the liver, bring the relaxed or irritated stomach into a natural condition, and, acting through the secretive organs FROM THE BLOOD ITSELF, change the state of the system from sickness to health, by exercising a simultaneous and wholesome effect upon all its parts and functions.

Woman in all her Difficulties

Is invited to test the regulating and restorative powers of this harmless but effective preparation. At the two epochs of life in which the female system undergoes the most important and critical changes, the Pills will prove a positive safeguard against evil consequences. They are also confidently recommended as a specific in every disorder to which females are exclusively subject.

Be it Understood,

That the above statements can at all times be verified by the written testimony (extending through a quarter of a century) of tens of thousands of unimpeachable witnesses.

Bilious Maladies, &c., &c.

In whatever form disease attacks the liver, it is repelled and exterminated by this searching, painless, and irresistable curative. Bilious remittents, bilious purging, and all the ordinary disorders of the organ, indicated by pain in the right side and between the shoulders, yellowness of the white of the eyes, weakness and debility, &c., are relieved and removed by the remedy, with a celerity which astonishes the sufferers and their friends. Let the sick whom the faculty have abandoned, resort with confidence to this powerful anti-bilious agent, and a restoration to health and activity will be the unvarying result.

Dyspepsia, Diarrhœa, Weakness, &c. &c.

The terrible bodily and mental pangs which characterise Dyspepsia are at once mitigated by the Pills. Diarrhœa, constipation, headache, physical prostration, nervous tremors, hot flushes, spasms, affections of the k

HITHERTO AND HENCEFORTH.

BY MRS. C. E. L. WIGHTMAN, SHREWSBURY.

HITHERTO—Thy love hath led us
Through the varied path of life;
HITHERTO—in joy or sorrow,
In temptation's daily strife.
HITHERTO—Thy love hath kept us,
Thou hast been our sun and shield;
Thou hast given us weak unworthy,
Thine own Spirit's sword to wield.

HITHERTO—Thy love hath blessed us
In our hundred weak hr blows;
Many a wanderer Thou hast rescued
For a bright eternity.
HITHERTO—O loving Saviour,
Cold—too cold—our hearts have been;
Often wayward, proud, and selfish;
O Lord Jesus! make us clean.

* * * * *

HENCEFORTH—let Thy love constrain us
Of our heart and soul to be;
HENCEFORTH—loving, conscious, humble,
May we in Thy name agree.
HENCEFORTH—be Thy Cross before us,
Where Thy life-blood flowed for sin;
HENCEFORTH—at our side, Lord, with Thee,
Life eternal with Thee win.

HENCEFORTH—let us be united
In sweet fellowship with Thee,
Ever seek Thy praise and glory,
"All our fresh springs" find in Thee.
HENCEFORTH—lead us, loving Saviour,
In Thy footsteps, day and night,
Till we meet in glad reunion,
In the realms of Life and Light.

Miscellaneous.

Peterborough, Aug. 14, 1865.

To the Editor of the Peterborough Examiner.

Some time before the American war broke out, an old and esteemed christian friend of the writer's went to the Southern States for the benefit of his health, and finding congenial employment at Richmond remained there until the Confederacy was hemmed in by the Union forces. Obtaining a pass he subsequently came to Canada on a visit, and on returning to Richmond foolishly entered rebeldom on his own responsibility. After spending about another year in the South he became satisfied with its experience of "America in the midst of war," and again started for Canada. Fortified with a pass he gained the Union lines and there reported himself to a Provost Marshall, confessing his past transgression. He was there upon the war into prison, and after a long delay was tried, condemned and sentenced to eighteen months further imprisonment, and entered upon the task when through the exertions of his friends and the British Minister at Washington he was pardoned by the President in time to reach home in live.

Thinking the diary of such an adventurer might prove interesting to your readers, I have obtained his permission to publish it, and place it at your disposal.

I am yours &c.,

T. M. FAIRBAIRN.

MEMORANDA.

September, 1864.—Left Richmond, via Northern States, via Lower Potomac.—After a very perilous journey arrived at Leonardtown, Maryland.

Oct. 3.—Reported myself to the U. S. Provost Marshall as having just arrived from Richmond.

Oct. 4.—Sent to Point Lookout by the Provost Marshal. Arrived at Point Lookout, and having been examined by the Provost Marshall of that post was sent under guard to Washington.

Oct. 5th.—Committed to the Old Capitol Prison by Provost Marshall T. Ingraham as a "suspicious character." Was confined in the buildings called the Carroll Prison.

Oct. 7.—Made statement of my case to be copied by the clerk of the prison.

Oct. 8.—Subscribed and made oath to statement before Major Turner, Judge Advocate. Wrote a letter to my sister not mailed.

Oct. 9.—A long tedious day. No preaching or going to church; not even permitted to take an airing in the yard. The eternal, ceaseless tramp of the sentinel as he passes and repasses my door keeps me constantly in mind that I am in "solitary confinement."

Oct. 10.—This day has passed quite as monotonously as yesterday. Weather very cold. Not allowed any fire. Later got some wood and built a cheerful fire. Feel in better spirits to night.

Oct. 12th—Feel dull, sick and low-spirited; no inclination to read.

Oct. 14.—Was removed from solitary confinement in No. 13 to room No. 29, here we have the privilege of going out in the yard as often as we please. There are 7 in the room. This change was a great relief. In No. 13 a bucket in the corner was the only convenience allowed (on answering the calls of nature); the stench was horribly sickening. My drinking cup, wash-bowl and pitcher all consisted of a single brown pitcher.

Oct. 16.—Had an attack of asthma.

17 and 18.—Had asthma much more severe.

Oct. 19.—Had chills and fever.

20th.—Took quinine; was so deadly sick as to be even at the point of death; later in the evening felt some relief.

21st.—Feel better to-day.

22nd.—Had attack of asthma again last night.

23rd.—Had asthma all day.

25th.—Had asthma dreadfully last night. No change in prospects or position.

25th.—Saw the surgeon yesterday and got some medicine; that relieved me a good deal.

26th.—Feel much better.

27th.—The asthma gets worse; have heavy expectorations.

28th.—Had a chill to-day.

29th.—No chill to-day; but severe attack of asthma.

30th.—Six more men put in our room, making in all, with addition of nine put in the other day, twenty-one men in one small room.

31st.—Had a dreadful attack of chills and fever.

November 1st.—Went to the surgeon and got some medicine.

2nd.—Feel a little better to-day.

4th.—Coughed a good deal to-day; otherwise feel tolerably well.

10th.—Have felt pretty well for the last six days. Col. Kell, Assistant Superintendent, made us have our room cleaned.

11th.—My brother-in-law came to see me; was much surprised to see him. Feel rather asthmatic to-day.

12th.—Had a dreadful night; was almost choked to death by asthma.

13th.—Had asthma worse than ever last night; feel greatly prostrated.

14th.—Not quite so bad last night.

15th.—N. came to see me again yesterday; had a bad night again last night.

16th.—Have a very severe pain in my right breast, sometimes so severe that it almost stopped by breath.

18th.—N. called to see me again to-day; he is going back to Canada.

16th.—Had an attack of chills and fever last night.

20th.—Sunday. Had a dreadful attack of ague and fever.

21st.—Wrote to my sister again to-day.

22nd.—Was taken with ague about ten o'clock; very sick all day. Evening high fever, unable to leave my bed; the men in the room with me proposed sending me to the hospital, but later in the evening I rallied and refused to go.

23rd.—Feel rath r better to-day.

25th.—Have a dreadful cold in the head; this is one of my particular annoyances.

27th.—Much better to-day.

28th.—Have a severe pain in my right breast again.

29th.—This morning I received a bundle of charges and specifications setting forth that I have been guilty of violating the laws and customs of war, and notifying me that a Military Commission had been appointed for the trial of like offenders, and that I must appear before it this day at the hour of 10 o'clock a. m. I had to march up town under guard to the court room, a distance of nearly two miles, and greatly broke down on the way.

30th.—I feel very much fatigued after my walk up town yesterday. The pain in my right breast increases.

December 6.—For the past six days I have been but little troubled either with pain my breast or asthma.

7th.—Got a letter from N. yesterday, and answered it to-day.

19th.—No change has taken place yet. Had another attack of asthma to-day.

28th.—Have had dreadful chills and fever for the last week; am very weak.

31st.—Wrote to N. to-day.

1865. January 1st.—Still in Carroll Prison. Gave N.'s letter to Mr. W. to mail.

7th.—Wrote to A. to-day. Feel pretty well, but look badly in the face and eyes. Received a letter from J B B.

8th.—Answered B's letter, referring him to N. I have been trying for a week to get Sergeant Cunningham to get me a few articles from the outside, but cannot get them; of what use is money to me, it might as well be in Hong Kong, or any other seaport town, for all the use it is to me. The atmosphere of the room or cell is horrible; 16 men, some unwashed, and the stench from their bodies smells about to heaven.

11th.—Yesterday I received checks on the sutler for $20 through Sergeant Cunningham; spent $2 95 on sundries from the sutler; it is upwards of a week since I asked for it, but I suppose I must make due allowances and take things as I can them and not as I would like them to be, thankful that I can get them at all.

12th.—Sunday afternoon. I have suddenly been seized with the most severe and rackin pain in my breast and chest, accompanied with great pain in breathing.

13th.—Spent a terrible night; it did not seem possible that I could live till morning; had to lie on my face, this was the only position in which I could sleep at all, or rather breathe, for sleeping was out of the question.

15th.—Spent the night in great agony; could neither get rest nor sleep; the soles of my feet seemed to be on fire, and as sore as though they had been pounded with a hammer, accompanied with shooting pains which extended to the knee; when morning came and I tried to rise, I found it necessary to lean on the table for support. O if I were only at home how I could welcome death, rather than drag on in such a life of misery and pain; but to die away from home, and more especially in such a horrible place as this is, is too dreadful to contemplate. My God grant me his grace to wait my appointed time with patience. I still have but one blanket, and in my feeble state of health it makes but a poor bed; having no mattress I am obliged to fold half of it under me and cover myself with the other half.

18th.—I am still suffering from pain in the breast and side; have a strong inclination to go to the hospital again; natural repugnance to the idea of the thing to the only obstacle.

22nd.—Came to hospital again; this makes twice in three months; hope to recover soon if I get proper treatment; at present I am a great sufferer, but God's mercy extends to all.

23rd.—Wrote to N. to-day; very little change.

27th.—Am getting along finely; the wind that blows on this corner of the island, and the rest I have had, have done more than all the doctor's medicine to restore me; the old doctor don't believe much in medicine; He says throw medicine to the dogs and give the patients plenty of nourishment, such as beef-tea, barley-water, and a Dovers powder at night, and you'll soon have them ready to be discharged; this was spoken to the head nurse one morning as the old fellow was making his regular rounds.

April 3rd.—Was discharged from hospital to-day; have got into what they call detail quarters; in these quarters I have the privilege of walking round the circle inside the fort all day if I like. Wrote to N. to-day.

5th.—Received a letter from N. to-day; news rather cheering.

6th.—Wrote to N. to-day.

11th.—Received a let er from N. today; he had just returned from Ogdensburgh, where he had been getting off a petition to the President of the United States for my release.

12th.—Wrote to N. to-day. Am still weak and nervous, though better than before I had the privilege of walking round the circle inside the fort.

25th.—Wrote to N. to-day. Feel better than for some time past; was examined by Dr. Goddard, for what purpose I know not. Received a letter from N. dated 19th.

May 1st.—Wrote to N. to-day; no word of release yet.

10th.—Had a photograph taken and sent it to N. in a letter; bad likeness.

19th.—Received a letter from N. today, at Montreal on the 17th instant.

22nd.—Wrote to N. to-day. Have been quite unwell for some time; worse to-day.

29th.—Came to hospital to-day with a complication of diseases; was near fainting before starting.

June 3d.—Have been dreadfully sick for three days; I have no appetite, and what coarse victuals they set before me are generally a hot that before I get time to choke a little down, along come the harpies called nurses—but it is a misnomer they ought to be called curses—after the dishes; thus it is day after day, one receives no attention from the highest to the lowest, from the doctor to the nurses. Afternoon, 2 o'clock.—Have just received a letter from N.; he is at Newcastle, and says he now my release signed at Washington. Evening.—Wrote to N and told him to try and see me if possible; informed him that I was sick in hospital.

4th.—Sunday. Received a letter from N. dated at Washington, carrying the same news as that from Newcastle; made application and got a pass for him to come and see me.

5th.—N. made me a visit; felt much better while he was with me.

7th.—Had another visit from N.; no word of release coming yet.

9th.—N. made his third call; no release yet, although N. saw it signed on the 2nd instant.

10th.—Dr. Arat told me the sooner I got away the better; whether he meant there was little hope of recovery cannot say.

11th.—Was ordered from hospital to report to the General; the General gave me a discharge from imprisonment on the island by order of the Secretary of War, and sent me by water boat to Newcastle, where I met N.

12th.—Started this morning for home.

13th.—Stared at New York last night; started this afternoon for home.

15th.—Arrived at home last night; feel greatly relieved at the idea; when I touched the Canada shore yesterday at Prescott I felt so glad that I said to N. if I only felt able I should like to give one shout for joy for now I know that I am in the land of liberty.

* * * * *

The following is a description of the rooms in which I was confined while a political prisoner in the United States.

Prison No. 1 was a cheap jack, tumble-down sort of a building, which was originally intended for a hotel of inferior class; but during the war was used by the government as an addition to the old Capitol. The first room I was put in, namely Room No. 15, was a dull, dingy, one windowed affair of small kind, viz., 12 by 15 feet. The interior of this room was entirely devoid of pomp or circumstance of any kind. The walls were rough, but had evidently been once plastered and in a later day whitewashed; but so dingy that the pencil marks of former occupants were hardly readable. There was a fire place on one side of the room, which projected some thirty inches or more, leaving a jog on either side. On the right hand side of the fire-place the everlasting old bucket was placed (for inmates of this room were never permitted to go outside unless for trial or to the scaffold), go and on the left an old chair, which might have belonged to the last century, and on this dilapidated old chair sat the water pitcher, which answered a three-fold purpose of wash-bowl water-pitcher and drinking-cup. On the other side of the room was an old iron bed-stead, about six feet long and two feet wide, and took twenty feet from the floor. This is the up the entire furniture of the celebrated No. 15, of solitary memory. The floor was rough, and had given way from the original mark on the wainscoting some six or eight inches: an unmistakeable sign that the house was in a very dilapidated state.

Room No. 29 was much larger and something of the omnibus class, always large enough for another prisoner. Its dimensions were 24 by 30 feet. The smallest number in it while I was there was six, and the greatest number twenty-one. The description given of 15 will answer for 29 as the rooms and stairs had all the same tumble-down appearance.

At Fort Delaware my room was a lower casement, done off and plastered, so as to make a room of it. The walls were about seven feet thick (made of brick) and the floor was of large flag-stones. Under the floor there was a bed of water to the depth of ten or fifteen feet, which kept the floor always wet, or at least damp, while all round the fort ran a deep moat, some fifty feet wide, half filled with water, which, added to the natural dampness of the atmosphere, rendered it unhealthy indeed.

CONVICTION.—The moment a person is convinced that he ought to perform any act of duty—be it what it may—is the moment that tests real character. The voice of conscience has its sweetest tones at the first utterance; if not heeded then, it gradually becomes silent.

TRANSPORTED FOR LIFE.—The man who marries happily.

Theories of Petroleum.

From the Chicago Tribune.

The discovery of petroleum in a somewhat extended district of Canada West, and the knowledge of the strata in which it occurs, derived by repeated borings, throw great discredit upon the commonly received theories respecting the origin and place of the strange and valuable substance. The general supposition has pointed to bituminous coal as the parent of petroleum, and various hypothesis to account for the separation of the two have been elaborated, sometimes with painful ingenuity, some of which are wholly in accord with known but hitherto inexplicable facts. But in Canada there is no coal. Not an ounce has ever been discovered in the Province; and if there is any truth in the opinion of geologists, all that country is below the coal in assures. But that there is oil there in large quantities, and under a considerable area of surface, we know from personal observation. In Pennsylvania and West Virginia, petroleum is found only in sandstone; but in a great majority of the wells of Canada, including those that have yielded most largely, there is no sandstone whatever. In the former places, it is a received opinion that if, in boring, the lime rock is struck, all hope of oil is at an end. In Canada, the lime stones yield better than any other strata, though the shales and soap-stone (serpentine) not unfrequently contain oil in paying quantities. Here then is an upset of all the hypotheses that have been observed in the region best explored. Hence the scientific men are now abandoning the coal theory and coming to the belief, first expressed, if we are not mistaken, by Agassiz, that petroleum is of animal origin; that it is the aggregated particles of the remains of countless animalcules and other minute forms of marine life, that have been discovered in the formation of the sedimentary rocks. And this opinion will, we take it, hold until a better, or rather a more plausible one supersedes it. The truth is, that, with the limited number of well-ascertained facts in regard to petroleum, which geologists and others possess, any satisfactory general solution at present impossible; hence all theories, hypotheses and opinions, no matter from what an eminating are to be received with many grains of allowance. Few, or none of them, are well enough grounded to hazard money upon, though they hold, in most cases, with a degree of pertinacity that is proportioned to the amount of ignorance upon which they rest. We shall not, as inquiries advance, and as results are attained, be at all surprised to see that the accepted theory in regard to the origin and formation of coal is given up, and that, in the revolution, what is now thought to be an effect will be recognized as a cause—that coal will be held to be petroleum from which all the more ethereal portions have been expelled by means of heat or great pressure, and in which a certain quantity of vegetable matter, fern leaves, is found.

NOTES ON OVERWORK

Unwise about many is the man who considers every hour that which is not spent in reading, writing, or in study, and not more rational is one who thinks every moment of his life lost which does not find her a wing. We once heard a man advise that a book of some kind be carried in the pocket to be used in case of an unoccupied moment—such was his phrase. He died early and fatuous. There are many who, after a hard day's work, will sit and sew by candle or gas light, until their eyes are almost blinded, or until certain pains about the shoulders come on, which are almost insupportable, and are only driven to bed by physical incapacity to work any longer. The sleep of the overworked, like that of those who do not work at all, is unsatisfying and unrefreshing, and both alike awake up to inevitable result, both dying prematurely. But no one work is pain or weariness, when a man is tired, he ought to lie down until he is fully rested, when, with renovated strength, the work will be better done, done the sooner, and done with a self-sustained alacrity. The time taken from seven or eight hour's sleep out of each twenty-four, is time not gained, but time much more than lost; we can cheat ourselves but we cannot cheat Nature. A certain amount of food is necessary to a healthy body, but if less than that amount be furnished, decay commences the very hour. It is the same with sleep; any one who persists in allowing himself less than Nature requires will only hasten his arrival to the mad-house or the grave.—The Moralist.

INFLUENCE OF TEMPER ON HEALTH.—Exercise, labor, exposure to wet and cold, the creation of sufficient quantities of necessary and wholesome food, habitual bad lodging, sloth and intemperance are all deadly enemies to human life; but each of them are no bad as violent and ungoverned passions. Men and women have survived all these, and at last reached an extreme old age; but it may be safely doubted whether a single instances can be found of a violent and irascible temper, habitually subject to storms of ungovernable passion, who has arrived at a very advanced period of life. It is therefore a matter of the highest importance to every one desirous to preserve a sound mind in a sound body, so that the brittle vessels of life may glide down the stream of time smoothly instead of being continually tossed about amidst rocks and shoals which endanger its existence, to have a special care amid all the vicissitudes of life to maintain a quiet possession of his own spirit.

Whosoever occupies a station of moral influence, a station where his labor lies among the most perilous materials with which man can interme dale, the affections, the dispositions, the wills of other people, must have amazing self-reliance, or a deplorable callousness, if he is not frequently crushed down by the solemnity of his power to.

TOWN AFFAIRS.

From press of matter coming in at a late hour we are compelled to merely give the items of the expenses of the Town for the current year and the Rate to be levied, and to leave what remarks we would have made for a future period. We may congratulate the committee on being able to keep the rate so low. We trust that their calculations will be found sufficient to meet all the liabilities, as annual deficits are not desirable.

Last Spring from the manner in which our town contemporary discussed the finances of the Town and endeavored to prove our almost immediate bankruptcy, we were led to believe (?) that the town matters were in a very critical position, we then, as coolly as possible, pointed out the reason of the fuss, we also stated that there was no cause for alarm, as the rate needed not to be more than last year, with proper economy in all of which we have been fully justified by facts. The Finance committee's report for the present year shows the requirements to be:—

For County Administration Justice, $1110 00
" Common Debentures	125 00
" Mayor's Salary	300 00
" Clerk and Treas. Salary	500 00
" Chief Constable do	400 00
" Assessors do	160 00
" Auditors do	30 00
" Inspectors of Buildings Salary	30 00
" Expenses of Police Court	50 00
" School Expenses	1897 00
" Streets and Bridges	650 00
" Law Expenses	50 00
" Charities	300 00
" Fire Department	150 00
" Commissioners	5938 00
" Miscellaneous	50 00
" Printing and Stationery	75 00
" Deficit in part for 1864	700 00
" Assessment to R. C. School	250 00
	$12725 00

ASSETS.

From Market Tolls	$300 00
" Police Court	350 00
" Licenses	1800 00 2500 00
To be raised by Assessment	10,225 00

The annual value of the assessed property of the town is $88,478, and the committee propose levying a rate of 11 cents on the dollar to meet current expenses and liabilities. This is a less rate than last year, at the same time that it provides for $700 of the deficit of last year; proving conclusively that the views we then set forth were founded on facts and figures. As the 11 cents in the dollar will not raise the sum of $10,225 by nearly $500, the committee inform us that there is nearly $1000 in the hands of the Sheriff or County Treasurer which will be paid over in a short time, and which will be sufficient to meet the $500 and leave $500 for other purposes. The finances of the town, therefore, may be said to be in a very favourable state, and yet the rate this year is 3 cents per dollar less than last year.

THE CROPS.

The harvest is now pretty well settled in these parts. Hay was a good crop, and has been well saved. Fall wheat is the best crop that has been produced for many years; some of our best farmers tell us they never had such a crop of fall wheat; others tell us that the crop is good, with considerable scant. Barley, we are assured, is very good, and is already being offered in market.

FLAX.

This has been an experiment crop in this part, very little having been raised here before: never before for the fibre; but for the seed. This, too, has been an unfavourable year; as it has been the dryest known in this part for many years. Those who sowed on favourable soil, not too high, have realized a fair return; while those who put it on high, dry soil, have been discouraged by a short crop. These parties do not consider how many poor crops of wheat they have had. The next impediment in the way, however, is the pulling of it. A year or two will obviate this, as no doubt, machines for cutting it will be invented, perhaps pulling machines.

The pea crop, we believe, will be average. Potatoes promise very well. The late rains will very materially aid the root crop.

The farmers of Canada certainly are receiving a rich blessing this season. We wish them health to enjoy the fruits of their labour.

PARLIAMENTARY.

Parliament met on the 8th instant. The Address was prorogued and finally passed without amendment.

The Speaker took the chair on Wednesday at 3 o'clock. Explanations were given of the negotiations for a Premier; which appeared quite satisfactory to all except a few discontents, of whom Messrs. Dorion and Holton appear to be the leaders.

The great hobby is, why was not John A. or Cartier or Mr. Brown chosen to form the ministry; while to the most unthinking it must be evident that none of these could have formed a ministry without destroying the terms of the coalition, and thus defeat the very end intended.

The ministry so far seem to have the confidence of the House as a whole; we may therefore hope to see business expedited and a short session.

The Firemen have their annual pic-nic to-day. They go to Oak Orchard we believe. We wish them a clear sky, pleasant times, good music, and a safe return.

"Our Late Canadian Visitors."

The visit of so many prominent Canadians to Chicago on a prospecting tour, augurs well for the future. Many of them have never before seen this great Metropolis; and it was a curious study to watch the impressions made upon the different members of the party, as they were shown the sights of the town. They were naturally shocked at the magnitude of the tunnel project, and asked a multitude of questions about it, which were promptly and clearly answered by the superintendents of the work. At Cheney Bingham they got some idea of how hundreds the Government had in the West. They eyed curiously the immense inclosure, with its myriad clean, white buildings for troops, almost as comfortable as private residences. Some shook their heads solemnly, when they compared it with the British encampment for Her Majesty's soldiers in the Province. At the Opera house the tourists were delighted with the beautiful architecture, the rich paneling and the magnificence of the whole edifice. The chamber of commerce was evidently an eyesore to them; because so much grand monument of commerce never did nor ever will exist in broad Brant on British soil. On Chicago they were astonished by the extravagance and the immense enthusiasm that prevailed among the merchants. Go, wherever the party went, they gained new ideas of the resources of the West, and saw what a powerful rival almost overshadowed their domain. One prominent Canadian leader of the party declared very vehemently, that he was for annexation. Canada had not advanced a step in half a century, while Chicago was but the growth of a score of years. He had almost a mind to emigrate to the West, but then his possessions were in Canada and he could not move to free soil, his estates. All in all, this visit of the representatives of provincial sentiment has been productive of immense good. When at home in the old-fashioned city of Toronto, with its little black chimneys and dirty streets, some enterprise, some crowds, some vitality, they will think of the hurrying multitudes they saw in Chicago, and sigh for a share in free government."

The above we clip from the Chicago Times, and may be taken for so much Yankee hilarition. The grand metropolis, mighty tunnels, and wonderful sights and resources of Chicago, and of every spot of Yankeedom, are seen by the American through such coloured scales—not lenses—that all creation is nothing in comparison. We can assure the Americans that the many tales of woe, suffering and sorrow endured by the American troops during the last four years were never heard of in all the wars ever waged by England: such reckless disregard of human beings; such indifference to the will of the people; such disrespect for law or long recognized principles of liberty, both of the subject and soldier, were never read of in the historic annals of even 100 years of Old England's career. Yet not one-half has reached us; perhaps never will; as to prevent this they (the people of the free U. S.) gagged the press, least the truth should eke out. Time enough to commence boasting when they have provided for their wounded soldiers and saved them from starvation; when they wipe out the suffering caused in the South, and the unmitigated woe caused to the hundreds of unoffending citizens whom they cast into prison. It is too soon to begin to boast yet. As to the annexation views of some prominent Canadian, we presume he was one of the Potter-Wood class of Canadians,—an American living on Canadian hospitality. The opinions of such men are worth as much as they themselves, perhaps. Instead of the never ending baby rhyme of "free government," "free people," they should learn that they only are free whom the truth makes so.

Provincial Teachers' Association.

FIFTH ANNUAL SESSION.

The more ambitious and public spirited of the teachers of this province have held their fifth annual session for the discussion of educational matters generally, and for the improvement of the law relating to schools and teachers. This session appears to have been an interesting one for those present; and perhaps something important may be brought about through the instrumentality of the convention, and the influence of those who take a lively interest in the cause of education.

It is urged by Grammar School teachers that the new regulations materially interfere with those institutions, especially with junior Grammar Schools, by almost completely superseding, or rather destroying, them. It was found by the inspectors that in many cases those schools were only a name; there being very few pupils in anyof them atten ing to classics at all: thus affording no higher education than first-rate Common Schools could do; and, in consequence, the Council of Public Instruction thought it wise to compel them to meet the spirit and letter of the statute relating thereto; but this would deprive such schools of a share in the Government funds unless they showed a certain number of pupils studying classics on their rolls. This has been magnified into a serious grievance, and they request that the regulations lately issued may be amended. It is also proposed to establish the same conveniences for female education that is now for males, which certainly would be an improvement if they were being prohibited a sound and satisfactory education under present circumstances, which we think they are not. Existing regulations make some allowance for the education of females. A little change in the programme might, perhaps, effect all that is required, without unnecessarily dividing and sub-dividing the school fund, as every new system of establishment may be expected to do. It is well known that not one of our educational institutions is overcrowded; it is equally well known that the number of teachers now engaged is sufficient to supply the present requirements of the Province.—Toronto, or some of the cities, may require female colleges, but assuredly the country does not: what need of rebuilding the whole for the sake of one or two of the cities. Let private or select seminaries be established and supported by private individuals until it is found that the country demands something more; for the present no change is required. This movement we consider more the work of a few prattlers, than that of any pressing necessity; we only wish that our citizens were more willing and able to avail themselves of the opportunities already at their command.

Naval Battle on the Parana, South America.

The Paraguayan vessels descended the river and attacked the Brazilian fleet, but were defeated: three of their vessels being sunk and one floating battery; and one steamer and five batteries were compelled to surrender. The remaining four steamer, considerably damaged, then returned. The Paraguayans lost 1500 of the squadron, and 500 of a land battery. The Brazilians estimate their loss at about 300. The Paraguayans fought ferociously, determined to conquer or die. One of the wounded prisoners, commander of a vessel, tore off the dressing of his wound with his teeth, wishing to die rather than be a captive.

Wallace Powell, Deputy Adjutant General, has gone to England for one month, on leave of absence.

MURDER IN EMILY.

On Sunday forenoon Dr. Black, Coroner, of Omemee, was notified that a murder had been committed within about two miles of that celebrated locality commonly known as Downey's Cross, in the township of Emily. The Coroner, accompanied by a constable, immediately repaired to the place; a jury was summoned, and an inquest opened.—The murdered man's name was Patrick Matemore. From the evidence given before the inquest it appears the farm on which Matemore lived had been a matter of dispute for several months back between deceased and a man named O'Brien, and two or three prosecutions for trespass have been already tried by the local magistrates during the summer; it also appears that an action is now pending between the parties in the Court of Queen's Bench, to be tried in Lindsay at the next sitting of the court there, and in which Matemore is not only a claimant for the land in dispute, but also a material witness.

Several witnesses swore to having heard O'Brien and his sons threaten Matemore; and one witness in particular, named Costello, swore to having seen O'Brien and his sons in the field beside the road along which deceased had to travel in coming home, with guns, on two or three nights. On Friday night he went up to them and asked what they were watching for, when O'Brien said they were protecting their crops.

Edward Morrisey, who lives on the next farm to Matemore, swore, deceased worked a good deal for him; sometimes he would stay all night, at others go home. On Saturday last he worked for Morrisey, and left to go home about 11 o'clock Saturday night. A few moments after he left Morrisey heard two shots in quick succession, and went out to see who was shooting at that unusual hour; but although the whole road from Morrisey's to Matemore's was in view, he could see no one: it was a fine clear night. After standing a few minutes he went in and went to bed. His man went over to Matemore's next morning to see him, but was told by his wife he had not come home. On Morrisey hearing this he and the man went over to Matemore's house; on the way they discovered the body in a panel of the fence, on the inside. Whether the first shot missed, and Matemore jumped the fence and was then shot by another person concealed in the panel of the fence, or whether the body was thrown there, is a mystery. The ball passed in from the right side, near the backbone, through the heart and left lung, and lodged in the skin near the left nipple. The clothing of deceased is blackened by the powder, and the mark of the wad is distinctly visible.

The inquest stands adjourned: in the meantime the County Attorney has been notified, and his advice in the matter will be followed. It was apparent to every one present at the inquest that the witnesses examined did not tell all they knew of the matter, and the services of a clever lawyer to cross-examine was badly needed, and may be a source of trouble yet.

POLICE COURT.

On Thursday morning, several characters, not very remarkable for temperate or orderly habits, were introduced to Mr. Edwards, J. P., by their tried friend Constable Arnott.

1st. Louisa Potter, charged with keeping a disorderly or house of ill-fame. Complainant, however, not being able to produce evidence then, the case was adjourned till Friday morning, at ten o'clock.

2nd. John Doig was next presented to his Worship. Charge—drunk and disorderly. No defence. Penalty—ten days in Norton's Palace.

3rd. Mary Nix, a hard case and hard looking. Charge—drunk and disorderly. Pleaded to get off and she would leave the town; but as the habit of promising to leave the town is becoming common, and never fulfilled unless so far as getting beyond the limits into the swamp, the Magistrate couldn't see it, and sent her to Norton's Palace also for ten days.

4th. James Jenkinson, drunk, but quiet, pleaded hard to get off and he would stop drinking; was deputed to accompany the others, to save him from trouble for a few days at least.

Mr. Norton must be highly honored by the new acquisition to his guests.

Friday morning, Louisa Potter again appeared before the court, to answer to the charge of keeping a house of ill-fame.—Joseph Love, sworn—Never heard of Miss Potter's house until yesterday when summoned as a witness; didn't know anything about such houses; never went near them. Mrs. Primrow, sworn—Saw men get in day and night; saw Joe Love go in on the 12th of July last, after nine o'clock, p. m., rather "tight." She (L. Potter) received men at all hours. Several names were given as attendants at the establishment—some of them married men. Mr. Edwards thought the evidence strong enough to warrant him to fine Miss Potter $20 and costs. She, not choosing to pay, was sent to jail 21 days; an easy way of paying $1 a day. If the evidence was weak the penalty was light.

What a disgrace to hear of men with families frequenting such places. In future we will give names as they are given in court.

School Trustee.

The election for a Trustee in the North Ward was very spirited and warmly contested. D. W. Dumble, Esq., and W. Hamilton, Esq., were the candidates, of whom Mr. Hamilton was the successful one. From Street Corner reports we learn that the great contest was between Priest and Mann, of which Priest came off victorious by a majority of 9.

We learn that Master Henry Smith, son of the Hon. Sidney Smith of this Town, after a very creditable examination has been admitted a Student at Law at Osgoode Hall. He was highly complimented by the Benchers for his answering, and his successful examination must be very gratifying to Mr. King, Principal of the Grammar School here, who prepared him.

$13,000 Stolen from the Express.

THE "LEADER" AND MR. BROWN.

The Leader, in every other respect a well conducted paper, has now got Brownism on the brain to such a degree that everything of late in Brown. Asleep or awake, it must be dreaming of Mr. Brown. The most silly, simple stories are connected about Mr. Brown at the funeral of Sir E. P. Taché eating (accompanied as a Protestant) and a word of which any one believes, not even the friend that told the friend that wrote to the friend who told the editor of the Leader of the great rumour. When a respectable journal like the Leader descends so low as to hunt up reports of no importance, without foundation, in order to damage the character, politically, or the influence of a rival, may we not tremble for the continued purity of the Canadian press. No man in Canada understands better what is his duty as a protestant and a gentleman than does Mr. Brown. It is far more likely that some of those who truckled for years to Lower Canada priestly influence for their mess of pottage were the reverent ones on the occasion referred to. Yet not even the most rabid politicians have stooped so low as to accuse even John A., although the loving companion of Cartier, of having trespassed the bounds of protestantism: much less should Mr. Brown be accused of it. Such fabrications tend to destroy the influence for good of any journal, and must show the weakness of the cause that requires such trash to uphold it. Upper Canada is ready to sanction unanimously Mr. Brown's public course. His personal, none except the Leader ever finds fault with.

Collision of Steamers on Lake Huron, and Fearful Loss of Life.

The propellers Meteor and Pewabic, of the Lake Superior line, collided on Wednesday night last, on Thunder bay, Lake Huron. The Pewabic sunk in 3 minutes. There were 75 or 100 lives lost. The following are the particulars:—

The collision between the propellers Pewabic and Meteor occured at half-past eight o'clock on Wednesday evening, six miles from the shore. The Pewabic was struck on her port bow, just aft the pilot house, and sunk in three or four minutes. The boats were running at full speed, and struck with such force as to crush in the entire bow of the Pewabic. At the time of the accident it was scarcely dark, and the boats saw each other six miles apart; when approaching they exchanged signals, and the Pewabic bore off to pass, but the meteor, for some cause as yet explained, turned in the same direction, and struck the Pewabic. A number were killed by the crushing timbers, and a few passengers jumped on board the Meteor bef re the Pewabic sunk. The life boats were at once lowered from the Meteor, and picked up those who were not carried down with the wreck. There were 175 to 200 passengers on board the Pewabic. The names of 70 passengers and 23 of the crew saved are known. The loss of life cannot be correctly ascertained yet, but will be near one hundred.

The Meteor remained near the scene of the disaster till morning, in the hope of picking up any persons that might be still floating on pieces of the wreck, but none were found. The propeller Mohawk passing down, the survivors were transferred to her from the Meteor and brought to this city. The Meteor was but slightly injured, and continued her trip to Lake Superior. The following are the names of Canadian passengers known to be lost:—Wife and 4 children of Edward Levan, Canada East; Louis Shasear, Quebec; Mrs. G. Nanstatton, Canada West; John Busben, Canada; J. M. Buckens, Hamilton; Wm. Batte, Canada; Chas. L. Abonant, Canada; H. V. Brann, Canada West; W. McLean, Canada; John Jamison, Canada; Charles Hunt, Toronto, probably London.

Loss of the Steamer Meteor.—The steamer Meteor, of the Lake Superior Line, the same that collided with the Pewabic on Wednesday night, causing a frightful loss of life, has soon followed the fate of that unfortunate steamer. On Friday morning, the 10th instant, while in St. Mary's canal Detroit, she took fire and was scuttled and sunk. No lives were lost, but all the baggage of the passengers was lost. The wreck lies in about 12 feet of water. Full particulars not yet received. Both the Meteor and the Pewabic belonged to the Lake Superior line, and were owned by J. T. Whiting & Co., of Detroit.

Both vessels, it would appear, were insured and the destruction of the two, owned by the same firm in so short a period, looks suspicious to say the least of it.

A Camp Meeting.

We are requested to state that the Wesleyan Methodists of the Hastings and Seymour circuit intend holding a camp-meeting, to commence at 2 o'clock p. m., on Thursday the 24th instant. The camp ground is about two miles south of Hastings village, on what is known as the Dutch line. Eminent ministers from the Coburg, Kingston and Peterborough circuits will sustain the meeting. Information concerning tents, &c., can be obtained by applying to the Rev. R. Mark, Hastings.

Resuscitation.

We are pleased to find that the Millbrook Messenger is about to be revived. Mr. A. E. Hayter, who first started the Messenger, again takes charge of it, and from his energy we hope better for the Messenger than was the fate of the Chronicle, the name by which it was last published by J. Roger, Esq.—Mr. Hayter has our best wishes for his success; although, no doubt, in politics the Messenger will advocate different views from us. A healthy opposition, however, will do no harm to any party.

The "Valuator."

We have received the first number of a new weekly paper published in Port Hope with the above title. It is neatly printed, and contains a large quantity of reading matter. Its politics appear to be "the farmer's interests," and its object to make real estate the basis of our circulating currency. The publisher has our best wishes for success in his arduous undertaking.

The Great Cable.

On the 2nd of August, because of a storm, it is supposed, the Atlantic Cable was cut and fastened to a buoy to enable it to brave the gale. On the 3rd the buoy was passed by the First Fruits and its whereabouts reported to the Great Eastern. There are grave fears about the enterprise, but if the buoy and cable float safely and be again gotten by the Great Eastern we need have no fears. Let us hope the best, anyhow, a week or two will tell the whole tale.

Sights Afoot.

Chicago, the great agricultural metropolis of the United States, is situated on the western shore of Lake Michigan, has a population of nearly 200,000, and is constantly increasing. The buildings have been erected more in a style of architecture for progressive and show, than for durability. The first thing a traveller will look for is a good hotel. There is plenty of them here; they are large, gorgeously furnished and well ventilated. You fare sumptuously, are waited on attentively, and enjoy life luxuriously, for which you pay from three to four dollars per day. The fast-black on the corner of the street gives you a shine for 25 cents; the vendor of sausages will allow you to smile for 15 cents, or will give you a pure Havana for prices varying from 10 to 25 cents. Everything is immoderately cheap; money is flowing like milk and honey. The man that has it finds various ways of disposing of it; while the person without it has sundry ways of obtaining it, some not the most honorable or honest, but still it is business and must be legitimate in the great Republic. Very little can be seen of this city while coming into it, save a few scattered one-horse wooden buildings. It is not until, as with a sudden bound, you leap upon the waters of Lake Michigan, and within about a mile of the Great Central Depot, that anything of consequence can be noticed. Suddenly you find yourself vis-a-vis with Michigan Avenue, with its magnificent marble palaces, with iron railings and beautiful walks, facing the lake and frowning defiantly at its restless and troubled waters. In these palaces live the Corn, Petroleum, and Shoddy Kings, the disciples of Esculapius, the votaries of Mars, the devotees of Bacchus, and perhaps the disappointed admirers of Venus.

The improvements in the last seven years are particularly noticeable; five story blocks with iron fronts have taken the place of miserable wooden hovels. The principal streets are greatly improved; seven years ago it was a continuation of step. The buildings have been raised even with the streets, and stone pavements now occupy the place of rickety old steps and stairs, which were very general in every business locality. The principal buildings are the Court House, the new Board of Trade Rooms, Crosby's Opera House, and the Great Central Depot; the last is perhaps the greatest curiosity, as it is considered the largest depot on the continent.

This city a few years ago was a barren prairie, almost a marsh; to-day it stands the foremost city in the Union—simply because there is no other place improving like it. And why? Because the natural facilities are such that it would be impossible for it to stand still, situated in the centre of an almost boundless agricultural country, extending from the Rocky Mountains, from St. Paul, from St. Louis, and from Cincinnati,—all this extent of country pouring its growth and its life into the place,—it must flourish. The immense amount of shipping, the number of railroads all combined must necessarily make the place grow, and eventually become the largest and most important in the United States. The noise and bustle here is immense; the hurrying multitude is huge. The buildings are pretty; in fact many of them are beautiful. The streets are pleasant to drive or walk on, being well paved and as level as a floor. A keen observer of the "hurrying multitude" must observe that each one is intent on different purposes. The speculative Yankee is in a fearful excitement for fear he may be late "on change," the less inclined and more moderate business man takes it leisurely to his counting-house or counter: the servant of God, after ministering to the spiritual wants of his people, is now perhaps casting his eyes about anxiously to see whether any of those who appeared so sincere only the day before have not now laid aside the religious garb, and appear quite indifferent to his moralizing and teaching, and now entirely intent on the God Mammon. The gambler, too, may be seen after his night of debauchery and iniquity, mingling with the crowd, as gay as the gayest, as honest as the most honest, and respectable. The different nationalities are also represented in this throng, and are easily recognized by their peculiar accent or style of clothing—the Irish to build the railroads, the English and Scotch to till the ground, and the German to make the lager, the sour-krout and sausage. These are the avocations allowed to the poor emigrants from those nations by the Yankee. Sometimes by dint of perseverance and industry, they mount the ladder a little higher, and become what the nati n calls re-pectable citizens. A foreigner, no matter what his talents may be, can never occupy any other position than that of a subordinate nature. This is the doctrine of knownothingism.

By the papers I learned that a number of the members of the Toronto City Council, with some prominent citizens, were here; the same paper also informed me that the common Council of this city resolved to pay their expenses while here, and also appointed a deputation to take them around and show them the "elephant." This must have been very pleasant and satisfactory to the Canucks; but the hardest part is yet to come. The Times, in noticing the progress made by the party, indulges in some singular remarks, and places the gentlemen in the position of not knowing much, and looks as if they had always been tied to their mother's apron-strings. A person who had never visited this city would imagine by reading the article alluded to, that Chicago was one of the greatest places under the sun—that there never was any such buildings erected since the Tower of Babel,—and that the members of the Toronto Corporation were so astonished with the wonderful works and marvellous designs before them that they fairly and solemnly shook their heads. The new Board of Trade, and Crosby's Opera House are particularly mentioned, the former that no such building would ever be raised for such purpose on British soil, and that in the latter the excursionists were "delighted with the rich architecture and beautiful panelling" of the edifice. This must have been considerably over-drawn, because no Torontonian could be so astonished, after leaving behind him such buildings as the University and Osgoode Hall. These buildings are devoted to more noble and great purposes than Crosby's Opera House, and finished in a style of magnificence greater than any building in the United States—much less Chicago. The Yankee is susceptible of flattery, and those individuals were aware of it. I make this assertion on the authority of a Professor of Medicine, who said that the very best way to get into the good graces of any person in the city, was by telling them that theirs was a pretty city. I am constrained, notwithstanding the great inducement held out, to say that it is not a pretty place. It is quite certain that it is a great business place; but so being a pretty place, it is anything but that. The buildings here are not of such a character as to astonish any Canadian that knows anything about his country. The Court House is no comparison with the Montreal Court House. There are no such Churches here as the French and English Cathedrals of Montreal; no such buildings as the Bank of Montreal, the City bank, and many others; nor such a pile of buildings in the whole United States as the Canadian Parliament Buildings at Ottawa City. The Royal Insurance Buildings, also, are of such magnificence and grandeur that no public building (I will not even except the new Board of Trade Rooms) will compare with it. The editor when writing this article must have been either suffering from the effects of a strong decoction of invigorating cordial, or he has not travelled and if he has he wishes to keep his benighted readers in the dark. It is well known that one of their peculiarities is blowing; and this individual must have been heavily charged, and found this way of getting rid of it—he dealt it out in small quantities to suit the appetites of his hungry crowd.

I cannot see anything to be gained by joining such a people as this, unless it is the pleasure of joining the hurrying multitude, being pitchforked into this crowd and perhaps never seen again. You might follow the gambler to his den of infamy, vice and hell; the unfortunate victim of want to his resting place, to find nothing to protect him from the keen and biting blasts of Heaven, no protecting hand to look after him, and nothing but the cruel and callous cold world around. The greatest amount of infamy, degradation misery, and humiliation, on the face of the earth, in proportion to the population, is concentrated here. In my next I will endeavour to give a description of the city by gas light.

For the Examiner.

Toronto, August 14th, 1865.

Mr. Editor,—

Here I am in the capital of Canada West, and in fulfillment of my promise, I send you a few jottings of passing events here.

ACCIDENTS.

The past week has been remarkable for the number of lives lost by accident. A fine young man named Woods, a carpenter, "the only son of his mother, and she was a widow," fell from a building belonging to Gordon & McKay, a quantity of the bricks fell on him and killed him. Another man lost his life while rolling logs on the cars of the Northern Railway, one of them rolled over him and bruised him to death. Another was riding on a load of wood, got a jolt and was thrown in front of the wheels of his cart, which ran over his body, and there is very little hope of his recovery. On Monday night three large brick houses on the corner of Wellington and Bay streets were burned down, and said to relate, a boy who lived in one of them as a servant was burned to death. He was a very heavy sleeper and no one thought of waking him up until too late. His remains were found the third day after. A coroner's inquest was held and a verdict in accordance with the above facts given. Soon after the alarm of fire was given that night the soldiers of the 47th regiment came on the double-quick with a fire-engine from the barracks and rendered very efficient services, not only in providing a guard for the property thrown out of doors, but in staying the progress of the flames.—They wrought with a hearty good will, both officers and men.

MILITARY SCHOOL.

On Tuesday there were seven candidates admitted to the Military School for commencement of studies there, and one or two readmitted to go on for first-class certificates. The Cadets all seem very earnest and attentive. The School is not full. Between sixty and seventy are in attendance.

CIVIC HOLIDAY.

To-day is a holiday for the city, and everybody and their wives are off on excursions. First the 10th Royals are off to Hamilton by the Great Western. Next the B. A. O. of G. T. are off to Oshawa by the Grand Trunk. The Orangemen of the Toronto District are off to St. Catherines on board the steamer Huron with the band of the Queen's Own. The steamer City of Toronto is off to St. Catherines and the Falls. There must have gone off this morning more than 10,000 people, all classes and conditions of men; in some cases whole families turned out; in other cases men went off and left their wives to keep house, and I know of cases where the wives have gone off and left the husbands to look after the hen-coop and the little ones. It is a pretty hot day for sport; some of them intend to trip it on "the light fantastic toe," and I assure you I do not grudge them all the pleasure they can take out of it to-day.

THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF.

Sir John Michel, K. C. B., Commander of the forces in British North America, with Sir James Hope, Commander of the Squadron on the North American Coast, arrived by the steamer this morning while I was down at the wharf seeing the excursionists off. The Naval Brigade received them at the landing. When the steamer rounded the point a salute was fired by the tars of thirteen heavy guns, regular "sweezers." The General and Admiral had each his suite of attendants in scarlet and blue, and it was quite a brilliant affair. The band of the 47th with an escort of two companies from that regiment waited on the distinguished visitors. At ten o'clock the two batteries of the Royal Artillery now stationed here and the other troops in garrison marched out to Spadina Avenue and were inspected by the General; General Napier, the Commander of the forces in this division of the Province, taking the command of the field. It was quite unexpected, as none of the folks here knew of the visit until last night, and the few people left at home seemed to relish the military display very much; a number expressed themselves as well paid for their self-denial in not leaving the city with their friends. Great doings are expected this evening, as

HARRY LEslie,

The great American rope-walker is to give a performance in his line to-night in the drill-shed. He is engaged by the Queen's Own to perform for them at a grand concert in aid of their band fund. The band of the 47th will be in attendance, and in speaking of that band I think the people of the good city of Toronto are under very great obligations to it for the real pleasant evenings they are in the enjoyment of through it. It is said that music has charms, but a person can hardly appreciate the truth of the saying until he hears such strains as float upon the evening breezes from the well toned and well played instruments of the band of the 47th. In fact if I had nothing to tie me down in the shape of "responsibilities," I believe it would tempt me to become "a band soger boy."

Yours,

WILLIE.

Life on the Kushogwizamog.

Mr. Editor,—I suppose, to some, the very look of the name of Lake Kushog, and its mysterious greatness as in the title, will appear appalling; but, to let the world in the "front" know that there is life back here, I am deputed to draw up the following and seek its insertion in your paper, which circulates largely in these parts. On the 11th of August, a social pic-nic of a pleasing character was held on an island midway between the Village of Minden and the Township of Dysart the property of the English Land Company. By the exertions of a select number of the leading men of Minden, preparations were made and invitations sent. The ladies zealously took their share (for, when are they behind?) and by eight o'clock, a. m., boats well loaded were to be seen wending their way from Dysart and Minden to the chosen spot, before-time the resort for such pleasant varieties of life. Many a happy thought was interchanged, many a hearty laugh sounded from shore to shore and was re-echoed in the distant bush—a thing unfrequent on the Lake swelling only to add to the hilarity of the time. The island on which many a hunter's fire had blazed in days gone by, now was reached and volumes of smoke curled in the breeze, but from the civilized white man now, not to witness the slavery of woman as a squaw, but the freedom of the partner of the Anglo Saxon's joys and sorrows. There were gentlemen busy with jocund tongues, some preparing conjointly with the ladies fair, meats of various kinds, huge pails of as huge new potatoes, messes of green peas, &c., while others were spreading on the grass white cloths to be quickly burdened with all extra edibles in the form of cakes and cookies, of tarts and pies, and salids. The company numbered seventy-five, and sociality was indeed the order of the day. The good things so profusely provided soon grew beautifully less in truth The hearty dining over by one o'clock, gigantic swings were erected, capable of accommodating three persons at a time, so that each gentleman could swing and chat vis-a-vis with two lady friends, and so make quite a merry pastime. I assure you this was thoroughly patronized, for husband and wife, and unwedded sweethearts, with friends and neighbors, met in common pleasure in airy voyages; whilst on mother Earth were groups of joyous ones, some singing, some chatting, and some vieing with each other to tantalize their hosts into the fact that it would be good and profitable to feed and settle down on Kushog's banks, for before them there was many a boat with couples bent on pleasure Thus the day wore on, and again the energetic Committe—let me name them, S. S. Peck, Esq with Messrs. Dumble and Andrews, of Minden—counsel (of course by ladies aid) the grass borne "spreads" to shew a other and perhaps richer burden of good things. These eaten, the company was warned of the setting sun, when all stray boaters were called in and each repaired to his boat, or skiff, or punt, or canoe. Ere parting, votes of thanks were proposed and responded to; words of congratulation and satisfaction were spoken by two ministers present, the Rev. F. Burt, of Haliburton, the Land Company's new town, and the Rev. Mr. Hayden, of Minden. "God save the Queen" was then sung, and the oars began to plash as the boats of gratified ones, both old and new brethren, parted with lingering cheers till sight failed.

PARLIAMENTARY.

On the eighth instant the House having met a Message was received from His Excellency the Governor General, desiring the immediate attendance of the House in the Legislative Council Chamber.

The House attended accordingly; and being returned, the Honorable Mr. Attorney General Macdonald introduced a Bill (No. 1) to provide for the administration of the Oath of Office to Justices of the Peace in this Province.

Mr. Speaker reported His Excellency's Speech from the Throne, and read a Copy thereof to the House, as follows:—

Honorable Gentlemen of the Legislative Assembly:

Gentlemen of the Legislative Council:

In conformity with the announcement which I made to you at the end of the last Session of Parliament, a Deputation from the Canadian Ministry proceeded to London to confer with Her Majesty's Government on questions of importance to the Province.

I have now called you together at the earliest convenient moment after the return of the Deputation, in order that you may receive the report of their mission, and complete the important business which, at the conclusion of the last Session, was left unfinished.

I have directed that the correspondence referring to the mission to England shall be communicated to you for your consideration.

The happy termination of the Civil War which has for the last four years prevailed in the United States of America, cannot fail to exercise a beneficial influence in the commercial and industrial interests of this Province, and we may trust that the re-establishment of peace will lead to a constantly increasing development of friendly relations between our people and the citizens of the great Republic.

The circumstances which rendered it necessary to place a portion of the Volunteer Militia of the Province on permanent duty, having ceased to exist, the force has been recalled, and I have to express my feeling of satisfaction at the readiness with which the men responded to the call of duty, and the general good conduct which they exhibited during the period of their service.

Gentlemen of the Legislative Assembly:

I have directed that the estimates for the current year, and the statement of the expenditure which has been incurred chargeable against the vote of credit of last Session shall be laid before you.

You will find with reference to both that economy has been combined with a due regard to efficiency.

Honorable Gentlemen and Gentlemen:

I have not failed to transmit to the Secretary of State for the Colonies, for presentation to Her Majesty, the addresses to which you agreed during the last Session, in favor of a Federal Union of the Colonies of British North America.

I have desired that the reply of the Secretary of State shall be communicated to you, and I trust that mature examination of the project, which has long indeed the Legislatures of the other Provinces to concur with you in giving their sanction to a measure which has been adopted as a great feature of Imperial policy, and has been twice noticed with approbation in Her Majesty's speeches from the Throne.

On motion of Honorable Mr. Attorney General Macdonald, His Excellency's Speech was ordered to be taken into consideration to-morrow.

On motion of Honorable Mr. Attorney General Macdonald, it was Ordered, That the Votes and Proceedings of this House be printed, being first perused by Mr. Speaker, and that he do appoint the printing thereof, and that no person, but such as he shall appoint, do presume to print the same.

On motion of Honorable Mr. Attorney General Macdonald, it was Resolved, That Select Standing Committees of this House for the present session be appointed for the following purposes:—1. On Privileges and Elections.—2. On Expiring Laws.—3. On Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines.—4. On Miscellaneous Private Bills.—5. On Standing Orders.—6. On Printing.—7. On Ungranted Lands.—8. On Public Accounts.—9. On Banking and Commerce.—10. On Immigration and Colonization—which said Committees shall severally be empowered to examine and inquire into all such matters and things as may be referred to them by the House, and to report from time to time their observations and opinions thereon; with power to send for persons, papers and records.

Murder and Robbery at Niagara.

From the Hamilton Times.

We learn that a shocking case of murder and robbery occured at Niagara yesterday, in the vicinity of the Boiling Spring, a short distance above the Falls. An American gentleman who was on a visit at the Falls, named Comstock, from Grand Rapids, Michigan, yesterday crossed over to the Canadian side, for the purpose of visiting various points of interest, and in the course of his rambles engaged a cab driver to take him to the Boiling Spring. It appears that the stranger was abundantly supplied with money, and made an injudicious display thereof to the observation of one or more of the bands of robbers and cut-throats who infest the locality. He was taken in charge by a cab driver named Gorman, who was accompanied by another party of the fraternity, named Turney, and driven off in the direction of the Boiling Spring, and when arriving at a secluded locality on the road, the two villians fell upon their victim, fracturing his skull and inflicting fatal injuries with a slung-shot. The injured man was then thrown on one side of the road, and his pockets rifled of about $600 in money, and checks to the value of $1800. On the occurence becoming known, Gorman and Turney were at once suspected of the deed, and the former was pursued to the American side, where he was taken into custody after a desperate resistance. The latter was arrested on the Canadian side, and placed in safe-keeping. Gorman's cab bore the marks of the murderous struggle, and the bottom was covered with blood. The affair has caused great excitement, and the indignation of the inhabitants of Clifton against the perpetrators of this cold-blooded murder is intense. The ill-fated victim survived only a few hours after being picked up, as our informant learned on leaving the Bridge this morning, and expired during the night.

A Mother and Daughter Chopped to Pieces with an Axe.—Hartford, Aug. 1.—A horrible murder was discovered at daylight this morning, at the village of Oakland, in the town of Manchester, nine miles east of the city. Mrs. Benjamin Starkweather, aged 46, and her daughter Ella, 14 years old, were chopped to death in bed with an axe. The blows severed the skull every time, and the bodies presented a horrid sight. They were also stabbed in many places with a butcher knife, which, with the axe, has been found. Mrs. Starkweather's son, named Albert, 24 years of age, is being examined to-day by the Hartford police; and it looks as if he committed the deed for a sum less than $400 in money, which was found in his drawer with the knife. He first gave the alarm, and the beds were found on fire, his own and his mother's. The daughter still breathed, but died in ten minutes. The scene was more awful than anything ever known here before.

The Leader and Mr. George Brown.—The Leader, which is really one of the best newspapers extant, suffers its dislike of Mr. George Brown to get the better of its discretion and its love of truth. Recently it contained some rigmarole touching Mr Geo. Brown's personal behavior at the Funeral of the late Premier. The silly statement carried absurdity and refutation on the face of it. No Protestant does, or is asked to kneel in a Roman Catholic Church while attending a Funeral, and Mr. George Brown is the very last man who would depart from the ordinary behavior on such occasions.—Montreal Witness.

The Publicite, of Marseilles, announces a new kind of strike—that of bachelors. Not fewer than 6,000 young men, it states, of that place, between the ages of 20 and 30, held a meeting in the open air a little way out of the town, and entered into an agreement not to ask any young woman in marriage until a complete change shall have been operated in the manner of living, and particularly in the dress, of the fairer sex. The young men insist on greater simplicity in every respect, and a return to the more modest habits of a century or two ago.

MONTREAL PRODUCE MARKET.

The business of the week has been on a similarly limited scale to that of a me weeks past. Lack of ocean tonnage, together with the generally unpromising tenor of British advices, prevent export transactions to any extent.—Prices of Breadstuffs are only partially affected by fluctuations in the Western States, as in any event a surplus is likely to exist, which, in seeking a foreign market, must ultimately be regulated by prices and prospects aboard.

Flour.—The receipts of the week have again been small, but ample for the limited wants of the trade. In the absence of export enquiry, and local demand restricted to small lots for actual use, added to the partial reaction in the Western States, prices have lately been maintained.

The higher grades are entirely neglected, only some of the more favourite brands being taken in smalls for bakers' use. We quote Superfine Extra nominal at $5 90 to $6 10; Extra $5 50 to $5 70; and Fancy $4 00 to $4 30. Canada Superfine, except really choice and strong, is unsaleable: the range is $4 85 to $5 10. Western Sujers are in small supply, and the better samples find buyers at $4.60 to $4.70 to a limited extent. No. 2 and lower grades are scarce, and the better samples offered command ready sale at relatively high rates. We quote No. 2 $4.35 to $4.40; Fine $3 90 to $4 10; and Middlings $3 50 to $3 75. Bag Flour, though not abundant, has met a very languid demand, and lower prices have ruled. Latest transactions in parcels from U. C. Spring have been at $2 65 to $2.70, and under for inferiors; and in samples from Western wheat $2.50 to $2 60.

Wheat.—There is little change to note. Arrivals are small and transactions few. Prices are nominally unchanged, but sales are more difficult to effect at former rates.

Coarse Grains.—Are purely nominal in the absence of wholesale transactions.

Pork.—The feeling has gained ground that the quantity on hand is insufficient for the requirements of the trade, until New Mess can be brought into the market in quantity. Holders are, consequently, asking $13 and upwards for the small stocks remaining.

Butter.—The arrivals are considerable, and the demand still continues active, so that there is no accumulation. British advices so far are encouraging, but none of the late large shipments had as yet arrived, so that their effect on the market has yet to be seen. Shippers are freely met by holders at an average price of near about 17c. for good, sweet and sound parcels—a price purchasers do not feel justified in exceeding, in view of the large make anticipated during the ensuing fall.

Lard.—Continues unchanged. The quantity in stock is small and firmly held at 14½c. to 15c. A moderate consumptive demand is going on, and it is probable we shall be quite clear of stock by the time new can be placed in the market.

Cheese.—Good factory is the only sort enquired for. Shipments to Britain are limited from here, as but little confidence is felt in present prices being maintained.

Ashes.—The demand is languid, and there are no early signs of improvement. Rates in Britain are lower than for some years past, but with the prospect of a good trade it is hoped prices may mend in the course of the fall.—Trade Review, Aug. 11th.

Lumber.—Business is still quiet, but prospects are better. Common lumber is the only thing in good demand. There is a slight improvement in the other kinds, but not much. A good quantity is shipped to the American ports, but nothing unusual to speak of. This season, owing to the interruption in the New York canals, has been broken and irregular. The demand, too, in the American markets has not been nearly so good as formerly, but it is to be hoped that next season will open with better prospects, not only as to the shipping facilities from here, but as to the demand for all kinds of lumber, which the cessation of the war, consequent prosperity, and a new reciprocity treaty will engender.

The Reciprocity Treaty.—The American Press do not seem to be at all satisfied whether the Reciprocity Treaty is beneficial or a detriment to the prosperity of the American Government, but it is gratifying to see that on some points the United States press and the Canadians agree, and one is that the "Canadian Pain Destroyer," is the best thing for the cure of coughs, colds, Frost-bites, rheumatism, &c. Sold by all Medicine Dealers at 35 cents per bottle.

An Elegant Voice!—Some people have fine, musical voices, naturally, but you can easily cultivate a fine voice. Try Dyer's Palmos in Water; they will cure a sore throat, hoarseness, sing a colds, &c., in short time; 25 cents a box.—.

Being solicited by your Travelling Agent, for an expression of opinion of Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry. I with pleasure assert that it is, in my belief, the best remedy before the public for coughs and pulmonary complaints.

Having tested the article with myself and family, in case of severe coughs and colds, for years, with uniform and unexceptionable success, I unhesitatingly recommend it with full confidence in its merits.

Yours truly,

Poetry.

ARISTOCRACY.

BY JOHN G. SAXE.

Of all the notable things on earth,
The queerest thing is pride of birth,
Among our "democratic" free
A bridge across a hundred years
Without a prop to save from sneers—
But t'on a couple of rotten Peers—
A thing for laughter, scorn and jeers,
In American aristocracy!

Depend upon it my snobbish friend,
Your family threads you can't ascend,
Without some reason to apprehend,
You may find it wanted at the farther end,
By some pedigree question!
Or worse than that, your boasted line
May end in a loop of stronger twine,
That plagued some worthy relation!

Because you flourish in worldly affairs,
Don't be haughty and put on airs,
With insolent pride of station!
Don't be proud and turn up your nose,
At poorer people in plainer clothes,
But learn for the sake of your mind's repose
That wealth is a bubble that comes—and goes!
And that all proud flesh, wherever it grows,
Is subject to irritation.

SCIENTIFIC DISCUSSION.

A most animated dispute occurred on Cross Street, a few days ago, between Cato Brown and Jim Tutton, two factory hands, employed in one of the tobacco factories, well known for their extensive information on all scientific subjects. The question under discussion was the shape of the earth. Cato contended that it was flat and stood on a big rock, a theory which when advanced, drew forth the following dialogue:

JIM—You argue that the world is flat and stands on a big rock—now I want you to tole me what dat rock stand on?

CATO—Nigger, I'se 'stonished at your ignorance! why it stands on nuffin but rock.

JIM—(Confident that he had his opponent cornered)—But what does bole of dem rocks stand on?

CATO—(After a moment's hesitation)—Why, dar is rocks all de way down.

JIM—(With a pompous air)—My colored friend, I'se sorry to see such 'larse ob ramtigated obscurity in a genumen ob your eyedited pretensions; allow me, who has experienced superior opportunities, to correct de werry deroneous impression you has, and inform you dat de earf is round and revolves on axles.

CATO—I knows how to 'preciate de feel in dat p'ints you to defend to dis ungger de information dat you furnish on de question dat we is at present debatin' and will all reference to 'sperior opportunities to which you take occasion to preclude, I must disagree wid you on de theory dat you advances. Know'd de world was round and turned on axles, wouldn't de axle-trees broke down and spill all de people in the street? Answer me dat.

It is necessary to add that Jim was utterly confounded by this overwhelming argument, and forced to "knock under" to the superior intellectual attainments of his opponent.

MILKING THE WRONG COW.—The Hon. Grantly F. Berkely, the English hunter and naturalist, tells the following excruciating story of Lady Haggerston's scheme to charm the Regent: Her Ladyship had at her residence a miniature farmyard, and those pretty little Alderney cattle. When the prince and his friends had arrived, she came to ward from the side of the wicket as a milkmaid, for the purpose of making a syllabub for the prince. She had a silver pail in one hand and a tamerine stool in the other. Lady Haggerston, thus peddling, with ribbons flying from her dainty little milking hat, that hung on one side of her graceful little head, and the smallest little boyish red below her laced stockings, she came opposite his Royal Highness to whom she dropped a real graceful courtesy. Then passing lightly over the broad plaited straw, her tucked up gown showing her neat ankle, as well as her colored stockings, she placed her stool and pail convenient for use. Leaning against the flank of one of the crossest looking of the Alderneys, she was attempting to commence her rustic labors; but not having selected the right sex, the offended animal did not seem to fancy the performance, for at first he kicked out then trotted away, nearly upsetting stool, pail, and Lady Haggerston, who covered with confusion, made a hasty retreat for her dairy, whence she did not appear again.

A young girl was reading marriages in a newspaper a few days ago, and after she had concluded she uttered an exclamation of impatience. "What is the matter?" asked an acquaintance, "you look angry." "And it is enough to make any one look angry, my goodness gracious," was the reply. "Here I've read the marriage of four widows in this paper." "Well, what of it?" "What of it? Dont that prove that widows are good for nothing in designing things, and prevent us from getting husbands?" "No." "I say it does," replied the indignant girl, "and I'll tell you what I'll do. I'll get married and have my husband die, and then I will see if I can't get one." This brilliant scheme the little designer is preparing to carry out, so young men who desire to live their natural lives will please avoid her, for she is dangerous.

GENUINE ELOQUENCE.—When Lord Chief Justice Richie was travelling in Ireland, he met a man who was a pitiful spectacle of pallor, squalor and wretchedness. His heart smote him, and he turned back. "If you are in want," said Richie, with some degree of pensiveness, "why don't you beg." "Sure I'm beggin' I am, yer honor." "Why, you didn't say a word?" "Oh corse not, yer honor; but see how the skin is sparkin through the holes in me trowsers, and the bones crying out through me skin! Look at me sunken cheeks, and the famin that's starin out in my eyes! Man alive! isn't it beggin' I am wid a hundred tongues!"

A BRIGHT GIRL.—"What are you doing there, Jane?" "Why, pa, I'm going to dye my doll's pinafore RED." "But what have you got to dye it with?" "Beer, pa." "BEER? Who on earth told you that beer would dye red?" "Why, ma said yesterday that it was beer that made your nose so red, and I thought——" "Here, Susan, take this child."

Does the razor take hold well? inquired a barber who was shaving a gentleman from the country. Yes, replied the other, with tears in his eyes, it takes hold first-rate, but it don't let go very easily.

A Pedagogue was about to flog a pupil for having said he was a fool, when the boy cried out, "Oh, don't thin'e! I won't call you so any more—I'll never say what I did again in all the days of my life."

LOWLINESS is the base of every virtue, and he who goes the lowest builds the safest.

THE NEWSPAPER APPRECIATED.—Without a newspaper, the world narrows itself to the small limit of my personal experience, and humanity be compressed into the ten or fifteen people I see with. Now, I refuse to accept this. I have not a sixpence a console, but I want to know how they stand. I was never—I never in all likelihood shall be—in Japan; but I have an intense curiosity to know what our troops did at York town. I deplore the people who suffered by that railroad smash; and I sympathise with the newly married couple so beautifully depicted in the "Illustrated," as they drove off in a chaise and found the bald old gent. at the half door waving them a last adieu. I like the letters of the correspondents, with their little grievances about unpunctual trains, or some unwarrantable omissions in the Liturgy. I even like the people who chronicle the rainfall, and record little facts about the mildness of the season. As for the advertisements, I regard them as the glass and mirror of the age. Show me but one page of the "Wants" of any country, and I pledge to give a sketch of the current civilization of the period. What glimpses of romance it is do we gain by these brief paragraphs! How full of suggestiveness and of story are they!—Blackwood's Magazine.

WOMEN AND NEWSPAPERS.—A Tuscegra paper comes out strong in favor of his female patrons, whome he regards as model subscribers. We copy this editor in every word: "Women are the best subscribers in the world to newspapers, magazines, &c. We have been an editor now going on eight years, and we have never lost a single dollar by female subscribers. They seem to make it a point of conscientious duty to pay the preacher and printer, two classes of community that suffer more from bad pay (and no pay at all) than all the rest together. Wherever we have a woman's name on our books, we know that it is just as good for three dollars and a half, as a peacock is for a ginger cake. Besides, whatever they subscribe for they read, whether it be good, bad or indifferent, if they can subscribe for a paper, they are sure to read, upon the principle, we suppose, that if they did not their money would be thrown away—as an old lady whom we once knew, for whose sick servant girl the doctor had prescribed a dose of oil; but as the girl would not take the oil, she took it herself, rather than it should be wasted. Hence we say, they are the best readers—for these reasons, we had, at any time in the world, rather have a dozen women on our books than one man.

OUR MOTHER.—Around the idea of one's mother, the mind of a man rallies with fond affection. It is the first deep thought stamped upon our infant hearts, when yet soft and capable of receiving the most profound impressions, and all the after feelings of the world are more or less light in comparison. I do not know that even in our old age we do not look back to that feeling as the sweetest we have through life. One cannot as and selfishness may lead us far from the object of our final love; we learn even to pain her heart, to oppose her wishes, to violate her command; we may become wild, headstrong, and angry at her counsels or opposition: but when death has killed her monitory voice and silling but calm memory remains to recapitulate her virtues and good deeds, affects us, like a flower beaten to the ground by a past storm, raises her head and smiles among her tears. Around that idea as we have said, the mind clings with fond affection; and even when the earlier period of our existence forces memory to be silent, fancy takes the place of our remembrance, and twines the image of our dead parent with a garland of graces and beauties and virtues which we doubt not that she possessed.

A GOOD WIFE.—A good wife is a man's best movable, a scion incorporated with the stock, bearing sweet fruit; one that to her husband is more than a friend, an equal with him in the yoke. Calamities and troubles she shares alike; nothing leaves he that does not him. She is receive in all, and he, without her, but half himself. She is his absent hands, eyes ears, and mouth—his present and absent all. She frames her nature unto his, never thwarts; the hyacinth follows not the sun more willingly. Stubbornness and obstinacy are weeds that grow not in her garden. She leaves chiding to the gossips of the town, and is more seen than heard. Her housewifery her charge, and her care of that makes her seldom non-resident. Her profession but to be cleanly, and her thrift not to be prodigal. By her discretion she has clothed on not trifles; a husband without her is misery in man's apparel; none but she has an aged husband to whom she is both a staff and a chair. To conclude, she is to be wise and reign us, which makes her all this.—Sir Thomas Overbury's "Characters."

AGED YOUNG MEN.—The man of one idea may be monotonous; but let us thank heaven he has an idea; that he takes an interest in something. But what shall be said of the young man, who in the year 1865, is without enthusiasm? To whom the great pending issues of the day are as nothing to whom newspapers and libraries are a dead letter; who is knowing only in coats and gloves, in wines and perfumes; whose face and form, at twenty, suggests only the total absence of all vitality. One can forgive apathy in one of advanced years; but for youth, with its accredited strength, and hope, and vigor and the glorious future it might have, to sell its birthright for mental imbecility and physical decay, is indeed pitiable.

Verse alone is not poetry. Poetry is an idea. Ideas come from the soul. Verse is only an elegant dress upon a beautiful body. Poetry can be expressed in prose. It is only the more perfect under the grace and majesty of verse. It is the poetry of the soul which inspires noble deeds and noble sentiments as well as noble writing. A dishonorable poet is a degraded being, more base and more culpable than a dishonorable man who is not a poet.—Victor Hugo.

HOW TO PRONOUNCE OUGH.—The ending syllable "ough" which is such a terror to foreigners, is shewn up in its several pronunciations in the following lines:

Wife, make me some dumplings of dough,
They're better than meat for my cough;
Pray let them be boiled till hot through,
But not till they are heavy or tough.

Now I must be off to my plough,
And the boys (whos they're bad enough)
Must keep the Bos off with a bough,
While the old man drinks at the trough.

We overheard a poor weather bound individual the other day, who was caught in the rain, humming to himself in a doorway.

'Twas ever thus from childhood's hour,
That chilling fate has on me fell;
There always comes a soaking shower,
When I have got no umbrell!

To make raspberry jam.—Put seventeen raspberries into a goosequill.

Make Farming Life Attractive.

Young men often leave their homes in the country for city employment because they dislike the hard, dirty work, and because the adornment of the homes of their childhood has not been attended to. Girls dislike to marry young farmers because they see a life of drudgery in prospect, such as cooking large meals for hired men, and because the throng of laborers which must fill up their houses precludes the idea of comfort and seclusion. By attending to the following points much of these evils could be avoided.

1. Build cheap, but good and comfortable laborer's cottages, and hire steady, married men to occupy them and who may board at home.

2. Let the owner attend to strict cleanliness so far as may be practicable; that is, never enter the house with a heavy or dirty pair of boots, but take them off in an outhouse whenever entering or meals or for the night, and replace them with slippers. The same care should be given to outer garments.

3. Attend to frequent washing and bathing, and a frequent change of clothes—it is nearly as easy to wash several garments slightly soiled as one loaded with dirt.

4. Let all rooms, and especially bedrooms, be well ventilated, and every cause of foul and offensive air be removed.

5. Let the living-rooms be handsomely furnished inside—with books, pictures, mineals and specimens of natural history, philosophical apparatus (all in proper cases,) materials for drawing, and everything else to make in-doors attractive to young people.

6. Let the surroundings of the house be appropriated to ornamental planting—trees, shrubbery, flower-beds cut in smooth turf, &c., and have ample orchards and fruit gardens, so that a constant supply of delicious and fresh fruit may be obtained from them, from the season of the earliest strawberries in June, until the late frosts of autumn—and afterwards that a copious supply may be obtained from the fruit-room until the first of the next ripening summer.

7. Let all the operations of farming be carried on without hurry or excessive hard labor, by means of the best system in the management; let agriculture be made attractive by its neatness and success.—Country Gentleman.

Coloring Cheese.

The color of cheese sometimes exerts a greater influence than the flavor, in securing a ready sale. Most people reject a pale, light-colored cheese; and choose those that have a golden color like rich cream, as this is supposed characteristic of an excellent article. A light-colored cheese may possess all the richness of one that is as yellow as gold; indeed, they may both be alike in quality; and still the golden-colored one will be pronounced best and command the highest price. So much does a good color enhance the value of cheese in most markets. In order to secure the desired color, it is customary to employ Annatto, but it may be done without. Let the curd remain in the vat, spread out as much as practicable, until it is of the right temperature to be put into the hoop. By allowing it to remain exposed to the atmosphere while it is cooling, instead of dashing cold whey, or water on it—as is sometimes done—the rich creamy color may be secured without the use of any coloring matter. By this means, all the good flavor and richness will be retained; whereas, when the curd is washed, more or less of the valuable portions of it are removed by the whey. If the curd be exposed to the air in this manner, the cheese will be of a uniform color throughout. That if cured with care and the rind kept smooth by not allowing the outside to dry faster than the inside shrinks, a small quantity of annatto applied to the surface will impart a very good color to the exterior.

HOW TO CONDUCT MILKING.—The best dairymen carry, as well as feed, water and turn out their cows regularly; feed and water should be given each when in the stable at the same time or corresponding hours; if a cow refuse to eat, remove the feed at once; never pamper to any degree after calving. At milking time the master or mistress should be present, if not as milker, to see that it is quickly done and without talking; much depends on this; the last drop is rich st, never neglecting to milk to the end of the teats; this is wrong, as the drop from a good milker never comes; milkers are seen pulling at the teats for the "last drop"; in stripping a cow it is usually done with the right hand by taking the teats in rotation and getting what milk can be obtained; and when he gets hold of a teat, if he can't get milk twice, he must try that teat again, after he has gone round. All drawn after this comes from the milk veins, and is no richer than that first taken, or of the average quality. If a dairyman intends to follow his business and make it profitable, he or his wife must milk or be present during milking. One of the best of dairymen always did the stripping after his regular milkers. A garrulous milker should be silenced or exorcised from the stable or yard where the cows are milked. Note this and insist upon a strict observance of the rule.—Boston Cultivator.

COOL WATER.—At this season of the year a cool draught of water is a luxury which we may enjoy with a little care. By the following method simple and inexpensive, water may be kept almost as cold as ice. Let the vessel used for water be surrounded with one or more folds of coarse cotton, to be constantly wet; the evaporation of the water will carry off the heat from the inside, and reduce it to a low temperature. In India and other tropical countries, where ice cannot be procured, this expedient is common. Let every mechanic and laborer have at the place of his work two pitchers thus provided, and with lids or covers, one to contain iced water for evaporation, and he can always have cold water or warm water. Any person may test this by dipping a finger in water and holding it in the air on a warm day; after doing so three or four times, he will find his finger uncomfortably cool. This plan will save the bill for ice, besides being more healthful. The free use of ice water often produces derangement of the internal organs which, we conceive is due to a property of the water independent of its coldness.—Maine Farmer.

WEEDS.—The Boston Cultivator says: "Let it be a rule of every thrifty farmer that no weed shall be allowed to bloom on his cultivated grounds. The same rule should also be extended to uncultivated grounds—to the corners of fences, to stone heaps, and other waste places where weeds delight to grow, and where they are too frequently allowed to run to seed.

"BLESSINGS" EXTRAORDINARY.—About ten months ago, an amiable and loving couple, residing at Lefter, became the happy parents of three additional "little responsibilities," at a birth; and a week ago the same affectionate pair were further blessed by the addition to their family of twins; making five pledges of love within the lapse of eleven months!—Barrie Examiner.

See what the most popular and widely circulated periodicals say of our Establishment:

From the "Dispatch" of February 25, 1865.

We take pleasure in calling the attention of our readers to the announcement of Messrs. Devaugh & Co's Great Sale of Jewelry, Silver Ware, and Fancy Goods, in our advertising columns. We are personally acquainted with the members of this firm and know them to be gentlemen of sterling worth and integrity. Their stock of goods is entirely and exclusive, we have scarcely seen paralleled.

From the "Mirror of Fashion," March 1, 1865.

Messrs Devaugh & Co's Great Sale of Jewelry, etc, opened on the 15th ult., and we venture to say that no finer display of goods was ever exhibited by any establishment in this city. The ladies thronged their bazaar almost to suffocation, although the streets were rendered nearly impassable by the melted snow and slush We predict for them a wonderful success.

From the "Ledger," February 28, 1865.

Our lady friends should visit the extensive establishment of Messrs. Devaugh & Co., No. 15 Maiden Lane, if they wish to indulge themselves with a sight which they will long remember. Such a profusion of elegant Watches, Chains, Rings, Earrings, and, in short, of Jewelry of every name, kind and description, we never before witnessed. Their silver and plated ware is superb and almost casts into the shade the other splendid establishments which have long been the boast of our city. It is estimated that their stock is worth not less than one million of dollars.

PIANO-FORTES

DRIGGS' NEW PATENT.

ARE THE ONLY INSTRUMENTS constructed on a truly scientific principle That have greater strength, and will remain longer in tune than any other Piano The construction is simple and natural. All the extraneous lumber in the body of the instrument is dispensed with; the sound boards are merely two arched planks of thin wood, like the front and back of a violin; the stringe are attached to a strong iron frame, which is separate and entirely independent of the case, thereby dispensing with the old hap hazard system of stringing by substituting straight bridges, preserving at the same time The Over Strung Bass, for which the Driggs is the inventor. By these improvements we gain much more vibratory power, at the same time preserving all the purity and richness of tone.

They have received the highest testimonials from the Press, and all the principal artists in the country, among which are:

Harry Sanderson,	L. M. Gottschalk,
Max Maretzek,	S. Thalberg,
Theodore Eisfeld,	Wm. Mason,
Herman Wetzler pt,	A. Barili,
Francis H. Brown,	M. M. Strackosch,
Sam. Henry Fry,	Charles Fradel

Mr. EGESMUND THALBERG, the great pianist, says:—I have examined your new Piano-fortes and I cordially approve of its system of construction. Its principle, by which great increase of vibratory power is obtained, being very simple and perfectly philosophical. The tone is grand and noble; it has great capacity for sustaining the sound or singing, and its volume of tone or power I have never heard excelled in depth, purity and sympathetic sweetness.

Wm HENRY FRY, late musical critic of the N. Y. Tribune says:—I have examined your newly invented Piano-Fortes They merit all the praise given to them by Messrs. Thalberg, Gottschalk, Strackosch, Mason and others. As regards the structure, they are original and philosophical; in purity, volume, and continuity of tone; in vocal versimilitude, that crowning excellence which enables the pianists to "sing" on the instrument. Your Pianos deserve the highest rank. Your invention, in my opinion, is destined to work radical changes in the manufacture of Pianos throughout the world.

From the N. Y. Herald, Sept. 5.—Upon a careful examination of Duncan Piano-Forte, we find the results obtained are a very fine singing tone, great purity and brilliancy throughout the entire instrument, not often found in Pianos constructed upon the old plan.

The N. Y. Times, July 12, says:—We have now an instrument without an equal. It can sing with a smoothe delicacy, perfectly unattainable on any other instrument; an ordinary player obtains with no exertion, the fullness of a Grand Piano Forte and they must speedily supercede the old styles.

GENTLEMEN:—Having thoroughly examined and tested the Piano-Fortes invented and patented by Mr S. B. Driggs, I am of the opinion that the tone resulting from his improvements, as exhibited in the instruments under examination in point of richness, depth and brilliancy, equals that of the best Grand Piano-Fortes, and excells them in pure, musical and actual tone, power thus approximating closer to what I consider perfection in the instrument than has yet been achieved by any other system of manufacture.

Yours respectfully,
L. M. GOTTSCHALK.

ARE YOU IN AGONY?

A WELL SPRING OF HOPE FOR ALL!

CAN BE FOUND IN

Holloway's Pills.

Be of Good Cheer! The Sinking may be Saved!

BY THE USE OF

Holloway's Ointment.

THE history of these great Remedies is the most wonderful medical revelation that the world has ever known. It establishes the all important fact that WHENEVER, and in WHATEVER shape internal disease exists, the disinfecting, searching and healing properties of the Pills are fully equal to its subjection and cure, and that, with the Ointment, they are

The Great Ambassadors of Health to all Mankind.

This is not a history written by one man, or even derived from the experiences of one nation It consists of a complete revelation taken from the sick of every country—an unimpeachable record the like of which has never been adduced in favor of any discovery or invention since time began.

These Mighty Healers, World Known and World Tried are a Boon to the Sick

The want of a sterling medicinal to meet the ills and necessities of the suffering portion of humanity, and one entirely free from mineral and other deleterious particles, was severely felt till this all powerful medicine was ushered into the world; HOLLOWAY'S INVALUABLE PILLS have become the HOUSEHOLD REMEDY of all nations Their alterative is to PREVENT as well as to CURE, they attack the SEEDS OF ROOT of the complaint, and thus, by removing the hidden cause of disease, re-invigorate and restore the drooping energies of the system, assisting nature in her task of VITAL and FUNCTIONARY REFORMATION.

Disorders of the Stomach

Are the sources of the deadliest maladies. Their effect is to vitiate all the fluids of the body, and to send a poisoned stream through all the channels of circulation Now, what is the operation of the Pills? They cleanse the bowels, regulate the liver, bring the relaxed or irritated stomach into a natural condition, and, acting through the secretive organs UPON THE BLOOD ITSELF change the state of the system from sickness to health, by exercising a simultaneous and wholesome effect upon all its parts and functions.

Woman in all her Difficulties

THE RETURNED LETTERS.

How she tries her grief to smother,
Tears fall on the snowy page;
To a daughter writes a mother—
Calls her home to cheer her age.
Weary, then, with looking, longing,
Weeks and months pass sadly by;
All the past to memory thronging,
Hoping on, but—no reply.
Till at last there comes a letter!
"Tis her own she traces there—
Better she had died—far better—
"Gone away, and not known where!"

From her home across the ocean,
Blotted with repentant tears,
Writes the daughter her emotion—
How she turns to earlier years—
Prays that heaven may bless her mother,
Tells her of her wedded joy;
How she left her for another—
Sends the picture of her boy.
Then she waits to be forgiven,
Till another year has fled;
Back her letter, torn and riven,
Comes—all on it written "Dead."

LOVE IN A STAGE COACH.

BY A BACHELOR.

How it poured! Rattle, rattle, against the casement; splash, splash on the ground underneath, all night; and now, when I awoke here, it was raining away harder than ever, as if a second deluge were at hand. Confound the breakfast bell! I wish there was no such thing as a breakfast on a rainy morning; for then one might be abed all day, or until the storm cleared off. Philosophers tell us that rain is necessary for the economy of nature; it may be true, though I never troubled myself about such things; but if so, men ought to be made like dormice—to sleep in uncouth useless until the rain sees fit to cease. Nature never intended us to be out in a shower, or we would have been born with patent oil-cloth or India-rubber skins.

Down it poured! What on earth was I to do? The day before had been the brightest one of the bright month of May; and as I had a passion for walking in the country more fool for it!—I had trudged away off here, eight miles or more from town, to see a country wedding, "after the order used among Friends." I must say that the thing was very handsomely done, and that I was much edified—so much so that one of these days I will tell you how the parties departed themselves, how many new hats there were to the wedding company, who drove the finest horses, and all other matters of gossip so interesting to young misses and old bachelors like myself. The day passed off with a bright blue sky, until towards dusk, when a thunder shower came up that lasted till bed-time; but I retired fully resolved that the morning would see a clear morning over my head; but the morning had come, and here it was, pouring down in one dark, splashy, continuous stream, for all the world like an old maid's objurgations when her tongue gets wagging.

Down I hurried to the breakfast table. I had just buttered my bread, and was swallowing the first mouthful of coffee, when the horn of the coach to town was heard, and, looking out of the window, I saw the vehicle, with its four smoking horses, dashing down the turnpike. It was my only chance to reach the city that day. I bolted my bread, gulped down the coffee till my throat was scalded, jammed my hat on my head, and made a dive through the door. The driver did not see me, but cracked his whip with a flourish and went on. I shouted; still the old villain did not see me, but with another flourish of his whip, set his four-in-hand on a brisker trot, and rattled down the hill.

Desperate with the fear of being left, I pitched after him, scattering the mud around at every step, an shouting at the top of my lungs; but I might have shouted on till doomsday had not a passenger seen me, and stopped the old sinner. Out of breath, wet to the skin, covered with mud from head to foot, and not in the best humour from the loss of my breakfast, I mounted into the coach; but the instant I placed my foot inside the vehicle, all my sullenness vanished, for one of the loveliest angels that ever blessed a rickety old coach or warmed the soul of a sour, breakfastless bachelor with her presence, sat upon the back seat.

Did you ever fall in love? Of course and the lady was the loveliest of her sex? To be sure. Then the stage-coach be ugly was twice as handsome as your sweetheart; and if, after this, you don't think my fellow passenger a cherub, then I give up all hope of making you appreciate her. Such eyes such teeth, and then lips—egad! it almost makes me crazy to think of them. I put myself down for the luckiest dog in the world. She was dressed in a plain straw cottage bonnet, with a green veil—"just such a costume," said I, "as a real lady wears when travelling"—and then she gave me such a sweet, but half regretful smile as I tumbled into the coach in the plight I have described, that I knew her at once to be a paragon in the way of education, taste, fortune, and all that; and I resolved—what knowing one would not?—to make the agreeable off hand, for there is nothing like meeting an heiress in a stage-coach, where she thinks she is unknown, and dreams that every attention paid to her springs from true love—ahem!—on your part.

I was in clover. What cared I for rain? Splash, splash, splash, aye! rain away there, like blazes—who cares? One doesn't get a tete-a-tete with a pretty girl every day of the week—so I determined to make the best of it.

And, faith, with a few sly compliments, and my extraordinary good looks, I soon got as cosy with my unknown beauty, and she with me, as if we had been acquainted since the days of Noah. We talked of the weddings, for she too had been there, of the scenery, of the rain, and of whatever came uppermost; and there was such a charming frankness in all she said, that I really thought her the most winning little creature I had ever seen; and I verily believe if the floor had been softer, and I had known the accurate number of houses which I would be meant, in courtesy, I should have gone down on my knees to her at once. I hate showing one's learning off in public, so I avoided anything like literature, though I saw by the intelligent eyes of the charmer that she had a soul alive to all the finer sensibilities of nature.

At length we got on the subject of housekeeping. Now, if there is anything I hate, it is a woman that can't keep house, and I trembled at every word, lest my charmer should confess her ignorance of these matters. Shade of Apicius! how my heart leaped when she told me that hardly a day passed in which she did not bake bread, or pies, or sponge-cake, or some other of those slumbrous that delight the heart of a man; and in expatiating on such delicacies she rose to a pitch of eloquence that I never heard surpassed. I could not resist my feelings, but snatched her hand to my lips and kissed it.

Yes! I felt that she was destined to be mine, for if there is anything that a wife ought to know it is this. I come of a race of caterers. My grandfather lunched on half a dozen rabbits, and died at last of a surfeit produced by eating two roast pigs. My father can break his fast on a brace of capons, or devour a pair of turkeys without having to pick his teeth; and a brother of mine can tuck in a hundred oysters and dishes of chicken salad which does honour to the family. My own exploits in this line my modesty forbids me to mention.

No wonder I lost this rosy little beauty who could get up such a choice fry, and bake such delicious cakes. Ah! what a life of domestic happiness rose before my vision, when I pictured my returning home from Court at night, to meet a beefsteak ready broiled, or a bowl of the richest turtle soup served up by the fair hand of the angel at my side. I resolved, if there was any virtue in a pair of whiskers, in an eloquent tongue, or in my new blue coat, to win this seraph of pie-bakers.

There is no place like a stage-coach for making love. It comes natural! You do it, egad, in an easy, don't-care-for-any-thing style, that you can't for the life of you assume in any other place. What betwixt sitting on the same seat to talk more conveniently, and putting your arm around her waist to keep her from jolting off, you soon get to be wonderful cozy, and ten to one if you don't catch yourself squeezing her hand or varying the entertainment in some other way, before you are aware of it.

For my part, as I have said, I was ready to surrender at discretion, and I already fancied myself lightening the dear creature beside me of the trouble-some duty of collecting the rents of her various fine houses. It was charming to think of the progress I had made in her affections. What a delicately rosy cheek it was that I just then slily kissed—she blushed the deeper at my warmth! And then her saucy pouting lips; and then her figure, just the age for a man who hated your thin weasel-shaped young misses as he hated epidemics. Ah, what a wife she would make! How I thanked my stars that I had hitherto set my face like a flint against every temptation to marry—for now my firmness was rewarded by this beauty and heiress dropping into my mouth. And then I preached to myself a mental homily on the short sightedness of man, as I ventured to steal another kiss from the conscious and blushing little angel at my side. I was about to pop the question itself, when the coach stopped, and the driver descended and opened the door. My charmer arose. I was taken all aback.

"Do you get out here?" said I, in surprise.

"Yes," said she, "I see Mr. Powell is waiting for me."

"Mr. Powell," said I, for that was the name of a friend of mine who lived up this very lane, not half a mile from the turnpike; "do you live then with him? Perhaps you're a relative? Strange," I muttered to myself, "I never heard him speak of this charming creature."

Before I could answer Powell approached and while he hailed me my fellow passenger sprang to the ground as if by magic, and the next minute was in my friend's vehicle.

"For heaven's sake," said I, half mad that the hasty grip of Powell prevented me from hastening to his ward's assistance, "who is that angel? Is she a relative, a ward, or what? I'm dying for love of her."

Powell burst into a laugh, and laughed on till tears came in his eyes. Confound the fellow, what did he mean? I began to look angry.

"Come, my dear boy," he said, "don't get into a passion, but consider how odd it is that you, of all men, should fall in love with my cook."

I never make acquaintance in a stage-coach now, until I have exchanged cards.

SACREDNESS OF TEARS.—There is sacredness in tears. They are not a mark of weakness, but of power. They speak more eloquently than ten thousand tongues—They are messengers of overwhelming grief, deep contrition, unspeakable love. If there were wanting any argument to prove that man is not mortal, I would look for it in the strong, convulsive emotions of the breast, when the sole has been deeply agitated, when the fountains of feeling are rising, and when the tears are gushing forth in crystal streams. Oh, speak not harsh to the stricken one weeping in silence. Break not the deep solemnity by rude laughter or intrusive footsteps. Despise not woman's tears—they are what make her an angel. Scoff not if the stern heart of manhood is sometimes melted to tears—they are what help to elevate him above the brute. I love to see tears of affection. They are painted tokens, but still most holy. There is a pleasure in tears—an awful pleasure. If there were none on earth to shed a tear for me, I should be loth to live; and if no one might weep over my grave, I could never die in peace.—Cobbett.

THE CHOLERA.

ITS RAVAGES IN THE EAST—ITS WESTWARD PROGRESS.

(From the N. Y Post.)

A correspondent of the Evening Post some time ago proposed the theory of the periodical appearance of cholera as an epidemic every seventeenth year; and assumed, accordingly, that as it prevailed here in 1849 and 1832, we have good cause to expect it again in 1866. The pestilence, in the milder form of cholerine, has broken out among the Mussulmans, who crowded, during the last few months, the sacred places of Mecca and Djebel Araphat, proving fatal to some thousands of pilgrims. The period which our correspondent spoke of has come round; and this intelligence from the region where cholera, both as endemic and epidemic, often holds high festival, at first view certainly seems to favor the apprehension.

THE CHOLERA.

De Noe relates that when the great plague raged in London, in 1663, many were silently infected without perceiving it, till they fell into swoonings and faintings, and death without pain. Very similar to this is Eugene Sue's account of the perishing of the two children in the cholera hospital at Paris. The blood, immediately after it is poisoned by the deadly contagion, parts rapidly with its oxygen, leaving a lifeless carbonic mass.

The pestilence attacks insidiously, and fixes a sudden hold upon the vitals. The patient often seeming just before to be in robust health, assumes a shrivelled, deathlike respect; the surface of the body becomes cold, giving to another a sensation like contact with the skin of a frog; and the face, hands and feet quickly put on the purple of imperial death. Dr. Milroy relates that when the cholera prevailed at Kurrachee, in 1845, "within a little more than five minutes, hale and healthy men were seized, cramped, collapsed and died." At Teheran, the capital of Persia, multitudes who were attacked dropped down suddenly in a state of lethargy and expired. In Muscat, Arabia, ten minutes often did not elapse from the first apparent seizure till the fatal termination.

But when travelling westward, the pestilence has exhibited other phenomena, taking more time to accomplish its fatal work, assuming numerous symptoms not here instanced, often passing from cholera into typhoid fever before finishing its task, and often apparently permitting a favorable reaction and yielding to the action of medicine. In each recurrence of the epidemic all its symptoms appear to become mitigated.

THE MILDER SYPTOMS OF CHOLERA.

In milder forms of attack it is characterized by premonitory diarrhea a sudden muscular debility, tremors, vertigo, occasioned nausea, spasmodic griping pains in the bowels, depression of the functions of respiration and circulation; copious purging of serous fluid (rice water) succeeded by vomiting and burning heat at the stomach coldness and dampness of the whole surface of the body, coldness and blackness of the lips and tongue, cold breath, a craving thrist, a feeble rapid pulse, difficult and oppressed breathing, with extreme restlessness, suppressed urinary secretion, blueness of the entire surface of the body, partial beats of the præcordia and forehead, total collapse, or reaction and fever.

According to the accepted theory, cholera is a zymotic disease, propagated by contagion and atmospheric influence; a specific poisonous matter being absorbed into the blood, which operates to disorganize its component elements. But when the attack is not sufficiently severe to produce speedy coma and dissolution, the system makes an almost superhuman effort to rally and throw off the morbid agent, thus producing the symptoms just enumerated. Sometimes it succeeds. The patient then may recover; but not unfrequently he dies from exhaustion produced by the effort.

WILL THE CHOLERA COME WESTWARD?

It is reported that the cholera has abated at Alexandria, and the French surgeons are convinced that it will also cease its ravages at Cairo and Upper Egypt. They assert that "the presence of the cholera there is purely accidental, and that there is good reason to believe that it will neither assume the character nor prevail as long as those epidemics which in former periods and countries decimated the inhabitants. The mildness of the type which the disease has assumed, and the precautions taken at Tunis and other places, give good grounds of hope in this respect. But the report that it has already appeared in Sicily and Constantinople leaves ground for apprehension.

Besides, it is a peculiarity of cholera epidemics that they are most frequently made up of a succession of partial local outbreaks not only in different districts, but in the same place. The pestilence will often visit a place at the beginning of the epidemic, then leave it for a time, and afterward return. Under these circumstances, it is too early to predict that it is about to cease its ravages in Egypt and the East, or that it will not visit the western countries. There are strong reasons, however, to believe that the alarming accounts of its ravages are exaggerations. Besides the present epidemic cycle seems to favor the production of diseases allied more or less closely to influenza, a circumstance apparently unfavorable to the early invasion of cholera.

HOW CHOLERA IS PROPAGATED.

It is almost universally considered by physicians that local causes of unhealthfulness are necessary for the development and propagation of cholera in its epidemic form. Dr. Farr shows that in London the lower the soil the greater the prevalence and mortality of the pestilence. Impure water also has a powerful influence over the intensity of the disease; yet neither bad weather nor low soil are necessary elements in the generation of cholera poison. Decomposing animal refuse giving forth putrid odors, bone factories, dead bodies even of victims of cholera undergoing dissection, it has been observed, do not tend particularly to scatter the disease. But animal excrement undergoing fermentation is a most active disseminator. When slums and rookeries tenanted by the foulest of the human race have been passed over comparatively unharmed, cholera will often enter the mansions of wealthy families, having no other palpable cause of insalubrity. Persons appeared to suffer in proportion to the contamination of the air they breath with the "privy odor," and immunity from this appeared to secure immunity from cholera. Observations in London, Munich, New Orleans, Baltimore, and other towns, confirm this assertion.

We can now understand the relation of cholera to filthy habits and defective drainage, its predominance in low levels and "made land," its striking tendency to follow the natural line of watershed, its communication to persons who have never been in contact with the sick the contamination of those who have been brought within range of the exhalations of infected persons, and the propagations of the disease in workhouses, barracks, prisons and places of public resort. In India the very dust often appears to be propagated with cholera.—Soldiers encamping where former bodies of troops affected with this disease had encamped, are almost sure to contract it. In all countries the lower classes suffer the worst. The inhabitants of brothels, tenement houses and underground apartments die off like rotten sheep. Thin owing partly to cachexia and lowering of the vital energies, and partly to the noxious exhalations with which the fomites of cholera really unites in the work of incubating pestilence.

A CLERICAL STOCK-GAMBLER.

The Rev. Mr. —— succeeded his father. He had one of the largest, and most fashionable, certainly the wealthiest congregation in the city of his sect, representing $5,000,000 to $6,000,000. They adopted the son as their pastor before the death of his father, and showered on him every favour, benefit, and good office. His salary was $7,000 a year, and the gifts of his parishioners, together with church fees, would probably amount to as much more. He was beloved and honoured by everybody. Two years ago his father died and left him, his only son, $50,000.

Two years and a half ago, the Rev. Mr. —— was induced by a friend to purchase a few shares in railway stocks in Wall street. He was lucky at the outset; was induced to dip further; was again lucky; and luck led him on to ruin. From that time up to about a year ago, he kept his Wall street broker employed with varied success. From dealing in stocks he went into gold gambling; the end of that need hardly be realized. He soon found himself not only bankrupt, but he had sacrificed all his mother's estate, had involved his wife's father to the tune of $100,000, and had rendered two or three of his wealthy parishioners liable to the loss of sums varying from $150,000 to $500,000.

He now found himself but little better than a beggar in the world. The proper ecclesiastic authority interfered, took the matter up, and manifested great indignation. I was selected as a go-between for both parties. I accepted the office; I found the authorities unanimous against the Rev. Mr ——, and advised him to resign, as it would be idle and absurd to contend against that body. He adopted my advice; resigned, took his family to a sequestered retreat in a neighbouring state, where they reside, consigned to poverty. Some months ago a few of the members of the Rev. Mr. ——'s congregation raised a fund of $30,000 for him, and urged him to quit his native land for a while, and sojourn in Europe. He accepted their proposition, and is now in Germany. His sad fate should be a terrible warning to all clergymen against stock-gambling.

The unfortunate clergyman here referred to I have been intimately acquainted with for ten or fifteen years. He was young when I first knew him; splendidly educated, eloquent, and possessed great masculine beauty. Being beyond his parish for the last four years, I had not known of his misfortune. I am led to know that his character, outside of his stock speculations, remains untarnished, even by the breath of suspicion. And I hope and pray to God, as he is yet young, that he may return to his native land and outlive his disasters.—N. Y. Cor. Providence Journal.

THE DECOY WHICH MAKES YOUNG MEN DRUNKARDS.—Go with us to a public house, where a number of young men are assembled. All is fair and gaiety. A few among them may be young and timid. They approach the counter, and wine, rum brandy are called for. One or two may stand back, and say, "No, gentlemen, we do not drink any; please excuse us." Immediately the rest turn and begin to taunt their friends who refuse to drink, saying they are afraid of getting "tight," of the "old man," and some may whisper audibly "Well, they are mean fellows—they are mean fellows—they are afraid they will have to spend a cent!" Here, you see, two very sensitive nerves are touched. Courage and Cleverness. Their bosoms swell with pride, and rather than bear these flings of their companions, they step up to the counter, and soon join in the revelry. The ice is now broken, the first act in the great drama performed. Others follow in natural order, until the individual who refuses to drink at first, reels along the public street without shame. Such is the manner in which thousands of our promising young men are led away by a false ambition, and thousands more will follow in their path, unless they learn the meaning of courage.

THE LARGEST CITY.—A very erroneous idea is prevalent regarding the largest city in the world; many confidently asserting that London is far superior to any other both in size and in number of inhabitants. But such is not the case. Jeddo, the capital of Japan, is, without exception, the largest and most populous city in the world. It contains the vast number of 1,000 000 dwellings, and 5,000,000 of human souls. Many of the streets are sixteen Japan nerls in length, which is equivalent to twenty-two English miles.

SWEARING AT SEA.—A clergyman, who had been particularly recommended to the captain of a vessel, was sailing from France to America, when the captain, who saw that a storm was approaching, said to him:—"Sir, you are not accustomed to the rolling of the vessel; you had better get down as fast as possible into the hold. As long as you hear the sailors swearing and blaspheming, you may be assured there is no good hopes; but if you should hear them embracing and reconciling themselves to each other, you may make up your accounts with Heaven." As the storm increased, the clergyman from time to time despatched his companion to the hatchway to see how matters went on deck. "Aha! Sir," said he, returning, "all is lost the sailors are swearing like demoniacs; then all is right." "O! Heaven be praised," said the clergyman, "then all is right."

INFLUENCE OF IRON ON VEGETATION.—A curious discovery was lately made regarding the influence of iron on vegetables. On the chalky shores of France and England, where there is absence of iron, vegetation has a sere and blanched appearance. This is entirely removed, it is said, by the application of a solution of sulphate of iron. Haricot beans watered with this substance acquired an additional weight of 60 per cent. Mulberries, peaches, pears, vines and wheat, derive advantages from the same treatment. In the cultivation of clover wonderful advantages have been also gained by the application of sulphate of iron on soils in which that ingredient is wanting and in cases where it is desired to produce an early crop. The material is of course cheap and the quantity small. All the scales falling around the blacksmith's anvil should be saved for the land—they are worth five cents a quart to the garden rake. No fruit is so much benefitted by iron rust in the soils as the pear.—Maine Farmer.

CULTIVATE TASTE IN THE YOUNG.—It is of great importance that the young should be encouraged in the pursuit of objects, whether of instruction or amusement, which are in accordance with good taste. If this feeling be encouraged the best results may be expected; it will deter them from following any course or ill regulated inclination, and will give an elegant and enlightened bias to their minds. The improvement of taste seems to be more or less connected with every good land and strong disposition. By giving frequent occasion to all the tender and human passions, a cultivated taste increases most surely, yet, at the same time, it tends to soften the most violent and angry emotions.

A VERY SAFE POWDER.—The Safety Powder Company's Works, Southdown, Plymouth, Plymouth, blew up the other day. A telegram announcing their destruction states:—"From the nature of the patent powder, its explosion was harmless to the neighbourhood." Powder, when of the explosion is harmless to the neighbourhood in which it occurs, is perhaps little likely to do much harm in any circumstance. This sort of powder seems calculated for exportation to foreign countries for the use of enemies of England, or the supply of plunderers of their neighbours, like the King and people of Prussia. It is just the powder with which one would choose to be shot at.

MAKING A BEGINNING.—Remember in all things that if you do not begin you will never come to an end. The first seed pulled in the garden, the first seed in the ground the first shilling put in the savings' bank, the first mile of a journey, are all important things; then make a beginning, and thereby a hope, a promise, a pledge, and assurance that you are in earnest with what you have undertaken. How many a poor idle, erring, hesitating outcast is now creeping and crawling through the world, who might have held up his head and prospered if, instead of putting off his resolutions of industry and amendment, he had only made a beginning!

THURSDAY, AUGUST 31, 1865.

Do we agitate as much as we ought?

This is a question of importance, and requires consideration before we can answer it aright. Many will say, because agitation disturbs their repose a little, that there is too much of it, too much ado about everything, so that of late there is nothing but agitation; yet it may just as reasonably be said, is there not need for it? Another question of importance is, can anything be effected without it? or what good was ever brought about by remaining silent? We say we are too quiet now, so much so that a word is scarcely ever heard about anything. Last session of the County Council, a motion was passed to memorialize the Government to enact that the rate of interest should not be greater than seven per cent. With the exception of a short article in the papers, one for it, and, of course, the other against it, the matter has been allowed to die; whereas, wisdom would have dictated a ten pennie discussion of the merits and demerits of the present system, and perhaps some judgment could have been formed and communicated to our legislators concerning the matter. There is another question that affects this County and the whole Province, as much that one—and concerning it we believe there is very little division of opinion—that is, the state of our Wild Lands and the wisdom of keeping them at prices that a poor man is unable to pay. We all know that the land is not of the best quality, that there are many obstacles to encounter in the first settlement of such a country; and we further know that those who have gone into the back country have complained of what they have had to endure; and should the government think of demanding the amount of purchase money, assuredly the people could not pay it, unless the land was sold by auction, and then it would not bring the government price. In the early settlement of even this County, it was found necessary to give free grants to those who went in and settled; and had it not been done, one half of the portion now settled would never have been as it is now. There should be agitation from one end of the Province to the other, until the government would see that the people demanded it, then it would be given. It is what is required to encourage settlement—to induce men to go in and sweat the life consequent upon living in the woods and among the rocks of the back part of this County, as well as other parts of Canada. Instead of endeavoring to obtain this right, (which we believe it to be) by agitation or other fair means, we are completely dumb; not a word is said about the matter. And yet we are assured the the future of the back country depends very much on the action of government just now. It is also of very little use to spend money in constructing roads and building bridges, unless something more is done to induce industrious immigrants and others to go in and take the land. The American government has always been liberal in granting land to actual settlers. A good farm is generally given to those who will take it: enterprise also goes in, with the settler, in the way of building roads, railroads, towns and even cities, so to speak. Trade is commenced, and the luxuries of life brought to the shanty door almost as soon as erected. This news goes to Europe, and immediately thousands, nay, hundreds of thousands, follow. A new State is formed: and what is of more value to the American people than even a State, a principle of literality is established that brings thousands more to their country. The comfort and happiness of the subject attaches him to the government; and this seldom, if ever, is extinguished. Hence everywhere you find Americans representing their country as the greatest and best under the sun. Let the Canadian Government do likewise and like results will follow. One way to obtain this is to agitate, to petition, and give no rest till we obtain that, which we believe to be a simple right to the country, and which, if the cost of survey only is charged, will be no loss to either the Government or country or any individual, while it would increase the population of the Province, increase consumption, and thus increase the revenue. Is the country fit for settlement? and are the same conveniences that Americans possess obtainable here? We believe both of these can be answered in the affirmative, and that all that is required to make Canada happy and prosperous is to act liberally towards intending settlers, keep down taxation, and try to maintain peace with all around us and among ourselves.

Buckhorn Road.

The Government has provided the necessary funds, and is now about to push forward this road to completion. On Monday next T. F. Nicholl, Esq., commences operations with 30 men, and ere long we shall be able to report progress. The Road south of Buckhorn, through Smith, is also being rapidly repaired under the supervision of Mr. McIlmoile. We are informed that Mr. McIlmoile has brought down many a high pinge and filled up numerous low places, thus materially improving the road, and, of course, the means of ingress to the back country.

"Ourselves and others."

Under the above caption our town contemporary, last week, makes statements, which neither facts nor figures will bear out. On several occasions we have pointed out the very erroneous manner of calculating and reasoning our contemporary is prone to; but if we name the Review, we write loosely; if we should say the Review is published in Peterborough, it would be declared false and a misstatement of facts on our part; and should the word Proprietor of the Review be used, it is personal abuse. To talk about the amenities of journalism and fair dealings, by one who all along has shown himself willing and ready to pervert every word and sentence of an opponent, is something really ridiculous; or for one who will not hesitate to declare that we have "manufactured out of whole cloth," when the only possible, logical inference that could be drawn from his remarks was the one we drew, and still cry "fair dealing," is beyond our ideas of Journalism. Furthermore we assert that the greater part of our contemporary's ebullition of last week, is like all he has written concerning us heretofore, unfair and untrue. we neither pervert nor misstate facts; nor do we persist in such thing. We write what we and others know to be true; and we are sure that our contemporary would not write as he has done, but that his moral feelings must be so blunted that falsehood is as sweet to him as truth. He will say this is personal abuse; but let any one read last week's Review for something more abusive. Perhaps the Review is privileged to speak as he is prompted, let what will do it.

The following morceau of self praise, in a Journal of such loose habits, we believe could only be found in the columns of our Town contempory:—"Our conduct has been "straight-forward, and our intentions fair "and honorable." When our readers will understand that the author of the above, after the Printing had been awarded to the Examiner Office, got up an underhand petition to the Councillors, and had it left with them about ten or twenty minutes before the hour of meeting, with the intention, if possible, of obtaining, (by honorable or dishonorable means) the two-pence-halfpenny affair of the Printing; and now talks about honor and straight-forwardness! Enough of it!! The less said by our contemporary concerning honorableness, fair dealing or truthfulness, the more consistent he will be.

Accident to a Steamer.

The Canadian inland steamer Spartan, on her downward passage on Saturday, as she had passed a point of land out from the Indian Reserve on the Caughnawaga side, and just as the pilot was preparing to run the rapids, struck a sunken rock, and settled. There were about 320 passengers on board, 70 of whom were ladies, 40 seamen and 30 apprentices. The seamen belonged to Her Majesty's steamship Duncan, and had been on a tour to the Lakes; they rendered important services in saving those on board. The indians from Caughnawaga also rendered great aid, although we are told that the ladies at first feared to trust themselves with the Indians. All were saved. The accident was due in a great degree to the lateness of the evening, being about six o'clock, and a smoky atmosphere caused by fires in the woods. It is believed that the Spartan will also be saved.

Atlantic Cable.

The steamship Great Eastern had arrived at Crook Haven on the 17th, whence she repaired to Sheerness, probably to make further preparations. Atlantic Cable prospects are generally regarded as hopeful: shares improved ¾ per cent. It is thought that arrangements will be made for the immediate renewal of efforts to recover the cable.

Drowned.

John Holloway, a resident of Buckhorn, was drowned at Deer Bay on the 14th inst. Deceased was out hunting with some friends, and was off some distance when he fired off his gun at some ducks, and his canoe upset. Coroner Harvey held an inquest, and a verdict of accidental drowning was rendered.

Law.

Among those who have passed their final examination and been admitted to the bar, we find the name of Mr. J. Burnham, of this town. We learn that the examination has been very satisfactory.

Military.

We learn with pleasure that Mr. J. Z. Rogers, Ashburnham, has passed examination at the Military School, Hamilton, and received a second class certificate.

Robberies.

In the township of Camden, near Chatham, several farmers have had their houses robbed while the inmates were at church.—One of the parties has been arrested and turns out to be a notorious horse thief.

The Millbrook Messenger is again resuscitated, and the first copy of it in its new state is before us. It is published on a small sheet, but is neatly got up; the letter type being very clear. We wish the enterprise every success.

The weather continues very dry. The harvest is well settled, but until rain comes it appears useless to commit seed to the ground. The season so far, however, has been favorable for everything but pasture.

Our thanks are due to the Hon. Bills Flint for several parliamentary and other important papers.

It is reported that General Lee will leave the country, and that he will go to London to finish his history of the rebellion.

POLICE COURT.

August 28th.

John McAlvey charged Peter Mullen with stabbing him with a knife on Sabbath evening. McAlvey had been shown into Mullen's bed-room, in Armstrong's Hotel, when the parties disagreed, and Mullen took out a knife and stabbed McAlvey, but not dangerously. Mullen was fined $17 and costs, or six weeks in Jail; he paid the fine, however, and left, a poorer if not a wiser man.

Chief Constable Arnott charged Patrick Welch, John Cunion and Richard Pie, three hard-looking cases, with being drunk and disorderly on Sabbath morning. Fined $2 and costs ($3.56), or in default of immediate payment, 14 days in Jail. Cunion paid down and left; Welch and Pie were escorted to the grand Rendezvous of such characters, when, after due consideration, and by the aid of their friends, they were enabled to pay $5.92 each, and were then permitted to take fresh air.

The holders of the United States Securities are already beginning to grumble about the modus operandi of their payment. A correspondent in the New York Times, of the 18th, signed G., after alluding to the disadvantage of small capitalists holding United States securities, which he lays down as the first ground of his complaint, goes on to say: "Another objection, more serious, is that certificates of indebtedness must be sent by mail from New York to Washington, at the owner's risk, for redemption, through a cheque on New York, returned to him, also by mail." It is quite clear that there is room for objection to this course of proceedings, as the Government securities might be redeemed at New York, and at other places where the United States Treasury is represented. This course would save a deal of trouble, and facilitate the collection of the interest due to the small capitalists.

From our Toronto Correspondent.

Toronto, August 29th, 1865.

THE INTERNATIONAL CRICKET MATCH.

I have delayed writing this week until the last moment, so that I could give you the result of the International Cricket Match. Upon it seven of the choicest Cricketers of the United States and eleven of this part of Western Canada, as owing to some mismanagement in some quarter, there were none of the eleven but what were either from this city or Hamilton, the eastern part of the Province being unrepresented. It is very much to be regretted that in anything in which the honor of the country is at stake, little petty jealousies are allowed to creep in to mar the whole affair. I have no doubt, but if the Montreal Clubs could have been induced to unite with the West, they could have made a much stronger eleven; although taking it as it has gone, the eleven on whom the honor of Canada rested for the time being, have done their best and made a very fair fight of it. It has been a very closely contested match, and very good play on both sides. The fielding of the Americans was splendid, believed to be better than ever seen before in this city. Mr. Rogerson has made himself some warm admirers for his style; take him in whatever position he was called upon to act—in the field, at the wicket, or wielding the bat—he came to the mark as a "tip top" Cricketer; in fact all the United States eleven were good. I cannot leave off without recording one of the most pretty pieces of batting I have ever seen. Mr. Rivet, an officer of the 16th Regiment, from Hamilton, made one stroke which carried off the palm of the whole match; he hitted the ball completely and sent it toward the grand stand, it went very near over, struck the side of the stand, and fell in behind a shutter of one of the openings; he made seven runs out of it, and deserved it highly. The wicket-keeping of Mr. Patterson, of the Canadians, was very pretty; but though the Canadians got well, they were beaten and I cannot tell you correctly whether by one or two wickets to go down, as I could not stop to the close of the match, and can hardly get any one to inform me exactly; one thing all agree in, and that is that Canada is beaten, and a good many do not like that. When they meet again I hope they will have done with their jealousies, and pick out a first-rate eleven from all Canada, and not have Toronto monopolizing it all.

SCAMPS AND THEIR VICTIMS.

I have met with a vast number of cases of the neatest kind of "shaving" as performed on some of our simpletons on the other side of the lines by the Scamps who infest most of the cities and towns there, follows who have, during the past four years of the war, cheated, and acquired for a living and now that their occupation is gone, they have to resort to the lowest kind of thieving and stealing. The plan they very often adopt, is to look out for some of our foolish canadians who have put their lives in jeopardy for them in fighting their battles, and as they are payed off they watch and dodge round them until they get the simpleton to join them in a drinking bout, when they get that "accomplished, between "forty rad" whiskey and drugs, they are soon fast asleep, and the sharpers make a clean sweep and leave them to get home to Canada minus their "greenbucks." I have no pity for them as I think they deserve even worse treatment than all this at their hands, "served them right" say I; what better do mere mercenaries deserve who leave their own country to fight for filthy lucre, they are reaping the fruits of their labours. I have beheld some of them walk the streets of the beautiful City of Toronto in midday barefooted, with hardly as much as would cover them from the scorching sun, examples to our young men to avoid their paths. Better to remain in our own Canada, and reap the fruits of honest labour, though it may not appear so much, than to go there in the present state of society, and get into the whirlpool of fraud and villiany which is undermining all that is good or great in that land; to all appearance nothing is great there only the man who can make the greatest haul from his fellow men, no matter how he does it. I fear the war has not taught them sufficiently yet, and that still more cruel punishment awaits them.

WILLIE.

We give below an interesting letter from a friend now journeying in the British Islands. A perusal of it will amply repay the trouble.

Church Hill, August 3, 1865.

My intention of writing to you once a week has been entirely frustrated by my visit to England. I left here on the 3rd July, and did not return till the 30th. This journey I think I shall ever consider as an era in my life; my visit to London one of the things never to be forgotten. How I wished for your company, that we might have enjoyed together the most grand and magnificent sights which this world presents; but as I had to look on them alone, I must endeavour to give you as good a description as I possibly can of what I saw, although I would say by way of introduction, that no description, from even the most gifted individual, can convey the faintest idea of what the reality is.

I believe the greater part of the land in England is the best I ever looked on. From Liverpool to London by the Great Northern, a distance of 200 miles, I could not observe a single acre of poor land; all equal to the lawn in front of Benmore Glebe, and through all the central shires that I passed it appeared equally good. With such a soil it is no wonder that farmers should prosper. Judging by the number of farm houses I saw, I should conclude that the rural population is not so great as with us in Canada. The great bulk of the population is confined to the towns, where manufacturing is carried on to an immense extent. Indeed every village has its factories, and presents a striking contrast to Ireland in that respect.

On visiting London the chief feelings one experiences are those of wonder and astonishment. The immense crowds of people running hither and thither; the bustle, the hurry, the confusion; the multitude of omnibuses, the thousands of cabs; the beautiful parks, laid out in the most exquisite styles; the magnificent palaces, the residences of the landed aristocracy and the equally wealthy merchant princes; the hovels in which the unfortunate and the profligate endeavour to exist, form a picture which must be seen to be at all understood. I can do little more than enumerate the chief places of interest which I visited; anything like a description would fill a dozen letters.

The Houses of Parliament are considered as ranking amongst the finest buildings.—The original estimate for them was £750,000. £3,000,000 have already been expended. The materials already used in the building include 900,000 tons of stone, 24,000,000 of bricks, and 5,000 tons of iron. The splendour of the interior defies description, and must be seen to be appreciated. Convenient to it is the great Hall of William Rufus, which Macaulay says has resounded with acclamations at the inauguration of 30 kings. It is 270 feet long, 74 feet wide and 90 feet high. Here Warren Hastings was tried for misconduct in India, as was likewise the ill-fated Caroline, consort of George IV.

I spent a few hours most agreeably in Westminster Abbey, where lie nearly all our kings, queens and princes, from the time of Edward the Confessor to George II.

One feels there that the ground is sacred, as containing the ashes of the great and good, the noble and the mighty of eight or ten centuries. What a host of illustrious persons, passed away from this stage of existance, there meet the gaze. Princes, poets, philosophers and warriors have here silently moulderd into dust. Here the rival statesmen are at peace, and the tongue of the orator is forever still. Amongst the many inmates I noticed I would merely mention Chaucer, Spencer, Shakespeare, Butler, Gay, Addison, Dryden, Garrick, Goldsmith, Campbell, and Macaulay, whilst there are splendid monuments of John Duke of Argyle, Lord Chatham, Sir Isaac Newton, Burke, Major Andre, William Pitt, Charles James Fox and a host of others.

The annals of the Tower as a state prison are replete with gloomy and fearful events. As we descend Tower Hill the heavy walls rise before us, grim witness of a bygone age. Dark shadows of the past seem to enshroud the gloomy fabric. I looked on the Traitor's Gate and thought how often had grandeur and even royalty passed beneath its portals to exchange honour and glory for the prison, the rack and the fatal block and axe. Here Sir Walter Raleigh was confined 12 years in a cell 10 by 8; and here Anne Boleyn was beheaded: the place of her execution is still pointed out; and here lady Jane Grey suffered martyrdom, of whom old Fuller says that she had "the innocence of childhood, the beauty of youth, the nobility of middle age, the gravity of old age, the learning of a clerk and the life of a saint, all at eighteen." (The sentence is so fine that I could not help transcribing it.)

I can merely state that in addition to the place already enumerated, I visited the British Museum, which contains all the curiosities of ancient and modern times, and in which you could spend a week very pleasantly. The Zoological Gardens, in which you will find every species of Bird, Reptile and Beast. The Royal Academy containing the most magnificent pictures in the world. St. Paul's Church, the Thames Tunnel, Greenwich Hospital, and a host of other places which I have hardly time to even mention. Madame Tussaud's Bazaar of Wax Work is also one of the great sights of London; there you see genuine likenesses of all the eminent men and women of modern times. The Kings and Queens of England are well represented; commencing with William the Conqueror and his wife Matilda, we have William Rufus, Henry I., Stephen, Richard I. and his Queen, Berengeria, John, Henry III, &c., &c., all dressed in the costumes of the periods in which they lived; Henry VII and his six wives form a group by themselves, while in another quarter we see James I, Charles I and Oliver Cromwell in a suit of armour of the period, Charles II, James II, William of glorious, pious and immortal memory. We have also all the Georges with their consorts, likewise our own most gracious Majesty Queen Victria, Prince Albert, Albert Prince of Wales, and rest of the Royal Family, the Duke of Wellington laid out in state, and Napoleon I in a similar position. There is a separate apartment called the Room of Horrors, in which you find casts of the most notable criminals of modern times, and their name is legion; but I can stop here no longer as I must attempt, however feebly, to give you a description of the greatest and by far the most magnificent of the many sights of London—the Crystal Palace. You are aware that it is formed almost entirely of glass and looks so fragile that you would imagine a slight breeze would blow it away, yet it is capable of resisting all the storms that can beat against it. It seems more like a picture of some eastern romance than a reality. You imagine yourself rather in fairy land than an inhabitant of this world of ours. Its park, its pleasure grounds, gardens and fountains its architectural courts, its numerous busts, its statuary and picture galleries are such a sight as a person can only expect to see once in a lifetime, and when once seen can never be forgotten.

I went to hear Spurgeon preach and was highly pleased with him, he is indeed a thoroughly sincere earnest man; and the immense congregation that listened to him in the most attentive manner is the best proof of his popularity. I had also the pleasure of seeing Livingston of African notoriety, but he is a miserable speaker and I cannot say that his oration either edified or pleased me.

I was also up to the North of England and had a sail on Lake Windermere. It is indeed very beautiful being surrounded by the wild and rugged mountains of Westmarland, and many English gentlemen having their beautiful residences along its borders adds greatly to its attractions. After London, Dublin appears small and quite insignificant; its exhibition, however, considering the size and resources of the place, is highly creditable; but I made the great mistake of leaving it for the last. Had I called there on my way to London I should have been able to have done it a little more justice should I write you again previous to my leaving I should probably endeavour to give you a description of somethings I saw there and the opinion I formed of the city.

Yours, &c., W.

To the Editor of the Peterborough Examiner.

SIR,—In answer to your correspondent in last weeks issue, asking information with regard to the money collected for the erection of a monument to the late W. S. Conger, Esq., we beg leave to state, for the information of your correspondent and others interested, that we still hold the amount of money collected (about fifty dollars) subject to the orders of the committee when they fulfil their duty, or, in the event of their failure to do so, to be returned to the parties from whom it was collected.

The insinuation of your correspondent that we applied the money collected to our own use and benefit, would only proceed from a heart that would be very likely to do so himself under the same circumstances.

By inserting the above in your valuable paper you will oblige.

Yours respectfully,

A. STEWART,
JAMES BEST,
ROBERT HAMILTON.

Peterborough, Aug. 30th, 1865.

Mr. Russels Account of the Accident to the Electric Cable.

THE ACCIDENT EXPLAINED.

I will now endeavour to explain to you how the fatal accident occured. I say fatal for, although as I write we are drifting down upon the spot in the hope of getting hold of the cable with grapnels, I scarcely venture to hope the attempt will be crowned with success. Let the reader turn his face towards a window, imagine that he is standing on the bows of the Great Eastern and then of course on his right will be the starboard, on his left the port side of the ship. When the cable was hauled round on the left hand side and passed over the four wheels, it was carried over a drum, which we must suppose to be behind the spectator, and coiled up as fast as it was delivered from the picking up apparatus. But, when the engines failed to work this apparatus, of course the cable remained motionless, and, as the ship was drifted by the wind from right to left and slightly forward, at last the cable came close up to the bow and under the fore foot of the ship.

THE POSITION OF THE SHIP.

There are aft the bows of the Great Eastern two large bawse holes, the iron rims of which projected more than a foot beyond the line of the stern. Against one of these the cable caught on the left hand side, whilst the ship kept moving to the left and thus chafed and strained the cable greatly against the bow—The Great Eastern could not go astern, lest the cable should be snapped, and without motion some way there is no power of steerage.

THE CRITICAL MOMENT.

At this critical moment, too, the wind shifted so as to render it more difficult to keep the head of the ship up to the cable, as the cable then chafed so much that in two places damage was done to it. A shackle pin and a wire rope belonging to one of the cable buoys were passed over the cable and secured in a bight below the bawse hole; these were hauled so as to bring the cable to the right hand side of the boat, the ship still drifting to the left. It was necessary to do this instead of bearing away, as we were near the end of the cut of the cable.

THE V WHEEL.

In the boat there is an iron wheel with a deep groove and an V wheel from the groove by the side of which is a similar but smaller wheel On the same axis the cable and the wire rope together were running over the bows of the groove in the larger wheel, the cable being wound upon a drum behind by the machinery which was once more in motion, and the wire rope being taken in round the capstain by hars, but the rope and cable were not coming up in a right line, but were being hauled in with a great strain on them at an angle from the right hand side to the left, and such angle from the V, to the wheel; still, as they came with the strain shown on the indicator to be very high, but not near the breaking point. At last up came the cable and the wire rope shackling together in the V wheel in the bow.

THE WINDING UP.

They were wound round it slowly and were passing over this wheel together, the first engaged part being on board, when a jar was given to the dynamometer which flew up from 2240 cwt. the highest point marked, with a sudden jerk, three and a half inches. In fact the chain shackle and wire rope clamber as it were up one by the groove on the right hand side of the V of the wheel, got on the top of the rim of the V wheel and rushed down with a crash on the small wheel, giving no doubt a severe shock to the cable to which it was attached.

A TERRIBLE BOUND.

The machinery was still in motion; the cable and the rope travelling at full speed, one towards the captain, the other towards the drum, when just as the cable reached the dynamometer it parted, and with one bound leaped as it were over a few feet intervening space and splashed into the sea. It is not possible for any words to portray the dismay with which the sight was witnessed and the noise heard.

THE TERRIBLE SIGNALLER.

The Terrible was signalled that the cable had parted and was requested to bear down to us which she did and came to all our port beam. After a brief consideration, Mr Canning whose presence of mind and self-possession never left him, determined, though it seemed egregious folly, to seek for the Cable in the bottom of the Atlantic, to get out his grapnels, drop down on it and try to pick it up. The Great Eastern towed ten or twelve miles in the westward and eastward of the position in which she was when the Cable went down, in order to throw out the grapnels and wire rope and drift down across the course of the track in which the Cable was supposed to be lying. Although all utterance of hope was suppressed and no word of confidence escaped the lips, the mocking shadows of both were treasured in some quiet nook of the fancy the doctrine of chances could not touch such a contingency as we had to speculate upon. And now came forth.

THE GRAPNELS,

two five-armed anchors with flukes, sharply curved and tapering to an oblique tooth-like end, the hooks with which the Great Deguse was going to fish from the Great Eastern for a bed with all its belongings represents more than a million in value. The ship stood away some 13 or 14 miles from the spot where the accident occurred, and then lay to in smooth water, with the Terrible in company. The grapnels, weighing three hundred weight, shackled and secured to a length of wire buoy rope, of which there were two miles on board, whose breaking strain was calculated at ten tons, was brought up to the bows and thrown over, and whistled through the sea a prey to fortune. At first the iron sank but slowly, but soon the movement of descent increased so as to lay great stress on the picking-up machinery, which was rendered available in lowering the novel messenger with a warrent of search for the fugitive hidden in mysterious caverns beneath. Length flew after length, over came wheel and drum, till the iron was running with work heated at last to such intensity as to convert the water thrown upon the machinery into clouds of steam. One thousand fathoms! Fifteen hundred fathoms! Two thousand fathoms!—Hundreds again—mounting up until at 5.56 p.m., the strain was diminished, and at 2,500 fathoms, or 15,000 feet, the grapnel reached

THE BED OF THE ATLANTIC,

and set to its task of finding and holding the Cable. The grappling was renewed on the succeeding days, but the ropes were not of sufficient strength and parted while the Cable was several hundred fathoms below the surface. Having exhausted her supply of grappling apparatus, the

GREAT EASTERN STARTED FOR ENGLAND

the 11th of August, and the Terrible made for St. Johns.

THE FAILURE TO LAY THE CABLE.—It appears from a detailed account of the loss of the cable, that the causes of the failure were, first, pieces of wire stuck into it, and second, the inability of the Great Eastern to keep up steam in the operation of drawing in the cable to remedy a flaw. Everything was complete about the cable with the exception of these needles of wire stuck into it, and everything was complete about the paying-out apparatus, which, it seems, did as well in rough as smooth weather; when the operation had to be resumed and the cable hauled in, the steam in some mysterious manner failed, and the people went to dinner, leaving the gress ship to swing about, the cable to twist and chafe against the edges of the bawse pipe. To prevent the possible loss of it on this account, it was strengthened by a chain at the part exposed to friction; and it was in drawing in this portion of the cable and chain together at some very disadvantageous angle, that the cable was subjected to the terrible strain which broke it. Had there been no bits of wire in it, the cable could have been landed easily in the time first contemplated; or had there been sufficient means of keeping up steam while picking it up, the delays caused by the bits of wire would neither have been long nor dangerous.

Another Confession by Dr. Pritchard.

(From the Glasgow Mail, July 21st.)

This miserable and ill-fated man has made a further confession, which we give in full:—

"Confession by Edward William Pritchard, and made in the presence of an all-seeing God, and of the Rev. T. Watson Reid, my present spiritual adviser, on this 19th day of July, 1865, at Glasgow Prison, for communication to the proper authorities.

"I, Edward William Pritchard, in the full possession of my senses, and understanding the awful position in which I am placed, do make free and open confession that the sentence pronounced upon me is just. That I am guilty of the death of my mother-in-law, Mrs. Taylor, and of my wife, Mary Jane Pritchard. That I can assign no motive for the conduct which actuated me, beyond a species of terrible madness and the use of ardent spirits.

"I hereby freely and fully state that the confession made to the Rev. R. S. Oldham, on the 11th day of this month, was not true and I hereby confess that I alone, not Mary McLeod, poisoned my wife in the way brought out in evidence at my trial. That Mrs. Taylor's death was caused according to the wording of the indictment, I further state to be true, and the main facts brought out in my trial. I hereby fully acknowledge, and now plead wholly and solely guilty thereto—and may God have mercy on my soul.

"I pray earnestly for repentance not to be rejected of, and for forgiveness from Almighty God through the intercession of our blessed Redeemer, Mediator, and Advocate — Jesus Christ, our Lord and Saviour.

"Fellow creatures, pray for me; and let me add, I am in charity with all men.

"I have now to record my humble thanks to all who have taken part in any way for my interest. First, to their lordships the judges, for their great patience, forbearance, and careful consideration of my case, and to the gentlemen of the jury. To all the officials I cannot help mentioning the Clerk of the High Court of Judiciary, the Governor, Mr. Smith, of the Edinburgh gaol, the chaplain, Rev Mr Russell; head warder Nelson; warders John Livingstone and Mackintosh; the Governor of Glasgow prison, Mr Sterling; Mr Armour, head warder; chaplain, Mr Doran; his assistant, Messrs. Hogg and Troup; warders Buttrie, Thomason, &c. To Drs Leishman and Dewar, surgeons to the Glasgow prison; and Dr. Simpson, of Edinburgh gaol. To the non-officials my heartfelt thanks are specially due—to the Rev Dr. Miller, of Free St. Matthew's, Glasgow, and other ministers who have written me, not adding their names; to Dr. Norman McLeod (may God bless him); and to my own immediate faith-professors Rev. R. S. Oldham and Rev. T. Watson Reid; to the police authorities, Superintendent McCall, and police at the Central Office, Glasgow; to Sergeant Stewart, of the Edinburgh police force; and the sheriff officers Wilson, of Glasgow, and Ferguson of Edinburgh; and to many others whose courtesy and kindness I cannot forget; above all to Sir Archibald Alison, Bart., Sheriff, &c., for his humane, gentle treatment while undergoing his legal duties.—May each and all accept the thanks of a deeply penitent sinner, and may Heaven be their reward, is the prayer of

"EDWARD WILLIAM PRITCHARD.

"John Stirling, governor, witness
"Edward Geary, warder, witness.
"John Buttrie, warder, witness."

Deeply affecting letters have been received this week by the prisoner from his mother, daughter, and brother, and these, coupled with a desire to clear his mind from a great weight, have led to the confession now published. The prisoner was engaged writing it the most of Thursday and Wednesday, and when he had finished it he seemed greatly relieved, and now his mind seem more at rest.

Yesterday the Rev. Dr Norman McLeod and the Rev. Mr Reid, of Christ Episcopal Church, Mile-End (who is officiating in the absence of the Rev Mr. Oldham), with the Rev Andrew A. Bonar, had a consultation with the Governor regarding the above confession. It was compared with the first confession, which has already been published, and likewise with a subsequent one, which, from its obvious falsity, was never permitted to see the light of day, and the two gentlemen were of opinion that, as it exhibited a truthfulness which the others did not possess, and that, moreover, as he was now apparently in a more penitent frame of mind, it might properly be sent forth to the public after the miserable man had again given his adhesion to it, and of course with the consent of the Prison authorities. The Rev Dr. McLeod and Rev Mr Reid subsequently asked the prisoner's concurrence in the statement; the Rev Mr Bonar not having previously seen it, it was considered unnecessary for him to be present at this interview. The culprit at once gave his consent to it being made public, and gladly received the offices of religion which the two reverend gentlemen proffered. Subsequently, Mr Stirling, the Governor of the Prison, obtained the sanction of the Chairman and other members of the Prison Board for its publication, and hence we are enabled to lay it before our readers this morning.

Mr. Bonar who was sent for by the condemned criminal, immediately after his condemnation, on the suggestion of a lady friend of the prisoner, only arrived in Glasgow on Wednesday and not till late yesterday in going in putting himself in communication with the prisoner. He visited him about eleven o'clock, and found him in a very subdued state of mind, and most anxious to engage in religious conversation and in all religious exercises. They spent three quarters of an hour together, and the culprit expressed his gratification with the interview, and desired a repetition of Mr. Bonar's visit.

The Irish in the States.

Apropos of the contrast recently made by Mr. McGee between the condition of the Irish in the United States and their condition in the British Provinces, we give the following extract from a recent article in the New York Independent, an influential organ of the Republican party. The Independent, in allusion to a series of "anti-Pope-ish" articles in its religious colaborer, the Observer, an aka of the growing power of the Roman Catholic element in the States as a great danger to civil and religious liberty in 1850 the Catholics numbered 100,000 in a population of six millions and a half, or one sixty-fifth of the whole, while in 1860 they were 4,000,000 in a population of 31,000,000, or one-seventh of the whole. The population will continue to increase in power and influence unless some means be found to check it and the Independent gives the following plan to obviate the danger:

"The way in which the United States a large body of men, their numbers increasing as we move southward, who are as ignorant and uneducated as the Irish Catholics. But they have no common religious faith, nor does the power of any man or any priesthood. There are four millions of them, almost the exact number that there are of Catholics; all black, all loyal, and nearly all Protestant. Like the Irish, they reason through their feelings; unlike the Irish, they show a great desire and aptitude for intellectual improvement. Without any free school system whatever, their children are counted in free schools by tens of thousands. While in Washington, Nashville, Richmond, Newbern, wherever Northern Christianity is willing to teach, thousands of adult blacks, laboring by day, study by night. They are unlike the Catholic Irish, in being docile, affectionate and gentle. Their love of music, their willing obedience, their religious aspirations are valuable characteristics. In persistency of labor, for stern and rugged work, the Irish are superior; for the more beautiful qualities of humanity, the blacks. But the Christian especially notes the fact that the Irish are all Catholic, all hostile to the Bible, all haters of Protestantism, while the blacks have an intense desire to read the Word of God, are nearly all Protestant, and all followers of Him who came to let the oppressed go free.

"These two classes are the supplement of each other. Each is rich in the qualities lacking in the other. To one the franchise is granted from his birth, or after a temporary residence. The other must rise from poverty to be worth $250 before he can vote in New York. In States west and south of New York he cannot vote at all. Now, if it is desirable to meet the positive Catholic element in politics or religion by one equally positive in another direction we have but to clothe the black with the same political power we have already given the white. True, the black is uncultivated and ignorant—but so is the Irish. In all our political debates on this question, we remember of no argument against a black voter that is not equally adverse to an Irish one. And the black voter has these advantages: his instincts are on the side of freedom and of Protestantism, he is more susceptible of cultivation, and he is not the tool of priest or layman. The gift of franchise to the black honors the perpetuity of free education and religion in our land. Give the black man a vote, and every Southern State will be loyal, every Northern state true to freedom.—Refuse him the franchise, and the rebellion will not be ended with the generation which gave it birth."

A CHANGE REQUIRED.

The subject of immigration is by no means a simple subject. It is one which enters into the whole economy of the country. It influences its trade and commerce directly and indirectly to a much greater extent than is generally supposed. The extent of the immigration arriving at the port of New York, in comparison with that which arrives at this port, has more than any other cause helped to build up that city to a greater extent than this. We must then inquire why is there a greater immigration arriving at the port of New York than at this? There appears to be but one very particular reason for this. The liberal policy the American Government has adopted with respect to their wild lands. This may appear a very far-fetched reason, but it is the undoubted reason not only of the immigration to that country, but through that particular city. It regulates the rate of wages to a certain extent throughout the whole country; it draws off immediately the surplus population of each locality; it never leaves the labour market glutted for any length of time; so it is that when an imigrant arrives at New York, unless in seasons of very great depression such as the present, he is almost certain to get employment at remunerative rates; because no glut of the labour market can last in a country where each inhabitant can have a farm for asking for it, and on which he knows he can immedi

2. That it shall be lawful for the said Warden to cause any number of debentures to be made for such sums of money as may be required not less than $100 each, and not to exceed in the whole the said sum of $20,000; and that the said debentures shall be sealed with the seal of the said Municipal Council, and be signed by the said Warden and counter-signed by the Treasurer of said County.

3. That said debentures shall be made payable in 20 years at the furthest from the day hereinafter mentioned for this By-law to take effect, at the office of the Treasurer of the said Municipality, and shall have attached to them coupons for the payment of interest.

4. That the said debentures shall bear interest at and after the rate of six per centum, per annum from the date thereof, which interest shall be payable half-yearly, on the first day of April and the first day of October in each year, at the Office of the Treasurer of the said Municipality.

5. That for the purpose of forming a sinking fund for the payment of the said debentures and the interest at the rate aforesaid to become due hereon, an equal special rate of one mill in the dollar shall, in addition to all other rates, be raised, levied and collected in each year upon all the rateable property in the said Municipality during the continuance of the said debentures or any of them.

6. This By-law shall take effect and come into operation upon the 5th day of October, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-five.

Poetry.

My Strong Weakness for Widdies.

Arrah, none o' your boardin' school misses,
Your sweet, timid, sraythar for me,
Who rave about cupid an' blisses.
Yez know not what sayther may be,
I don't feel at all sintimintal,
For romance I care niver a rap;
But give me a jolly and gintle
Young widdy in weeds an' a cap!

To her I would offer my paty,
For in truth all belief it exceeds,
To see how the blossom o' beauty
Is heightened by peepin' from weeds!
She is armed cap-a-pie for the struggle,
To her cap I a captive belong,
And the charms of her ebby little ogle
Is a challenge to courtship an' song!

The the mors o' girlhood are over,
Love's blossom has ripened to fruit,
And her fruit love, ashleep under clover,
Is the nile where my passion shrikes root;
Ris pleasant to know the departed
Was "kindnerly cared to the last;"
And that she will not die broken hearted
If I should pop off just as fast;

Her timper is silver so restive,
Her jity she knows; an' a shape
Is silver so sweetly suggestive
As when it peeps out under crape;
The girl wears won ring when she marries,
In proof she all others discards,
But the widdy wife, wiser, carries
A pair o' these marital guards!

UP A TREE.

A certain Arti-tottle's patriotism broke out demonstratively upon his receipt of the news of the fall of Richmond. He'd have the biggest star spangled banner and the tallest flag staff in Berks county—that's what he would, and he told Aunt Hannah so.

So Aris rushed down to Philadelphia by express train, purchased a forty feet flag, and rushed home by next express. Then Aris set about achieving the longest liberty pole in Berks, out of a straight, hundred and sixty feet—more or less—pine tree, standing on a knoll back of the house.—With the big bunting labled about his shoulders, and armed with a hatchet, he upended the long hay-ladder against the pine, or doubled in among the lower branches, and began cutting his course upwards, trunning close to the trunk every knot and branch as he proceeded.

Having cut his way to the tip top of the tall pine, Arte flung his flag to the breeze, lashed it hard and fast to the staff, hurralled lustily for Grant, "tigered" for Sheridan, and then made the discovery that he had cut off his retreat. There he was, a hundred and fifty feet up in the air, and every individual thing that he could have climbed down by, cut off smooth. Arte's enthusism collapsed in a second, and he hailed the house:

"Hannah! O—Hannah! Come out here."

Out come Hannah, and seeing her husband bumped up into a ball, away up there under the "flag of the free," the old lady piped out to him in key major:

"Why sakes o' me! What is it Arte?"

"Dod dern it, Hannah! I'm up a tree. Can't ye take that are musket and shoot my dinner up here?"

"Why, dear me, Arte, how will you ever get down there?"

"Dun no, Hannah, 'less ye git somebody to chop the derned tree down, and that would een smost kill me. Dod blast the luck!"

Arte clung to his perch just about as long as he could, and then clasping legs and arms about the trunk, he began to slide down stern foremost like a bear, ripping, scraping, and tearing over the rough surface in a way that by the time he touched terra firma, it was about an even question which had lost the most bark—Artemus or the tree.

Three Cents a Mile.

Hallo there, captain, said a brother Jonathan to the captain of a canal packet on the Erie canal, what do you charge for your passage.

Three cents per mile and board, said the captain.

Well, I guess I'll take passage captain, seeing as how I'm kinder gin out, walking so far.

Accordingly he got on board just as the steward was ringing the bell for dinner, Jonathan sat down and began demolishing the fixins, to the consternation of the captain, until he had cleared the table of all that was eatable, when he got up and went on deck, picking his teeth very comfortably.

How far is it, captain, from here to where I got on board.

Nearly one mile and a half, said the captain.

Let's see, said Jonathan, that would be just four and a half; but never mind captain I won't be small, here's five cents which pays my fare here; I guess I'll go ashore now, I am kinder rested out.

Artemus Ward says when he hears the song, "Come where my love lies dreaming," he don't go. He don't think it would be right.

The age of a young lady is now expressed according to the present style of skirts, by saying that eighteen springs have passed over her head!

"Madam, you said your son was a lawyer, has he much practice?"—"Practice?" inquired the old lady, "why, yes sir, he has a practice of smoking cigars.

"My gracious!" exclaimed an urchin in New York, on beholding an English carriage with three footmen in livery, "well if it don't take three Britishers to make one nigger!"

Josh Billings says that "if a man professes to serve the Lord, he likes to see him do it when he measures onions as well as when he hollers glory hallelujah."

"As we two are one," said a witty brute to his wife, "when I beat you I beat half of myself." "Well" said the wife, "then beat your own half, not mine."

A FEELING WITNESS.—A lawyer, upon a circuit in Ireland, who was pleading the case of an infant plaintiff, took the child up in his arms, and presented it to the jury suffused with tear. "his had a great effect, until the opposition lawyer asked the child —"What made you cry?" "He pinched me!" answered the little innocent. The whole crowd was convulsed with laughter.

Excited Orator—"We have taken Atlanta, we have taken Savannah, Charleston, Columbia, and now at last we have captured Petersburg and occupied Richmond, and what remains for us to take?" SEWING MACHINE!

COMPANY.

627 BROADWAY, NEW-YORK.

THE BUTTON HOLE made by this entirely simple and novel machine, are not only equal to the best hand-made in the pearl or right side, but greatly surpassing them in beauty on the wrong side, which is formed by a beautiful braid stitch, made by an extra stitch, which no hand made button-hole possesses, thereby imparting to the same a much greater strength, which renders cording or barring altogether unnecessary.

One Needle and Two Threads are only Used.

Unlike other Sewing Machines it manufactures its own Braid and Cord.

The best Merchant Tailors freely admit that its beauty, finish and strength cannot be attained by the most skilful hand.

Simplicity is one of its great merits, therefore not liable to get out of order, and it can be worked with ease by any young lady, who will, after a few days' experience, make from 1,000 to 1,200 perfect button-holes in one day.

This is the only machine produced that will throw a stitch over the edge, so as to bind and cover it in a manner indispensible for Button-holes, Cording and Braiding, each of which can be done with colored, almded or chine silks, and produce a fabrique of varied colors unexcelled for beauty and taste.

To Ladies at home, Dress, Mantilla and Cloak makers, Shoemakers, Tailors, Hatters, Bookbinders, Saddlers, &c., &c., it is indispensible, it is also admitted to be of great value, to other branches as it Braids, Embroiders, and Cords plain and fancy on all kinds of Cloths, Cassimers, Linen, Velvet Leather, &c., &c.

Instructions and Needles accompany each Machine.

Every Machine is Warranted for Twelve Months.

The Woodman's Reply to "Woodman Spare that Tree."

No, mum; this 'ere tree
Can't be no longer spared;
It ain't no odds to me,
If Master Brown was squared.
But Master Brown are "Green,
You chop that 'ere tree down,"
And what he say he means,
Surely do Master Brown.

I don't possess the 'ed
To bargify with you;
A lady born and bred
Is safe to speak what's true.
But put a case: I takes
A job from Mr. B.,
And little 'tis I makes
Out of the likes of he.

Your heart-strings, and all that,
'Bound this 'ere tree may cling,
To contradict you flat
Would not be quite the thing;
But if you talk of shade,
There's other tough than these;
And other folk- have played,
Mayhap, round other trees.

It's werry good to feel
A moist'ning of the eyes
For chairs of oak and deal,
And old straw hats likewise—
To keep, if you've a mind,
The things as makes you weep,
I've got no fault to find
If they're your own to keep.

But this 'ere old oak tree,
As you don't want cut down,
Excuse me mum, you see,
Belongs to Master Brown.
To him you should apply,
Though 'taint no use, I think;
And if on pleas, mum, I
Should like your health to drink.

THE FARMER'S "DOOR YARD."

"What a nice front yard you have," said a young farmer to a friend of ours a few days since. "You have the most beautiful flowers I have ever seen."

Part of this may have been mere compliment, as the "door yard" in question will not compare with an ordinary suburban lawn and garden. But as it happened to be a farmer's door yard, and is not utterly neglected, it called forth the remark we have quoted.

The young man is the eldest son of one of the most successful farmers in the neighbourhood. Coming to the "Genesee Country" when it was to the resident of the Eastern States as far "West" as Kansas is now, he cleared a farm, raised a large family and gave them an excellent education. He has plenty of apples, cherries and peaches and we are not sure that he has not what is quite rare in a farmer's garden, a good patch of the best varieties of strawberries and raspberries. The house is delightfully situated, with some noble deciduous trees and fine evergreens surrounding it. The young ladies are fond of flowers, and succeed pretty well with their annuals. There is a bell on the front door, a piano in the parlour, with half a dozen or so oil paintings on the walls, the work of one of the daughters. Ten different periodicals are taken, and a pleasanter country home is seldom found.

Now why should not such a farm have a well kept lawn, with a few choice shrubs, evergreens, ornamental trees, &c. Has he not land enough? Can he not afford it? What would it cost? Would not a hundred dollars a year be a liberal estimate, even charging full price for every half hour occupied in keeping it in order. We think fifty dollars a year would convert some of the unsightly door yards, so frequently seen in the country, into a delightful lawn. And there is positively no reason why this is not done, except that the farmer has never been in the habit of attending to such things and has no taste for them. If a man is really poor, there is some excuse for neglecting those things which do not afford an immediate profit. But we have in all parts of the country hundreds of thousands of farmers who can afford to have a nice lawn and garden if they only desired it. He is a farmer who has spent over $10,000 in erecting a house. His "door yard" is—well, no better than his neighbours. Perhaps he would be talked about if it was.—A big house is allowable in the country, but the agricultural Mrs. Grundy would be horrified should a farmer pay much attention to ornamental grounds. But what is the good of the big house with its neglected "door yard?" Does the good wife feel any happier in it? Are the children more comfortable? Does it afford any pleasure to the passer-by? Would it not have been better to have spent less on the house and more on the grounds and garden? Suppose instead of spending $10 000 on the house and nothing on the grounds, he had spent $7 000 on the house and reserved the $3.000 for making and keeping up a nice lawn, planting out a few hedges, making good walks and setting out ornamental trees. Had he spent $1.000 on his grounds the int rest on the remaining two thousand would have kept them in good order.—Would not such a course have been better? Admitting that it does not pay, we would ask how much the extra $2.000 invested in the house pays. It not only brings in nothing, but requires more money to furnish the rooms &c. And in case you want to sell it who would not prefer to have had the money invested in setting out trees, &c., than in the house?

Not many months since a rich gentleman in one of the Eastern Cities, wanted to buy a farm for his son. He preferred Western New York. He was willing to pay any sum from $20,000 to $60,000, if he could get such a farm and buildings as he wanted. But he wanted everything ready to his hands—a pleasant house, good buildings, and well laid out grounds, roads, &c. We were asked where there was such a farm in this section that could be purchased; and we were obliged to confess that we did not know of any in this neighbourhood that would fill the conditions. We have many farms in a good state of cultivation, many good houses, but where do you find well laid out grounds? We are confident that there are farms where a thousand dollars spent ten years ago in judicious planting, with a hundred dollars a year in keeping up the grounds, would have added, in this case at least, from five to ten thousand dollars to the value of the farm. But this is not the main reason for attending to these matters. We want farmers to make pleasant homes for their children. This young man who admired a "door yard" kept a little better than is generally found on farms, is already anxious to leave his father and go to the city. He things farming nothing but hard work, and sighs for some pleasanter occupation. We think he had better stay on the farm. A man who gets an honest living in the city has to work just as hard as farmers, but he does not realize this, and it must be confessed that we find, even among those in moderate circumstances, pleasanter homes in the suburbs of our cities, than in the country. This need not be. A farmer can make his home pleasant to himself and attractive to his children. Agriculture needs intelligent young men, and especially intelligent farmers' sons. We must make farming more agreeable. But this is a subject we cannot discuss at this time. What we now wish to urge upon our readers is the importance of paying more attention to their grounds round the house.

I SAID TO MY LOVE.

I said to my love—my own true love,
What can I give to thee?
Ermine and purple, or silver and gold,
Or jewels the brightest that be,
I will not a jewel, my true love said,
And I sigh not for silver nor gold;
What thoughts can they give, or what joys can they bring,
To the bosom when weary and old?
Give me that that will cling to the heart
When sunshine, and summer and brightness depart.

I said to my love—my own true love,
What can I give to thee?
A bird that will sing ther at eve to rest,
Or a flower from the fairest tree?
I will not a flower, my true love said,
That will wither, and fade, and die;
I will not a little captive thing,
Whose only thought is to fly.
Give me that which will cleave to the heart
When sunshine, and summer and brightness depart.

I said to my love—my own true love,
What can I give to thee?
A song my heart uttered long years ago,
When our feet kissed the daisied lea?
Ay, give me a song, my true love said,
With a sweet and a musical rhyme,
That will ebb and flow, like the sounding sea,
Thro' the measureless a e of time—
A song that will live and be found in the heart
When sunshine, and summer and brightness depart.

"FAITHFUL AND TRUE."

A TALE IN THREE PARTS.

By the Author "Grasp your Nettle."

PART I.

It was an ideal day for a pic-nic; warm but not sultry, bright but not glaring, breezy and not windy; the very day of all the three hundred and sixty-five for the prize fete of the season. Charley Dunn said that he had "ordered it expressly for the occasion, having spoken to his friend the clerk of the weather up there;" an announcement which was received, as it always is, with a burst of laugh er, that very foolish announcement, as if something witty had been said. But then Charley Dunn was privileged; a "chartered libertine" he used to call himself, spreading out his arms for butterfly wings; and it was one of the canons of the society in which he lived to believe in his wit, and accept his sayings as of the finest quality of humour. He was, in fact, the crowned Punch of the Grouchy-Bridge community; though, to do him justice, his baton was made only of pur te board and hurt no one's knuckles; and as he wore his pasteboard gr cefully, and gave himself no airs of sovereignty, society felt no special craft to drop the tinsel into the smelting pot for the purpose of testing the residuum of gold at the bottom. So that when he talked nonsense about the weather to-day, and laid himself out to do his part of the general entertainment with more than ordinary energy, every one was open-mouthed with anticipation, and perfectly sure that the sunshine and Charley Dunn could "beat even fate and the enemy," whatever that might mean.

They made a pleasant party on the whole, though there was the usual admixture of the "doubtful element"—the old maids, starched matrons, and stiff-backed "propriety men," who have always to be asked on such occasions, and who are always so frightfully sure to come. There was, first, the little group of confessed aristocrats, the first-class people of the place, headed by old Lady Scratchley, third cousin to a duke in her own right, and widow of a ruined baronet, but who might have been own sister to the queen, and the deposed occupant of a principality, for the amount of condescension and fallen grandeur that she displayed; and by her side, as polite and courtly as though she were a lady of the bedchamber doing homage to a sovereign (this was to show the second class what court manners and the aristocracy were like), was Miss Le Jeune, of the good old county family—a little decayed now, unhappily, and no longer possessin the original seat. She was a lady of a certain age, with a high nose, thin lips, and straight eyebrows, who had immeasurable stress on blood and had a lofty contempt for mere money—money got by trade being her especial aversion. With her was tall and slender auburn-haired Miss Turnbull, her neice, whose father was unfortunately only a younger son, but a man of family and quite thoroughbred: that meaning, if translated into the vernacular, as poor as a rat, and too proud and lazy to work. Wherefore, on the strength of her gentlehood, Annie Turnbull went about the world with her head tossed up to the clouds; though, to be sure, the blue forget-me-nots in her bonnet were of the poorest style of artificial flowers known, as Lady Scratchley's confidential maid remarked, just a little disdainfully. But then she had good blood in her veins, which every one has not, and so had a right to toss up her head, and look for a Prince Florimel at the very least. Also, in the same group, stood Miss Grandville, a deceased dean's daughter, who talked ecclesiastical literature, and took it as a personal affront if any one expressed Low Church opinions in her presence—a handsome young woman, but stiff and reserved, fraternising only with the Le Jeune, and even that not too cordially. The flowery-wigged old lady was too light-minded for her, and exacted too much subservi ancy; and Miss Grandville felt it due to herself, as the representative of the ecclesiastical power, to stand on her rights, and rather demand respect from the secular power than pay it. For which reason she and my Lady Scratchley were generally at arms' length, and hated one another heartily.

The gentlemen flanking this little coterie were Admiral Price, a mookey-faced old sailor with not too many brains; Whiting Fox, the retired diplomatist, and his son, young Mr. Whiting Fox, down from the Home Office on li- leave; Colonel Badger and Captain Turbottle: all of them, save the young Home Office Adonis, elderly, unmarried (bachelors or widowers), and ineligible. Close to this small knot of exclusives stood the three Miss Globbs and their four brothers; a tall, large-limbed, well-developed family, with loud voices, a clear enunciation, and decided leanings to the muscular side of Christian living. They were more than a little fast, these young people; but good-hearted enough, and with no very dangerous propensities; still, there the taint was; and though they were general favourites, it was under protest, and with "what a pity it is" always added to their names. But as no one could deny their good-nature, or the inherent innocency of their natures, they came at last to be as well known for their "chartered libertinism" as Charley Dunn himself, and with as complete immunity from untoward consequences. They always had a long following of penniless cornets and young collegians not yet come to their estates, and not likely to do so; charming men; but not of the marrying order; and party givers who knew them took care to leave a tolerable margin for contingencies: so that, when they came to-day, accompanied by four or five "useful men" it was only what was expected, and no one was surprised.

Then there was Miss Moss, the oriental looking belle of Cheltenham for a season, to whom tradition and ill-natured gossip assigned an earlier patronymic than that which she bore now, and her brother, young Abraham Moss, of anything more decidedly oriental than herself: and these two young people were the cleverest and most entertaining of the company. And there were the two Miss Hawtreys from London, who played and sang themselves into society everywhere, but whose parents and k onsfolk were mythical and of quite unknown condition; and pretty affected, sentimental Mary Dowthwaite; and bluff Margaret Wood—her friends called her Maggie, and a few Maggie Lauder—who spoke her mind to every one, and did not in the least care whose toes she trod on. There were several more; young men of varying fortunes and very varying features; young ladies of less distinctly marked individuality—some strangers whom no one of the old set knew, and who did not know each other: and then there were the staid married couples of a certain age to give a sanction and consistency to the weole.

'Must have real pies and legs of lamb before we come to these sweets!' said Charley Dunn in an aside on the kind of way. defending his administration to the young ladies. And among them were Mr. Samuel Harmer Hunter, the giver of the pic-nic, standing near to Mr. and Mrs. St John, little Georgie Fenton's half-sister and her husband. And then there was little Georgie herself, and papa's private secretary, young Mr. Roger Lewin.

Mrs. St. John, a black-eyed, sharp-faced little woman, was many years older than little Georgie; old enough, indeed, to have been her mother, though she would have been very much disgusted had any one said so in her hearing, being of those who are jealous of the revelations of time, and who insist on juvenility to the last day of their lives. And being so much older, it was but natural that she should exercise a maternal kind of control over her young sister, whose mother had died when the little one was born, poor thing! though as Georgie used to say with tears in her pretty eyes, and some show of reason 'she need not be always so cross, and treat me so like a naughty child. I am nineteen now, and surely ought to know how to behave.'

Which was in reference chiefly to Mrs. St. John's expression of grave displeasure—excited even to that point of wrath which culminated in boxing her young sister's ears—when she found her in the great drawing-room playing chess alone with Mr. Roger Lewin, 'only a private secretary,' to you will, but a dangerous young man enough in the eyes of an older sister careful about settlements, and inimical to portionless love.

Mrs. St. John had no very strict acquaintance with love in any of its aspects, being one of the hard sort, as her maid used to say, with no sympathies or affections that had not a substantial bearing. She was an energetic little busybody who must interfere in every one's concerns, but never to good or kindliness; a conceited, sharp-tempered, restless, and essentially vulgar woman—her very manners, indeed, being not of the smooth and undulating character belonging to her order, but spiky where they were not angular; very worldly withal, and anxious that no one connected with her should walk in any path, social or spiritual, of which she had not first set the boundaries and trodden down the causeway. Her present great object was to marry sister Georgie to Mr. Samuel Harmer Hunter, a well-conditioned, not ill-looking, and very wealthy iron merchant from the Black Country; a little older than Georgie, certainly (he was fifty one last birth-day), but still a fine figure of a man, and bearing his years bravely. Besides, 'it is better to be an old man's darling than a young man's slave,' was Mrs. St. John's perpetual commentary, when that obstructive clause was mentioned as a thing material to the question. Nothing was wanting for the consummation of her wishes but the young lady's own consent, and this she refused to give; though her sister talked to her by the hour together; and Mr. St. John clinched her every argument with 'Just so, Georgie, do as your sister tells you;' and though sleepy, irascible, weak minded old papa lent his influence, too, to the same side (when daughter Carry was by), telling her that she might go farther and fare worse,' and sometimes advising her, for him, quite strenuously; but promising, being a kind hearted old man, if passionate, and very fond of his young daughter, that he would not force her if she did not consent of her own free will. And that was quite as much grace as little Georgie could expect.

Thus matters stood when Charlie Dunn persuaded Mr. Samuel Harmer Hunter to give a pic-nic to all the gentry round about Borough Bridge, as the best means of making himself popular; which, as a new comer, who had made his money in trade, he found some difficulty in perfecting. For the Borough Bridge people prided themon their gentility; and even the very poorest of the admirals and colonels and the withered 'scions of nobility,' as platform orators call them publicly disdained the pretentions to equality of a retired iron-merchant from the Black Country, however rich he was; though, to do them justice, all the mothers with single daughters, and all the single daughters themselves, made up their private blandishments for what was wanting in cordial recognition; and every one knew that their disdain was a mere pretence, and that each and all abandoned their order when that order was out of sight. Like the sugars of Rome, the could scarcely look into each other's faces with gravity, when the 'disabilities' of Mr. Hunter were discussed over their meagre teas; exclusive, if meagre.

Mr. Hunter being a reticent, self-sustained, rather thick-skinned man, cared little for all this. He knew quite well what time and money do in the long run; so he bided his time, spent his money, and left the issue to the kindly dews and genial rains ever favouring the good seed. The quiet proved his wisdom. When he and Charley Dunn (Charley was his right-hand man) sent out their invitations to a grand pic-nic to be held at Harrow-field-side, every person in the place accepted; and the muster on the Oaks lawn, where they all assembled before starting, numbered seventy-five and a half, Charley counting old Trouncer, the Newfoundland, as the half. Seventy-five, including not on'y the elite of Brough Bridge and *its neighbor*hood, but also many of the 'second class' —those dwellers on the debatable land of gentility, always to be found in a community. And to have floated these down was even a greater triumph than to have flung himself on the crest of the wave. If Georgie Fenton would have only said 'yes,' Mr. Hunter's cup of pride and happines have been filled to the brim.

It was not only the retired iron merchant who thought the young daughter of the retired banker, in her fresh light muslin and coquetish hat, the prettiest girl and the most charming of the assembly; many others shared his opinion. Charley Dunn himself, though by no means apt to be 'spoony' on any girl, and more inclined to adore all than to love one—even he was a trifle troubled by her—just a shade more serious towards her than towards the rest; and had two-pence-half-penny a y r, he would say—'unfortunately, he had only two-pence-farthing'—he might have felt inclined to commit himself to matrimony and misery for the rest of his life. But besides these two, and the half-dozen unattached, putting down their feelers everywhere, like shrimps or sea-anemones, for unknown food, there was Roger Lewin, to whom Miss Fenton (he was was obliged to be respectful, being only the private secretary) was simply the realization of his womanly ideal, and the one sole beloved of his life. If Georgie thought the same of him for her own part, it was no wonder; for he was a hand-some young fellow to look at, and of a fine and noble character, steadfast, unselfish, generous and reliable; stern to men and loving to women, as all women desire of their hero: and one whose word and power of endurance—that patience of courage—could be trusted to any extent He was a man with whom women instinctively felt 'safe,' which adjective expresses all that they most love and revere.

All being assembled on the lawn, the question now was, how should they go to Harrow-field-side? and who should take who? Charley Dunn, who knew the unrecorded wishes of half the young men and of all the girls, mated and marshalled them to the best of his power and the plasticity of circumstances; putting himself to unheard-of straits in his endeavor to please everybody, wherein he generally succeeded. However, ill or well, he did it, which was something accomplished; packing them up *in separate parcels according to such pleas*ant admixture as he deemed best for the society at large, as well as for the service of the individual. And now there remained only Miss Le Jeune and Miss Annie—who because they were well born, were very careful of their company and inexorable on the score of chaperonage—the St. Johns and Georgie, Mr. Hunter, Roger Lewin, and himself: eight people, four and four, to share in phaeton and a dog cart. It was Mr. Hunter's desire that the St. Johns and the Le Jeunes should go in the phaeton driven by Charley Dunn or Roger Lewin, both of whom were good whips, and that he would drive Miss Georgiana over in the dog cart; an arrangement to which Charley, for his part, had consented with a good grace, thinking it only fair that the host should do what he liked best for himself, and that if he 'chose to tool over Miss Little one pretty one, why should'nt he? He paid his money and he took his choice; and he was a lucky dog that he had money to pay, and a clever one for the choice he had made.' Charley did not go on to say that he, and half a score more, would have chosen the very same thing. He had tact enough to keep that to himself. So the last party stood on the lawn in the sunlight, waiting for the final arrangements; and of the four men standing there, three were in love with the same woman, and one was beloved.

And now a new complication arose.—Annie and Miss Le Jeune, seeing the turn things were taking, warmly protested against the arrangement proposed. They would have neither Charley nor Roger for the charioteer of their precious lives. The one was so flighty—they called him mercurial, which had a grander sound—he would miss the right turning, or upset them in the ditch, or turn them out over the hedge; the other was better, certainly, but he was not experienced enough—the horses would run away, or they would come down, or they would have a fit, or faint, said Miss Annie pathetically; horses did faint very often in the hot weather, poor things! or they would fall and break their knees or something; and Mr. Roger Lewin, though a charming young man, would not know what to do if there was an accident: and accidents do easily happen, you know, without blame to any one. So they set themselves in decided opposition, and talked, and coaxed, and insisted till they finally carried their point, and Mr. Hunter found himself obliged to yield to instances which had at least this flattering assurance, that both ladies thought him sufficiently worthy to be trusted with valuable cargo.

Mrs. St. John took no part in the discussion; neither did little Georgie; unless that might be called taking a part which was simply looking up at Roger Lewin once, and saying in a low voice, 'You drive me,' as they stood a little apart; she digging round holes in the lawn with her parasol, and he arranging the lash of a whip which he held in his hand. But when the pretty arguing had ceased, and Mr. Hunter had yielded with a very blank face—'I think the arrangement a very good one;' then, said Mrs. St. John, 'we four ladies in the phaeton, and Mr. Hunter and Mr. St. John on the box. Mr. Lewin and Mr. Dunn can break each other's necks in the dog-cart.' Mr. Hunter's face brightened. He would have rubbed his hands if he had dared; as it was he gave a low unmelodious chuckle, and clumsily rubbed his chin.

'Oh, no, Carry!' said Georgie hastily. 'I want to go in the dog-cart. I hate sitting with my back to the horses—you know I do.'

'You shall sit on the box, then with Mr. Hunter, and St. John shall come inside,' suggested Mrs. St. John a mably.

Miss Le Jeune and Miss Annie looked at each other, and a smile, not at all of the kind poets call homied, crisped up their lips like vinegar.

'Rather an extraordinary place for a young lady, is it not?' said Miss Le Jeune coldly.

'Oh! in the country one doesn't mind a little relaxing of the reins,' said Mrs. St. John very tranquilly.

'I can drive Miss Fenton over in the dog-cart,' then said Roger Lewin, coming forward with his steady cheery air, as if he had been the possessor of half a million, and not 'only a private secretary, my dear.' 'Mr. Dunn can sit behind and keep guard; and you know,' tossing up his bright brown hair, with a very pardonable affectation of modesty, 'I am not a very despicable whip—at least not for one horse. (He was the best in the whole country side.) 'Don't you think my plan the best, Mr. Hunter?' he continued; 'it disposes of a good many difficulties.'

'By far the best,' said Miss Le Jeune warmly.

'So nice for Miss Fenton in the dog-cart,' said Miss Annie as if she envied her.

'Absurd! unpracticable!' exclaimed Mrs. St. John in her high voice; and 'I confess I had not contemplated this arrangement,' chimed in Mr. Hunter, speaking slowly, and evidently displeased.

'What would Miss Georgie herself like?' said Charley good naturedly. He was always thoughtful of her, and put her pleasures beyond and above most social laws; and then he hated a fuss, and dread 'hitches' in a day's enjoyment. 'That shall decide it, Hunter, shall it not? We are all acquiescing as to the custody of Miss Georgie, without giving her a voice, and I call that shabby!'

'If it is left to me, I should prefer to go in the dog-cart with Mr. Dunn and Mr. Lewin,' said Georgie hastily, but with a deep blush.

Mr. Hunter bowed, rallying himself so far as to say, a little grumpily, though he did his best to look graceful, 'You are the queen, Miss Fenton, and have only to command your worshippers.'

And again Miss Le Jeune and Miss Annie looked at each other and smiled crisply.'

'Your father shall hear of this, Miss,' whispered Mrs. St. John, grasping her arm as she passed so savagely that the red mark could be seen quite plainly through the muslin. But Georgie was too happy to be resentful. She was young and in love, and the present moment was her all, and the future might never come; so she took no note of the spiteful pinche but only answered cooingly, 'Don't be angry, Carry, dear,' as she jumped into the dog-cart blithely. And then the most radiant and innocently-loving face in the the world turned like a sunbeam on the hearner party in the phaeton, and a shower of smiles and nods and hand-wavings followed them so long as they were in sight, as they rattled off into the summer line of trees and wild flowers.

'She will be obliged to me, at all events, for yielding to her wishes,' said Mr. Hunter in a musing way to Mr. St. John on the on the box beside him. (Miss Annie had put in a faint claim to the place but Mrs. St. John had out-manœuvred her, without leavin her a chance.) Mr. St. John held his peace; he could have said too much.

'Thank you, Roger, dear Roger!' said little Georgie simply, laying her hand his arm as they drove off; the phaeton was now out of sight.

Roger Lewin looked at her as she said this—a look of such infinite tenderness, and the man's intensity of love, that Charley Dunn, who had just then turned round on the back seat to speak to them, comprehended the situation in an instant, and knew the secret that had been kept so religiously between them for six weeks or more.

'By Jove,' said Charley to himself, and he turned quite cold for a moment, 'this is awkward.'

'What else could I have done?' said Roger to her softly. 'It was a bold thing to brave your sister so openly, but it had come. It has to come in real earnest, you know, Georgie dearest, sooner or later, if we would be true or happy.'

'Yes, but still it was so good of you!' repented Georgie fervently. 'For I know that you felt for me more than for yourself, and that it was to release and please me you came forward and upset them all.'

'And not to please myself at all?' returned Roger, with a lover's smile. 'I am afraid I am not quite so unselfish, little darling, as you would make me out; and that if I thought of your pleasure a little, I thought a great deal of my own.'

'Oh! that is the old argument, you naughty boy!' said Georgie, laughing and blushing.

'Which one? we have so many! The argument as to which loves the other best, or which will hold out the longest?'

She did not answer this, but looked up at him shyly, and yet with so much frankness in her love, if with maiden bashfulness in the expression of it, that it needed all Roger's self-command not to put his arm round her waist and kiss her in the face of the sun and of Charley. Why should he not? he thought. She was his, so far as love and plighted troth could make her; why should he not confess the love she had given him, and claim both recognition and fulfilment? But wiser counsels prevailed, and Roger did nothing of so expressive a nature that it could never be glossed over again. He only took her small and plexsant hand, and pressed it up against his heart.

The drive was very delightful, at least to two out of the three, for Charley did not much share in the fuss, as he phrased it. Knowing what was expected of him, he discreetly kept his eyes and his tongue to himself; too well versed in the art and mystery of his normal character, that of 'playing gooseberry,' not to be aware that, before they had driven half a mile, if he would only efface himself they would have forgotten his very existence in the fulness of their content. As it proved. Wrapped up in the impervious self-ness of love, they passed the morning summer hours in the haven of young lovers; and when they drew up to Harrow-field side, where every one was waiting for them, were ready to swear that they had not been half an hour on the road, though the heavy old phaeton and its sullen and discontented freight had been there that time before them. They came, strengthened for anything—strengthened for Mrs. St. Johns angry eyes, for Miss Annie's unpleasant smile, and Miss Le Jeune's disagreeable insinuations—strengthened for even Mr. Hunter's very natural self-repayment in the instant possession which he took of little Georgie, evidently intending to appropriate her (if he could) for the whole of the day after—strengthened for open war and for secret plots by one of the longest spells of uninterrupted intercourse and one of the most thoroughly confidential talks they had ever had together. If Georgie Fenton and Roger Lewin were in love with each other when the sun rose to-day, what could it be called now? As Georgie said afterwards, in her simple way, 'I felt that I was married to him, and that it would be a crime, and impossible, ever to break it off.'

The pic-nic was a success. Charley Dunn had sworn it, striking palms with Miss Louisa Globb, who bet him a sixgreen cigar-case against a dog-headed riding whip, that it would 'hatch somewhere: pic-nics always did;' and though he was taken aback by the discovery he had made, and dismayed at the idea of the mesa little Miss had got herself into, yet he shook himself free from all embarrassing reflections when the time for action came, and exerted himself, as usual, to put the whole thing on castors, as the French say.

The day was fine, which was one essential secured; and there was enough and to spare of whom to choose for partners and comrades. Young people paired themselves according to fancy, and wandered away with that pretence of unconsciousness we all know of; and their elders again united themselves into groups and fed each other with flattery or gossip, as the law of the majority went. Mrs. St. John made profuse demonstrations to Lady Scratchley, who disliked her to almost plebeian vehemence, and thought her 'low,' wherein her ladyship was not so far out; and Miss Grandville and Miss Le Jeune stood on the outskirts of the party, criticising the young ladies of the assembly, and, strangely enough, finding none of them all pretty or well dressed, amiable or well mannered. But then they were both ladies of immense refinement and had high ideals. The monkey-faced admiral singled out Maggie Wood, because she was as blithe as himself; and the two made no end of amusement for all within ear-shot of their rough play.—The Miss Globbs, and their brothers, and their useful men, multiplied themselves, like so many Vishnus, and formed concentric circles of laughter everywhere—being poor this was their manner of paying for their entertainment by society. The two Miss Hawtreys sang their last new songs to the accompaniment of the guitar which one carried, and of the concertina of which the other was the social 'professor.' Miss Moss was superb, haughty, and a little insolent in her cleverness; and pretty Mary Dowthwaite looked languishingly at young Abraham, on his side not backward to attract as many languishing looks as good fortune and the young ladies would throw in his way; and, in short, the whole scene was one of bright colours, animated faces, picturesque groups, and universal jollity, as the company dispersed among the trees of the field-side copse, or sat on the fresh dry grass of the meadows, or perched themselves up on the tall banks, all enjoying themselves to the utmost of their natural ability, this warm, smiling, glorious summer day.

SHERIDAN, when charged with inconsistency, retorted that the accusation reminded him of the consistency of the entertainer of a convivial party, who, hearing his first guests observe that it was time to take leave, as the watchman were crying, 'Past three,' said, 'Why, you don't mind that fellow, do you? He's the most inconsistent fellow out! why, he changes his story every half hour.

THE REDS AND THE BLUES.—The police force ought to be much larger than the army. Why? Because it admits of persons of both sexes joining it? How so? I will explain: thus, only a man can "go for a soldier," but a man, a woman, a little boy, or even a little girl, can "go for a policeman."

THE RECIPROCITY TREATY.

The abrogation of the Reciprocity Treaty is now probable. The Ministers who went to Washington do not appear to have received a very warm reception—the American people being determined to try the effects of Prohibitory tariffs. It may be asked, will its repeal injure us? and how can we get along without it? It can hardly be denied but that the Treaty has benefited both. Canadians did not receive the whole advantages, nor did Americans. Its repeal will, therefore, to some degree, be disadvantageous to both. But from the fuss our cousins are making about it, one would be led to suppose the whole gain lay on one side. Can we get along without it? It will first derange trade, – will put a stop to some certain enterprises that were wholly dependant on the American market; but these willonly be temporarily stopped. No legitimate trade now carried on but is as advantageous to our neighbors as to ourselves, else they would not foster it; and should such trade be for a time deranged a little, they would suffer almost as much as the manufacturer, unless they could obtain the article elsewhere, and on as reasonable terms. Those articles which they purchase in Canadian markets, they can not obtain elsewhere on anything like as reasonable terms. Lumber they cannot obtain from the West, only at great disadvantages, because of the long land carriage; yet lumber they must have, even at great sacrifice. And as prices now barely remunerate the manufacturer, he will stop the business unless he can receive a just compensation for his labour. A short supply will induce large prices; and the consumer, in order to get the article at all, will be compelled to pay the increase necessitated by the imposed tariff. Nor do we think that the American people are so patriotic that they will sacrifice much for the purpose of dealing only with their own producers. The almighty dollar is still potent enough to induce them to trade where they can to the most advantage for themselves. In the case of our wool, our wheat, our cattle, it is all the same; they require these articles, and so long as they do, they will come over here and buy them, and will almost universally have to pay the duties, as the consumer invariable has to do.

From returns, the present free imports amounts to about $15,000,000 annually. Suppose that is stopped, and 20 per cent. duty imposed, this would only direct the trade to other channels. Instead of our wheat going through American channels to the maritime Provinces or Europe, this duty will induce traders to deal directly with the consumer, and thus save the duty, which will only have the effect of creating a larger trade on our own soil and amongst our own merchants, and which would prove a benefit instead of an injury, as not only the duty but the profits of these trades, instead of going into the pockets of neighbors, would find their way into the pockets of Canadian dealers. It is vain to say they can supply themselves as well and as cheap as we can. For instance, an American buyer from Boston purchases cattle in Michigan, but takes them through Canada to Boston because he can save $40 per car load by this route in preference to a route on his own soil: does this not convincingly prove that the west cannot supply the east as cheaply as Canada can. The fact is that Canadian trade has been supporting American traders and American companies, and again been returned to British American colonies. When it could as easily have been carried on wholly on British American soil and with British American capital. The abrogation of the treaty may for a while derange trade, but eventually it will enable Canadians to devise ways to get along without it, and we venture to say that the Americans will be the first to lament their folly for abolishing it.

REMOVAL TO OTTAWA.

Active preparations are in progress for the reception of the public employees at Ottawa. They are expected to move from Quebec about the 25th of next month. The Post Office Department, it is said, will be removed first; this Department, the Ottawa Citizen says, will remove to the new buildings about the middle of the current month. Rents are tending upwards, in consequence of agents seeking dwellings for those officials. From a telegram to the Montreal Gazette, it appears that "notice has been given to prepare for the removal to Ottawa within six weeks, commencing about the 20th instant. The city is attracting a great number of visitors this season. It is the capital of Canada now; that will account for it.

Deaf and Dumb.

In reply to Colonel Haultain, the Hon Mr. McDougall lately announced in the House that it was the intention of the Government to continue the grants for the instruction of the deaf and dumb until a more permanent system was organized, which it was the intention of the Government to bring about as soon as possible. We fully agree with a contemporary that "there is no class in our country whose condition more strongly appeals to the sympathies of the public than the deaf and dumb, and there is no institution to which Government could more properly extend provincial aid than one for their benefit."

More about the Cable.

The Atlantic Telegraph Company have resolved to lay a new Cable next June and then pick up the old one.

PARLIAMENTARY.

A Bill has been introduced by Colonel Haultain to continue for a limited time the act authorizing the employment of military prisoners on local public works. A motion was introduced by Dr. Parker for a committee to enquire into the condition and sufficiency of the Railway Stock of the Grand Trunk Railway, and the comparative freights charged on local and through traffic. The Government said they would be quite ready to assent to it if all the railways in Upper Canada were included, and desired that the motion be laid over to next session to which Dr. Parker agreed. A motion was also introduced by Mr. McKenzie for a committee to enquire into the reason why the Grand Trunk, Buffalo and Huron Railway officials did not afford certain returns required of them. It is also, very unwisely we think, sought to pass an act to enable parties to sell by measure as well as by weight.—Attorney-General McDonald has also a bill before the House to amend the law of dower. Mr. Cockburn one to amend the registry law. The committee on municipal and assessment laws met and made several minor amendments. Mayors are to be elected as at present. Several other important amendments are reported.

A debate took place in the Upper House to-day on Mr. Macpherson's resolution providing for free grants to actual settlers on all the public lands. Mr. Campbell, Commissioner of Crown Lands, showed that there were outstanding debts for crown lands in Upper Canada of about $6,000,000, and in Lower Canada of about $2,000,000, which the adoption of a general system of free grants would render difficult to collect. Besides, the revenue from timber in the Ottawa region had already been equal to over a dollar an acre on all the lands in that section. The free grant system would destroy this. He showed that Mr. Macpherson's assertion that the United States was indebted to the homestead law for its development was not correct, as that law only came into operation on the 1st of January, 1863. Mr. Campbell, besides, quoted the Globe's editorials to prove that Canada had advanced as rapidly as the States. He indicated what the Government policy was, by stating that a reduction would be made on public lands in certain districts.

Some merriment was had over a forged signature to a telegram stating that a certain member had been unseated, but it ended as it began.

On the motion to go into Committee on Supply, Mr. Holton made a long speech, showing the weakness of the budget; but to no purpose. A new Bill on Grammar School education is to be introduced. In the Municipal Committee, it was agreed to provide in the new Municipal Act that for every 500 voters over those required for Reeves and Deputy Reeves, another Councilor be sent to represent Townships in County Councils. The registration about to become law provides that vaults shall be fire-proof; that there shall be an abstract index of Lots; that registration shall be made in full of Wills and Instruments instead of in part only by Memorial. Deeds may be deposited in Registrar's vaults, and a certified copy shall be taken in evidence. Sheriff's Deeds must be registered in a specified time.

The amount of supplementary estimates is $1,871,902.

Fires.

On the night of the 27th last month, the barns of Mr. Saml. Cornell of Emily was burned. Mr. C. had nearly all his crop in. His loss is we understand about $800. Insured at $570.

On the same day the barns and stables on a farm in Hope, owned by Thos. Crawfine, Esq., of Omemee were burned. A fine 2 year old colt was also burnt to death.—Neither buildings nor contents were insured.

On Sunday night last the barns on lot 12 con. 6 Emily also belonging to Mr. Crawfine were destroyed by fire. In both cases Mr. C. had destrained for rent due.

The Fair.

A great many people visited the town on the Fairday, there was a reasonable show of horned cattle and the usual number of horses of a doubtful appearance. Some few cattle changed hand at pretty good prices and a few horses for the American market. On the whole the business done was not in proportion to the number in town, many consider the day a holiday, and used it as such. There was not much drunkenness visible, yet what would a fair be without a row?

Child Drowned.

On Saturday evening last, a child about five years of age, belonging to Mr. Maher, at the Locks Bridge, fell into the river, it is supposed through a broken plank in the bridge, and was drowned. The body was found about five o'clock the same day, and was buried Sabbath evening.

The Emily Murder.

The adjourned inquest on the body of Park. Malemore on Saturday last, resulted in sending O'Brien and three of his sons to stand their trials at the next Court of Assize to be holden in Lindsay.

The Prorogation.

The Attorney General West, the Leader says—Stated in the House on Monday that the Government hoped to be able to prorogue Parliament next week; but a slight discussion is anticipated on the north-west question. It is not likely to be settled this Session.

Burglars Caught in Toronto.

Through the energy of the Police force two of the most daring burglars, old hands, have been arrested in the very act of housebreaking. They will be cared for.

The Montreal Witness says that Lord Monck has engaged his passage in a steamer that sails about the 16th instant, and consequently may be expected to sail for Europe about that time. We may therefore expect that the session will be over before he leaves.

From the Cobourg Sun we learn that wheat last week was $1.20 for fall; on Tuesday, $1,27; on Saturday, $1.37½ and $1,40. Spring got as high as $1,12½ Barley advanced from 60 cts. to 75 cts.

It is computed by one of the knowing ones in Lindsay that there is, this year, 500,000 bushels of wheat in the County of Victoria, and at least 300,000 bushels of this will be sold.

It is proposed to have all bills bear stamps in future: $26 and under, 1c; $50 and over $26, 2c; and up to $100, 3c. An amendment is also proposed to the excise law, to prevent frauds.

SUEZ CANAL.—This Canal was opened on the 17th ult., and vessels laden with coal passed from the Mediterranean to the Red Sea.

Presentation to P. C. Blaicher, Esq.

On Thursday evening last a number of those who have been Mr. Blaicher's pupils since he came to Peterboro met at his residence and presented him with an address, and a beautiful album containing the photographs of the presenters, on the occasion of his removal from the Institution, and his commencing business. From the address, strong sympathies appear to exist between Mr. Blaicher and his pupils. We give the Address and Reply:—

To P. C. BLAICHER, Esq.,

Senior English, and Mathematical Teacher of the Peterborough Grammar and Union School.

RESPECTED SIR,—

We, the undersigned, who have been your pupils from time to time during your term of teaching in the Peterborough Grammar and Union School, for the lengthened period of nearly five years, regret to hear that some misunderstanding has arisen between you and some of the School Board, and we regret more especially to hear of the manner in which you have been treated by them. Your abilities as a teacher being questioned, and your attainments in such cmatics impugned. We consider it our duty, and esteem it a pleasure, under these circumstances, to bear testimony to your efficiency both as a teacher and scholar. We cannot express in too unqualified terms, the benefits we have received under your instructions, and which we have realized in examinations, for certificates as teachers, and for matriculation both in law and arts, and it will be gratifying to you to know, that not one of your pupils has been rejected at any of these examinations.

Many of us, Sir, who have attended the Peterborough G. and U. School from time to time almost since the first Union, are now pursuing a professional course of studies, while others have launched into the rough Ocean of business for ourselves. As a Teacher, we rank you second to no one who have been in the institution during that period; and we have always respected you as a high-toned Gentleman, a Teacher, and a Scholar, and feel assured that you will continue to merit respect, whatever business you may pursue.

Humbly hoping therefore that some mark of our remembrance of your many gentlemanly and kind acts in your intercourse with us, might now, on the occasion of your removal from the Peterborough Grammar and Union School, and your commencing business, be received as a token of our affectionate regard towards one who has endeared himself to us by so many marks of ability and urbanity. We beg to present you with this Memento, trusting that it will be received with the same spirit in which it is given, and that when turning over its pages and reviewing its contents you may think of the many pleasant hours we spent with you to whom we will ever revert with the most tender and relying esteem.

With it we beg also to present our best wishes for Mrs. Blaicher and family and hope you all may enjoy the blessings of Providence in the present and a glorious immortality in the future.

REPLY.

YOUNG FRIENDS,—

I feel it a great pleasure to have thus afforded me so favorable an opportunity of expressing my grateful acknowledgements for your many kind acts towards me since I came among you.

Your present expressions of approval and confidence, are only further manifestations of your respect and good will, and these I shall always anxiously hope for, and endeavor to retain.

You refer to a misunderstanding between myself and some members of the School Board and also to their harsh treatment towards me. These are things of the past, and should be remembered only as affording useful lessons for the future. I hold no spite—I seek no revenge, but console myself with knowing that I have endeavored to perform my duties conscientiously, and still more consoling is it to me to know that my efforts have been appreciated by so many of you.

I accept with grateful thanks this beautiful Album containing your photographs. Let me assure you that it will be highly prized by me and mine, and that I shall always look upon it with pride and pleasure. In thus presenting me with so fine a token of regard and remembrance together with so flattering an address, you have not only raised my personal pride, but you have also touched upon a nearer, dearer, and more tender tie, in your wellwishes for Mrs. Blaicher and family. Accept with theirs, my warmest thanks in return, with your best wishes for your health, happiness and prosperity; and may you all live long to enjoy those blessings here, and finally find repose in a happier and a better world.

P. C. BLAICHER.

Mr. Blaicher in a feeling manner read the reply, after which those present, in number about 30, spent a short time very pleasantly and then each repaired to his own home.—A particular feature in the presentation was the number of young ladies present, who also had been Mr. B's pupils, and who now joined heartily in the proceedings—one young lady presenting the Album. It must afford Mr. Blaicher much pleasure to receive this assurance of the good will of his pupils, on the present occasion.

Gen. Grant and Mexico.

It is said that General Grant has repeatedly and openly expressed his private opinions against the French occupation of Mexico and in favor of ending it by diplomacy if possible, but by war if need be.—This is however, his own private opinions. The Government of the United States will hardly interfere yet. The American press is beginning to cool down on the Mexican question. French occupation is not so distasteful to the Republic as English interference. What a moral principal is involved in British interference.

A Horrible Murder near London C.W.

In the Township of Nissouri, near London, C. W., two brothers disagreeing, one killed the other. Their names are John and Samuel McDowell. It appears that there has been some old feud between them, but lately being at market and having returned, they got into words, and then blows, when Samuel murdered John with a club. He is now in jail awaiting his trial.

From our Toronto Correspondent.

Toronto, September 4th, 1865.

I see by the Examiner that you have got very hot weather in Peterborough, but hot and dry is no name for it here. Everything is parched up, and you could hardly get a shady nook out of doors to shelter your head from the scorching rays of "Old Sol." I have been very much disappointed even in that once shady walk the College Avenue, for on going there to enjoy the sight and shade of green trees, to my great surprise they were all clothed in suits of sober drab, very Quakerlike in colour. The dust had robbed them of their beautiful green, and in walking beneath their branches you would feel a choking sensation as every passing carriage (and they are not a few) would raise clouds of dust sufficient to drive every one away who wished to breath without having their lungs filled with it, every garden, field and tree is covered with dust.

POLICE TROUBLES

There is quite an excitement through the city on account of a quarrel between Captain Prince, the Chief of Police, and the Police Commissioners. To let your readers understand the matter fully I may be allowed to give details. When Sergeant-Major MacDowell resigned, Sergeant McPherson was appointed to fill the vacancy. McDowell had been placed in No. 3 station, and the people thought that McPherson would have been sent there; but the Captain on his own responsibility removed Sergeant-Major Hastings from No. 2 station and sent him to No. 3, placing McPherson in his place. The great grievance complained of in this was that Sergeant-Major Hastings had a large family comfortably situated convenient to No. 2, and his removal to No. 3 necessitated the upsetting of his family and their removal, or else a long journey for himself every time he went to his home from the station, or vice versa. McPherson was not so situated, and it was all alike to him which station he was placed over; so the Police Commissioners at present in the city, viz., the Mayor, Mr. Medcalf, and the Police Magistrate, Mr. Boomer, changed them back, so as to let Mr. Hastings remain at No. 2, and placed McPherson in charge of No. 3. The Captain did not like to be thus bearded by them, and wrote a communication questioning their right to interfere, though the vast majority of the people thought that it was they who had the right to do so, and they alone. Thus then was the first great quarrel. The next came about thus: Mr. McKellar, M. P. P., has introduced a bill into the House of Assembly at the present session of Parliament, for the purpose of amending the Municipal laws, and Captain Prince sent him a series of amendments to apply to the cities of Canada, and in those amendments, if ever they would become law, it was provided that the Government should appoint the Chief of Police for each of the cities, the salary of the Chief was laid down in the act, and to all appearance if passed it would make him Chief, and Police Magistrate, and sole arbiter of the fate of the citizens at large, and they who would have all the cash to pay under the act would be debarred of having one word to say in the matter. The Mayor and Police Magistrate, on finding this out, and taking everything into view, suspended him from his office, and placed Sergeant-Major Cummings in his place pro tem. The question is now, will the Captain be dismissed? or will the Commissioners eat their leek and reinstate him. It is stated that they have deferred action in the matter until the third Commissioner, Recorder Duggan, comes home from England. He is expected this week, and then the tug of war will come. Every place you go you can hear nothing but wordy warfare over the matter. Some say that Mr. Boomer must be removed from his office as Police Magistrate. Others threaten the Mayor that he will be turned out of his office at the next election. Some are going to have this done if he dismisses the Captain, others will have it done if he does not dismiss him; so between the parties he will have a pretty time of it. As far as I can find out from the opinions expressed, there would not be much grief if the Captain were dismissed; but we'll see what will see.

PROMENADE CONCERT.

On last Saturday evening I had the pleasure of being present at a grand affair in the shape of a promenade concert, got up by Colonel Lowry and the other officers of the 47th Regiment in aid of the benevolent fund of the Regiment for the widows and orphans. There was a feast of good things provided for the wives and children of the soldiers.—The place chosen for it was the old Government Gardens, and what with swings erected for the children, and the general disposition of all, both officers and men, to add to the comfort and enjoyment of all who participated in the fete, it was one of the most pleasant evenings I have spent for a long time. The Band and Glee Club of the Regiment, gave the musical part of the entertainment, and in saying that I have just said enough. I send you the programme, so that your musical readers may form some opinion of it.

March	Il Trivitore
Overture	Verdi.
Part Song	'Twas on a bank
Waltz	Hullah.
Operatic Air	Nelly Gray
Pastoral Glee	DeAlbert.
Quadrille	The Wreath
A Musical Tour through Europe	Mazzinghi.
Galop	DeAlbert.
	Harum Scarum
	Cupidi.

There was a third glee intended to be sung, but the officers on the spur of the moment changed the programme, and in its place got two of the soldiers to give a hornpipe, and of all the performances that seemed to take the best with the crowd. I express the opinion to some of my acquaintance that no man but an Irishman could have danced the same dance in the style it was done in. After the dance "God save the Queen," sent us off to our homes well pleased, and the only regret was that there were not more of the citizens to aid in such a good cause. I am sure the Regiment deserved a larger attendance, as the officers very kindly permit the band to play nearly every evening in the week for the pleasure of the good people of Toronto.

Yours,

WILLIE.

Essay on the History of Civil Liberty.

No. 2.

The learned and eloquent Dr. William Anderson of Scotland, in his article in a late number of the "North American Reformed Presbyterian and Covenanter," on the "effects of the Reformation in Scotland," says concerning the "Scottish Covenanters and Martyrs."—Their whole conduct from the time they stood forth in a public capacity, down to the Revolution of 1688, was a continual struggle for the rights of their native land, as well as for the nobler immunities of the kingdom of heaven. Patriots, therefore, the Scottish Covenanters surely were, in the best and noblest sense of the term: for religion, liberty, conscience, and the public good; all that is precious to man as a rational and immortal being entered into the matter of their contendings. Their love of country was of the sublimest cast. The spots on which they contended, and on which many of them fell, were scenes of purer and more substantial glory than that which was gained of old on the plains of Marathon or at the straits of Thermopylæ. Long time has passed since they were numbered among Scotland's living men; and the storms of many a winter have swept over the spots where repose their ashes; still they are not, they cannot be forgotten. The record that is given of their lives may perish, and the rude lettered tablet that stands over their graves may moulder to dust; but their fame is deathless in the heart of every lover of Scotland's liberty and Scotland's ancient faith. Their worth has a monument of a more enduring nature than marble or brass: a monument which shall survive the trophies of conquerors and kings, and which time will never be able to destroy.

"Let no impious breath
Soil their fair fame, or trample o'er th' ir death,
Let Scotia's grateful sons their tear-drops shed
Where low they lie in honour's gory bed,
Rich with the spoils their glorious deeds have won,
And purchased freedom to a land undone;
A land that owes its greatness and its worth
To those who o'er tyrants banished from the earth."

In December 1620 a noble band of Puritan pilgrims arrived in the "Mayflower and landed on the rock of Plymouth. These Christian patriots fleeing from prelatic oppression, retired to Holland, and thence emigrated to America. Others, oppressed by the arbitrary maxims and abhorring the tyrannical principles of the first Charles, followed the example of the first pilgrims, and took refuge in the wilds of America. Succeeding generations swelled the tide of emigration, and planted the then British Colonies with a race of men who derived their love of liberty from the blood of patriot fathers, and the bosoms of heroic mothers; and were the men qualified by nature and education, in the times "when monarchs owned no acceptare but the sword," "to foil a tyrant's rage."

Were their times "the times that tried men's souls?" They were the men of the times. Men who had souls: souls equal to the fiery ordeal by which they were tried—not those shrivelled specires of humanity, common enough in our times, in and out of the political arena, who grind, and strut, and bluster; whose god is gold who would sell their country for the spoils of office,—for thirty pieces of silver.

Whatever Great Britain and America enjoy of liberty, it is acknowledged by all except their hereditary foes, that they are indebted for it to the labours, sufferings and blood of these same Puritans and Covenanters and had it not been for them both Britain and America would have been what Spain now is, the ultima thule of European and American improvement.

It was the spirit of civil and religious freedom which animated such men as Knox, Cameron, Rutherford and Guthrie, in Scotland, and Washington, Roger Williams and Hancock, in America; and if the liberti s of these are to be preserved and enlarged, they will owe their preservation and enlargement to men of kindred principles and spirit.

In the Bible we have a transcript of the rights of man, associated with the claims of God upon the human race. Where this law is received, and the love of it animates the breasts of men the rights of men of all classes and conditions will be recognized an cherished. Without it a nation will no long preserve the little knowledge of human right and of which it may be possessed. An all-grasping selfishness will prevail; and every one will oppress his neighbor, and they who possess the power will be considered as possessing the right. A fell spirit of individuality or of caste will prevail. The golden image will be set up, nor will it lack worshippers; while it will banish piety and patriotism from the land, and trample upon all right, dividing mankind into two classes—lordings and slaves.

Cholera.

The Marseilles papers state that on the appearance of the cholera in Egypt, the municipal authorities in Marseilles desired to place all ships entering that port from the Levant in quarantine. For that purpose they applied to the Board of Health in Paris for permission to do so, but their application was refused. They said that as yet the inhabitants of Marseilles have not suffered from cholera, although no quarantine has been enforced. On the other hand, the cholera is said to be making sure and steady progress in France, and the action of the Government in endeavouring to keep all knowledge of the state of affairs from the people is very generally condemned. The disease is, however, reported to have no very virulent form, though the space over which it extends is very considerable and is increasing rapidly.

TERRIBLE SCENES AND PANIC.

The news from Ancona concerning the cholera is frightful; but the authorities vie with each other in the zeal and self sacrifice with which they confront the danger. In Florence and various other places isolated cases have occured, but they are all of persons who have fled from Ancona. The panic in Ancona is terrible, and more than a third have fled from the city. Most of the shops were shut, and great misery exists among the surviving families of the victims, the women and children who were left widows and orphans. A committee has been formed, and had made a strong appeal to public charity. The Government has placed considerable sums at the disposal of the Ancona municipality. A paragraph in the official Gazette appealed to the medical profession and asked for volunteers to assist the over-worked physicians of Ancona.

The Brantford correspondent of the Hamilton Spectator gives currency to the following story, which if true, approaches nearer to the Burke and Hare murders than anything we have heard of. The story is substantially as follows:

"A woman named Perkins, wife of a well to do farmer, living about two miles from that town, believing herself on her death bed sent for the Clergyman of the Primitive Methodist Church, Brantford, and in the utmost agony of mind, confessed that she had at different periods of her life committed six murders and all by poison. She said she had a mania to destroy human life, and it was by the greatest self-denial that she could restrain herself from secretly poisoning all persons with whom she was on terms of friendship; she however practised it until six of her victims slept their last sleep; two of them being adults and four of them children, and what makes the matter more revolting and horrid is that one of the former was her own husband, two of the latter were her own children. The children were murdered in England and the adults in Canada. The husband having been killed here, and the other person, whose name I did not learn was poisoned in Woodstock some years since She had been married to a second husband for a number of years, by whom she has a family of grown up children. This wretch—for wretch she was in appearance, lived for years in the greatest horror, with images of victims continually appearing before her eyes, her cries and imprecations were fearful and her language and appearance were loathsome till death stepped in and suddenly stopped her groans and curses.

A WOMAN TRANSFIXED UPON A PITCHFORK.—As Mrs. Gardiner was assisting her husband to load hay at Malta, last week she met with a frightful accident. She was standing on the load with a pitchfork in her hand, when the horses started, throwing her from the load. Feeling herself falling, she threw the fork to get it out of the way of harming her, and it fell striking the handle into the ground. She was thrown upon the tines of the fork, one of which passed through her body, the end of the tine coming out at her back. It required some force to wrench the fork from out her. A physician was sent for, but, on examination, gave no hopes of her recovery, yet, strange to say, although the accident occurred over a week ago, she is still living.—From the Sycamore (Ill.) Republican.

HACKMEN AT THE FALLS.—The Rochester Union, alluding to the murder of a gentleman at Niagara Falls by hackmen, says: It is well that all visit

Montreal Produce Market.

The market generally has been characterized by more activity, and a fair amount of business has been done in breadstuffs, mostly for forward delivery; the small stocks and light receipts limiting transactions on the spot. The African news, however, added to a reactionary movement in the States, have checked speculation, and in a great measure destroyed the confidence previously felt. The leading arrivals of provisions have also moved freely, Butter and Cheese being largely bought as fall rates for export.

Flour.—The activity noted at date of our last continued unabated during the early part of the week; arrivals were light, especially of Extras, which have been sought after at full rates for shipment to the Eastern markets, where such grades have been common and in demand. Strong superfine have also been in request for bakers' use, and other kinds have met with a fair consumptive country.

Since the receipt of the news of the Africa of an improvement in the weather in Britain and a consequent decline in prices there, our market has shown signs of weakness; buyers for the most part holding off until receipts of further news from Britain. The markets are everywhere extremely sensitive to every influence, having reference to the probable supply now in course of harvesting, and in the uncertainty as to what may be the rates at which the Fall trade will open, the advices from Britain and the leading markets in the States will be watched with no ordinary interest during the next few weeks.

The quotations of last week may be repeated unaltered, although they are in a great measure nominal, and to effect sales a trifling reduction would be submitted to.

Bag Flour is chiefly supplied by the local millers; the arrivals from Upper Canada being trifling.

Wheat.—The transactions have been very limited; holders and buyers alike holding back to await further advices from Britain. In the West prices are on the decline.

Peas.—Little doing; our loads are nominally about 72½ cts. per bush., and cargoes at about 77½ cts.

Oats and Barley.—The transactions are as yet too small to base quotations upon.

Pork.—The demand is still restricted to actual wants, and stocks have become barer. Mess is held at $34, at which most of the transactions have taken place. There is no stock of the other grades, and prices are purely nominal

Lard.—The stock is extremely light, and pure samples continue to retail at 15 cts per lb.

Tallow.—Supplies, which are light, met with a fair consumptive demand at 8 to 8½ cts.

Butter.—The British advis a thus far have been sufficiently encouraging to maintain an active demand at still improving prices; and notwithstanding the liberal receipts for so early a stage in the season, everything offered has been readily taken for export at prices ranging from 16 to 20 cts; the bulk of transactions being between 18 and 19 cts., only the choicest parcels commanding extreme figures. British advices report heavy arrivals with a disposition on the part of buyers to hold off for better terms, and as the increasing shipments from American ports continue to reach their destination, swelling previous accumulations, some reaction is not improbable; although from the scarcity and generally high prices o provisions, added to the impaired circumstances of the working classes, causing a larger consumptive demand than for some seasons back, no serious or permanent decline is apprehended. Present prices being, however, almost unprecedentedly high, and the state of the weather permitting of Butter being forwarded in good condition, holders will probably find it safest to realize as early as convenient, much disappointment having at times been experienced by an undue disposition to hold speculating on exorbitant rates

Ashes.—Receipts continue liberal, and with a fair demand, prices are fully maintained—First Pots range from $5.10 to $5 12½, according to tares, and inferior sorts $5 12½ to $5.15. Pearls, first sorts, find ready sale at $5.30 to $5 34½, but seconds are dull and difficult of sale at $5.10 to $5.12½.

The Stock Market.—The demand still continues good for all the favourite stocks and the prices are firm with a tendency to advance.—There has not been much business doing this week, the supply being short of the demand. Commercial Bank has been sold at 78½; La Banque du Peuple at 101, and City Bank at 104½. Sterling Exchange very quiet at 9 to 9½ for Bank Bills.—Trade Review, September 1st.

Three of Jeff. Davis' children, with Mrs. D.'s mother, have arrived in Montreal.—Mrs. Davis is expected soon. Mrs. Tucker has also arrived there.

Fenian Sisterhood.—It is said that a Fenian Sisterhood is being organized in Toronto, and that a daughter of a member of the Hibernian or Fenian Society has been appointed President.

The "Car Disease."—A new disease seems to have broken out in the Eastern portion of New York city, which for want of a better name has been called the "car disease," from the fact that it is ascribed to overcrowding, filth and contagion in the street cars. It commenced first as bowel complaint and dysentric disease, but seems to have grown increasingly virulent and somewhat changed its character—until now it has assumed a new and distinctive phase.

BALSAM OF WILD CHERRY
IN CANADA.

The following testimony from a well known and highly respected Merchant of Prescott, is corroborative of the general approval given to Dr. WISTAR'S BALSAM OF WILD CHERRY:

Prescott, C. W., Dec. 9th, 1859.

Messrs. S. W. Fowle & Co., Boston.

Gentlemen:—

Being solicited by your Travelling Agent, for an expression of opinion of Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry. I with pleasure assert that it is, in my belief, the best remedy before the public for coughs and pulmonary complaints.

Having tested the article with myself and family, in case of severe coughs and colds, for years, with uniform and unexceptionable success, I unhesitatingly recommend it, with full confidence in its merits.

Yours truly,
ALFRED HOOKER.

Poetry.

NOBODY'S SONG.

I'm thinking just now of Nobody,
And all that Nobody's done,
For I've a passion for Nobody,
That Nobody else would own;
I hear the name of Nobody,
For from Nobody I sprung;
And I sing the praise of Nobody,
As Nobody mine has sung.

In life's young morning Nobody
To me was tender and dear;
And my cradle was rocked by Nobody,
And Nobody sang over near;
I was petted and praised by Nobody,
And Nobody brought me up;
And when I was hungry Nobody
Gave me to dine or sup.

I went to school to Nobody,
And Nobody taught me to read;
I played in the street with Nobody,
And to Nobody ever gave heed;
I recounted my tale to Nobody,
For Nobody was willing to hear;
And my heart it clung to Nobody,
And Nobody shed a tear.

And when I grew older, Nobody
Gave me a helping turn;
And by the good aid of Nobody,
I began my living to earn;
And hence I courted Nobody,
And said Nobody's I'd be,
And asked to marry Nobody,
And Nobody married me.

Thus I trudge along with Nobody
And Nobody cheers my life,
And I have a love for Nobody,
That Nobody has for his wife.
So here's a health to Nobody,
For Nobody's handsome grown,
And I've a passion for Nobody,
That Nobody else would own.

An Alabama Court Scene.

"Judge, the fellers are all here now; let's open the court!" said a man in a calico suit (shirt, pantaloons and jacket), as the door was thrown open, and some twelve or thirteen promiscuous looking personages were ushered into the old barn. It was about noonday, and all the morning had been ornamentally obscured by a soaking shower. The complainant, defendant, witnesses, and all in any way connected with the case, had travelled seven miles to find the only spot in a region where justice was assumed to be under legal distribution. Into the county court-room they came, all soaking and wet, and nearly every man with the stump of a bad smelling cigar in his mouth. Two or three were very drunk, and lay right down on benches and boxes about the place to go to sleep. One man had thought enough to kindle a fire, gathering such material as was at hand, and around this the rest of the party gathered to get themselves partially dry. It was a September day, and though not very cold, a dry jacket was more comfortable than a wet one.

"Who opens the case?" said the judge, as he turned over an empty box made to carry dry goods, and lying useless in a corner of the place.

A fellow standing before the fire turned and said:

"Why, Judge, if you mean that dry goods case, it is opened already."

Then there was a laugh, and as the judge sat down, an other man asked him if he was going to keep the prisoner's box all to himself.

The deputy constable then said:

"I'll be d——d if the court shan't be kept in order!" ordering at the same time Bill Bruce to give him a cigar.

The counsel for the plaintiff next came forward, and was commencing an eloquent address, when the judge stopped him in a familiar desire for a chew of tobacco.

"I doesn't chew, Judge," said the attorney.

"I know you does!" replied the judge.

The defendant then stepped forward and politely supplied the judge with tobacco.

After this the trial went on, and an accompaniment of most ludicrous incidents presented. One of the the witnesses, when he was wanted, was lying so sound asleep on a bench that the two lawyers and the constable, with their united efforts, couldn't wake him. When at last aroused, he told the whole court to go to the d——l, and lay down to go to sleep again.

An old sow rooted the door open, and came grunting into court, surrounded by her litter of squealing pigs.

"Drive her out!" was the instantaneous decision of the court.

"Have mercy on the wid w and the fatherless!" exclaimed a crooked fellow on a bench.

"Judge" said the counsel for the defendant, "your time I know is precious, as must be the case with so able and valuable a member of society. The case is perfectly clear, and I know your learning and lucid intellect has pierced through it at a glance. For me to argue, would be not only a waste of my own time, but an insult to your penetration. Much might be said, but nothing is needed. Before any other judge, I would lay down the rules of law, but here I know they have been deeply studied and wisely understood. I look around me and behold an humble house of logs, yet I see before me the spirit of truth, the unpurchasable distribu or of law, and the old tenement rises before my mental vision proud and beautiful as a majestic temple of justice. Judge I have a bottle of prune old Monongahela in my pocket; for the respect I bear your character, allow me to make you a present of it."

"Verdict for the defendant!" said the judge.

A TORPEDO.—Down in Centre Street, the other night, a stout woman, of the Irish persuasion, who had just rolled a barrel of ale into her den, sat down on the head of it to get breath, and cool her s. If after the intense physical exertion incident upon the deposit of said barrel in its accustomed corner.—Though she had ceased working, the ale did not, and presently burst out the head of the derral, hoisting the old lady to the ceiling, demolishing her bottles and drinking utensils, and raising the old Nick generally. The old lady picked herself u , and after looking for a moment at the ruin, wildly exclaimed. "Ah! be Jabers, bad luck to the man that put the torpedy in the bar'l."—Portland Advertiser.

Convenient Swearing.—In Connecticut, a certain justice was called to the gaol to liberate a worthless debtor by receiving his oath that he was not worth twenty dollars.—"Well, Johnny," said the justice, on entering "can you swear that you are not worth twenty dollars, and never will be?"—"I Way," answered the other, rather chagrined at the question, "I can swear that I am not worth that amount at present."—"Well, well," returned the justice, "I can swear to the rest! so go along, Johnny." And the man was sworn and discharged.

A WESTERN paper speaks of a wild turkey 'shot by a gentleman weighing twenty-three pounds.' That must have been either a very large turkey or a very small sportsman.

Button-hole, Cording, Braiding and Embroidering

SEWING MACHINE!

COMPANY,

623 BROADWAY, NEW-YORK.

THE BUTTON HOLE made by this entirely simple and novel machine, are not only equal to the best hand-made in the pearl or right side, but greatly surpassing them in beauty on the wrong side, which is formed by a beautiful braid stitch, made by an extra stitch, which no hand made button-hole possesses; thereby imparting to the same a much greater strength, which renders cording or barring altogether unnecessary.

One Needle and Two Threads are only Used

Unlike other Sewing Machines it manufactures its own Braid and Cord.

The Last Merchant Tailors freely admit that its beauty, finish and strength cannot be attained by the most skilful hand.

Simplicity is one of its great merits, therefore not liable to get out of order, and it can be worked with ease by any young lady, who will, after a few days' experience, make from 1,000 to 1,200 perfect button-holes in one day.

This is the only machine produced that will throw a stitch over the edge, so as to bind and cover it in a manner indispensible for Button-holes, Cording and Braiding, each of which can be done with colored, shaded or chine silks, and produce a fabrique of varied colors unexcelled for beauty and taste.

Instructions and Needles accompany each Machine.

Every Machine is Warranted for Twelve Months.

Machines can be seen in full operation at our spacious Store, 627 Broadway, near Bleaker, where instruction Rooms are reserved for Ladies.

P.S.—A novel patented BUTTON-HOLE Cutter for sale which shall in all cases accompany a Button Hole Machine.

A HARVEST SONG.

The toil of the day is ended,
The night is at her noon,
And the harvest song swells blithely up
Beneath the harvest moon.
Then tread a quicker measure,
And shout a louder strain;
With a dance and song, the day prolong,
That brings the golden grain.

From out the distant mountain
Comes the voice of the cascade;
And the nearer gleam of its silver stream
Makes glad the silent glade.
Through all the shadowy forest
Is heard the fall of leaves;
And the timid hare treads stealthily
Among the nodding sheaves.

And now on every hill side,
The purple vintage glows,
As when a deeper radiance falls
From daylight at its close.
No time is it for sadness,
Despondency, or fear,
When autumn comes in gladness
To crown the fruitful year.

Dear is the pleasant leaf time,
When all is soft around—
When frost imprisoned rivulets
Are melting into sound.
And dear, too, is the season
When spring and summer meet—
When the woods are faint with odours,
And the hills are dim with heat.

But spring is but for pastime,
And summer but for show,
While autumn like the crowned king,
Has riches to bestow.
So he shall be the monarch
Of all the shining year,
And a crown shall wear, and a sceptre bear
Of fruits and the golden ear.

Foot Rot in Sheep.

With all that has been published in regard to foot rot in sheep it yet prevails, for when once introduced it requires time and the closest attention to dispose of it. The virus or innoculation is left from the diseased foot on the heavy dews. On the first appearance of the disease there is a watery mucus gathering between the hoofs, and in a few days it works in between the hoof and the frog of the foot, and if not attended to in a few weeks the hoof becomes loose, and falls off. The farmer that has but a small flock should provide himself with a sharp knife and blue vitrol. Dissolve the vitrol in water as strong as it can be made. Put the sheep on a dry floor. Examine every foot. Those that are diseased pare off all of the hoof that is loose from the frog of the foot. This requires close attention, then dip the foot in the prepared vitrol. So dip every foot diseased twice a week for six weeks, put them into a field that has not been occupied by diseased sheep, and a cure will be effected. If the flock is more than fifty, prepare a trough twelve or fourteen feet long, ten inches wide, flat on the bottom, fill it two inches deep with the prepared vitrol, yard the sheep in a dry yard, at the opposite end make a passage way that only one can pass out at a time. In this way place the trough after they have all passed through drive them a few rods. Every one the least affected will go lame. Take all such and examine every foot where the disease is found, treat as above, go on so twice a week for six weeks, and if kept where no disease has been, a cure will be effected.—One great difficulty in effecting a cure is letting them run on grounds where the disease has been left for weeks before.—Genesee Farmer.

FRENCH BUTTER MAKING.—It is well known that cream may be converted into butter by simply being buried in the ground, but it is not generally known that this mode is in common use in Normandy and some other parts of France. The process is as follows:—

The cream is placed in a linen bag of moderate thickness, which is carefully secured and placed in a hole in the ground, about a foot and a half deep; it is then covered up and left for 24 or 25 hours. When taken out the cream is very hard, and only requires beating for a short time with a wooden mallet, after which a half a glass of water is thrown upon it, which causes the butter milk to separate from the butter. If the quantity of cream to be converted into butter is large, it is let more than 25 hours in the ground. In winter when the ground is frozen, the operation is performed in a cellar, the bag being well covered up with sand. Some persons place the bag containing the cream within a second bag, in order to prevent the chance of any taint from the earth. The system saves labor, and is stated to produce a larger amount of butter than churning, and of excellent quality, and is, moreover, said never to fail.—Journal of the Society of Arts.

SULPHUR FOR KILLING WORMS ON TREES.—About the year 1834 the worms were probably more troublesome on our fruit trees than now. My own orchard was so striped of verdure as to look as if it had been burned over.

In the month of February following I bored into the trees with a half inch bit about two inches, and packed the hole full with powdered sulphur, plugging up the hole, using as short a plug as possible.

When the sap started, the sulphur being diffused throughout the branches and entering fully into the circulation did its work effectually. The worms hatched; but as soon as they commenced feeding they dropped off dead. The whole orchard the following year was fresh, and more than usually luxuriant. I think the only reason this remedy has ever failed—is, because the sulphur was not applied at the proper season so as to be taken up by the circulation of the sap.—M. B., Gen see Farmer.

SALTING DOWN CUCUMBERS FOR PICKLES.—Leave half inch of stem on cucumbers—wash them in cold water—immediately pack with salt in alternate layers, salt next to wood—one barrel salt to five of cucumbers. Fill barrel full, putting salt on top—cut a wide board so as to just fit inside of barrel—bore half a dozen half-inch holes through—place it on pickles with a stone on, which should weigh at least twenty-five pounds, so as to keep the pickles always in brine. Take off all scum which rises. Keep the barrels in the shade, and in four weeks take off stone. Put more salt on, then head up, and they are ready for market. It is best to have two sizes of pickles.—W. W. C., Fairport, N. Y., in Country Gentleman.

Mr. Duren, of Woburn, Mass., writes the New England Farmer, that he cures his hens of eating by shutting them in a tub with an inch or two of water on the bottom, during the day. Puts them on the roost at night, and if not cured treats them to the water remedy for another day, and they will be glad to stand on their feet.

Take care of the plows. While they are idle during harvest, see that they are well cleaned and covered with a coating of lard and resin.

Whenever you see a caterpillar's cocoon in your orchard, get it off the tree and trample upon it.

See what the most popular and widely circulated periodicals say of our Establishment:

From the "Dispatch" of February 25, 1865.

We take pleasure in calling the attention of our readers to the announcement of Messrs. Devaugh & Co.'s Great Sale of Jewelry, Silver Ware, and Fancy Goods, in our advertising columns. We are personally acquainted with the members of this firm and know them to be gentlemen of sterling worth and integrity. Their stock of goods, for variety and extent, we have scarcely seen paralleled.

From the "Mirror of Fashion," March 1, 1865.

Messrs. Devaugh & Co.'s Great Sale of Jewelry, etc., opened on the 15th ult., and we venture to say that no finer display of goods was ever exhibited by any establishment in this city. The ladies thronged their bazaar almost to suffocation, although the streets were rendered nearly impassable by the melted snow and slush. We predict for them a wonderful success.

From the "Ledger," February 28, 1865.

Our lady friends should visit the extensive establishment of Messrs. Devaugh & Co., No. 15 Maiden Lane, if they wish to indulge themselves with a sight which they will long remember. Such a profusion of elegant Watches, Chains, Rings, Earrings, and, in short, of Jewelry of every name, kind and description, we never before witnessed. Their silver and plated ware is superb and almost casts into the shade the other splendid establishments which have long been the boast of our city. It is estimated that their stock is worth not less than one million of dollars.

PIANO-FORTES

DRIGGS' NEW PATENT.

ARE THE ONLY INSTRUMENTS constructed on a truly scientific principle. That have greater strength, and will remain longer in tune than any other Piano. The construction is simple and natural, all the extraneous lumber in the body of the instrument is dispensed with; the sound boards are merely two arched planks of thin wood, like the front and back of a violin; the strings are attached to a strong iron frame, which is separate and entirely independent of the case, thereby dispensing with the old barbarous form of stringing by substituting straight bridges, preserving at the same time The Over Strung Bass, of which Mr Driggs is the inventor. By these improvements we gain much more vibratory power, at the same time preserving all the purity and richness of tone

They have received the highest testimonials from the Press, and all the principal artists in the country, among which are—

Harry Sanderson,	L. M. Gottschalk,
Mrs Bartelck,	S Thalberg,
Theodore Eisfeld,	Wm Mason,
Herman Wollenhaupt,	A Barili,
Francis H. Brown,	M. Strackosch,
Wm. Henry Fry,	Charles Fradel

Mr. SIGISMUND THALBERG, the great pianist, says:—I have examined your new Piano-fortes and I cordially approve of its system of construction. Its principle, by which great increase of vibratory power is obtained, being very simple and perfectly philosophical. The tone is grand and noble; it has great capacity for sustaining the sound or singing, and its volume of tone or power I have never heard excelled in depth, purity and sympathetic sweetness.

Wm. HENRY FRY, late musical critic of the N. Y. Tribune says:—I have examined your newly invented Piano-Fortes. They merit all the praise given to them by Messrs. Thalberg, Gottschalk, Strackosch, Mason and others. As regards the structure, they are original and philosophical; in purity, volume, and continuity of tone; in vocal verisimilitude, that crowning excellence which enables the pianists to "sing" on the instrument. Your Pianos deserve the highest rank. Your invention, in my opinion, is destined to work radical changes in the manufacture of Pianos throughout the world.

From the N. Y. Herald, Sept. 5.—Upon a careful examination of Driggs Piano-Forte, we find the results obtained are a very fine singing tone, great purity and brilliancy throughout the entire instrument, not often found in Pianos constructed upon the old plan.

The N. Y. Times, July 12, says:—We have now an instrument without an equal. It can sing with a smoothe delicacy, perfectly unattainable on any other instrument; an ordinary player obtains with no exertion, the fullness of a Grand Piano Forte and they must speedily supersede the old styles.

GENTLEMEN:—Having thoroughly examined and tested the Piano-Fortes invented and patented by Mr. S. S. Driggs, I am of the opinion that the tone resulting from his improvements, as exhibited in the instruments under examination, in point of richness, depth and brilliancy, equals that of the best Grand Piano-Fortes, and excells them in pure, musical and refined tone, power thus approximating closer to what I consider perfection in the instrument than has yet been achieved by any other system of manufacture.

Yours respectfully,
L. M. GOTTSCHALK.

ARE YOU IN AGONY?

A WELL SPRING OF HOPE FOR ALL!

CAN BE FOUND IN

Holloway's Pills.

Be of Good Cheer! The Sinking may be Saved!

BY THE USE OF

Holloway's Ointment.

THE history of these great Remedies is the most wonderful medical revelation that the world has ever known. It establishes the all important fact that WHEREVER, and in WHATEVER SHAPE internal diseases exists, the disinfecting, searching and healing properties of the Pills are fully equal to its subjection and cure, and that, with the Ointment, they are

The Great Ambassadors of Health to all Mankind.

This is not a history written by one man, or even derived from the experiences of one nation. It consists of a compilation of testimonials from the sick of every country—an unimpeachable record, the like of which has never been adduced in favor of any discovery or invention since time began.

These Mighty Healers, World Known and World Tried are a Boon to the Sick

The want of a sterling medicinal to meet the ills and necessities of the suffering portion of humanity, and one entirely free from mineral and other deleterious particles, was severely felt till this all powerful medicine was ushered into the world; HOLLOWAY'S INVALUABLE PILLS have become the HOUSEHOLD REMEDY of all nations. Their attributes is to PREVENT as well as to CURE; they attack the BLOOD, the ROOT of the complaint, and thus, by removing the hidden cause of disease, re-invigorate and restore the drooping energies of the system, assisting nature in her task of VITAL and FUNCTIONARY REFORMATION.

Disorders of the Stomach

Are the sources of the deadliest maladies. Their effect is to vitiate all the fluids of the body, and to send a poisoned stream through all the channels of circulation. Now, what is the operation of the Pills? They cleanse the bowels, regulate the liver, bring the relaxed or irritated stomach into a natural condition, and, acting through the secretive organs upon the BLOOD itself, change the state of the system from sickness to health, by exercising a simultaneous and wholesome effect upon all its parts and functions.

Woman in all her Difficulties

Is invited to test the regulating and restorative powers of this harmless but effective preparation. At the two epochs of life in which the female system undergoes the most important and critical changes, the Pills will prove a positive safeguard against evil consequences. They are also confidently recommended as a specific in every disorder to which females are exclusively a bject.

Be it Understood,

That the above statements can at all times be verified by the written testimony (extending through a quarter of a century) of tens of thousands of unimpeachable witnesses.

Bilious Maladies, &c., &c.

In whatever form disease attacks the liver, it is repelled and exterminated by this searching, painless, and irresistable curative. Bilious remittents, bilious purging, and all the ordinary disorders of the organ, indicated by pain in the right side and between the shoulders, yellowness of the whites of the eyes, weakness and debility, &c., are relieved and removed by the remedy, with a celerity which astonishes the sufferers and their friends. Let the sick whom the faculty have abandoned, resort with confidence to this powerful anti-bilious agent, and a restoration to health and activity will be the unvarying result.

Dyspepsia, Diarrhœa, Weakness, &c. &c.

The terrible bodily and mental pangs which characterise Dyspepsia are at once mitigated by the Pills. Diarrhœa, constipation, headache, physical prostration, nervous tremors, hot flushes, spasms, affections of the kidneys, hemorrhoids or piles, and, in fact, all internal complaints, from whatever cause arising, give way before the salutary influence of this extraordinary remedy. As a specific for dyspepsia, and the disorders connected with it, or growing out of it, the Pills are always to be relied on when every other medicine and mode of treatment has utterly failed.

Holloway's Pills are the best Remedy known for the following diseases:

Asthma,	Headaches,
Bowel Complaints,	Indigestion,
Coughs,	Influenza,
Colds,	Inflamation,
Chest Diseases,	Inward Weakness,
Contiveness,	Liver Complaints,
Dysepsia,	Lowness of Spirits,
Diarrhœa,	Piles,
Dropsy,	Stone and Gravel,
Debility,	Secondary Symptoms,
Fever and Ague,	Venral Affections,
Female Complaints,	Worms of all kinds.

CAUTION.

If the readers of this "notice" cannot get a box of Pills or Ointment from the drug store in his place, let him write to me, enclosing the amount, and I will mail a box free of expense. Many dealers will not keep my medicines on hand because they cannot make as much profit as on other persons' make.

None are genuine unless the words "Holloway, New York and London," are discernible as a Water Mark in every leaf of the book of directions around each box; the same may be plainly seen by holding the leaf to the light. A handsome reward will be given to any one rendering such information as may lead to the detection of any party or parties counterfeiting the medicines or vending the same knowing them to be spurious.

☞ Sold at the manufactory of Professor HOLLOWAY, 80 Maiden Lane, New York, and by all respectable Druggists and Dealers in Medicine throughout the United States and the civilized world, in boxes, at 25 cents, 88 cents, and $1 40 each.

PART I.

Mr. Hunter was kind in his way to all. A little heavy, perhaps, and utterly bankrupt in the small change of conversation; but meaning to be kind, which goes a good way. He did his arbitary, clumsy best to keep Georgia tacked to his arm all the day; and she, partly for gratitude and partly for fear of observation, let herself be led captive until dinner time; but then she slipped her lash, and managed in the simplest and yet the cleverest way in the world to get a seat next to Roger Lewis, far away from both host and elder sister; and when dinner was over, she made her escape into the wo ds: whither no one ever knew. But the latter part of the day was passed without her sweet face among the players at croquet and Aunt Sally; and it was only when evening and must-ring time came, that she re-appeared—no one quite knew when, or how, or whence—her hands full of wild flowers, her eyes full of love, and her heart so full of happiness she scarce knew how to hold it all together without letting it run out for all the world to see. A short time after, Roger Lewin joined the group where she was; and he, too came in the same apparitional way, looking, as Mary Dowthwait said softly, 'as if he had met an angel in the wood.'

'Like Balaam's beast,' said young Abraham Moss, who did not like him.

So Mr. Samuel Harmer Hunter's grand coup went off to perfection. There was an immense amount of laughing, and almost as much flirting; some friendships were struck up; some, too, disintegrated finally and sent crumbling to chaos; and some pleasanter, bonds, and stricter, just begun in the weaving; and much that was charming if less that was intense, as the order and result of the day's experience. And when they all separated after a delicious dance and a first-rate supper at the Oaks—Mr. Hunter's place—every one agreed that it was the most delightful thing ever given at Brough Bridge; and Mr. Hunter's popularity was assured, and the fact of his being a retired non merchant condoned and done with.

But there is always a mauvais quart d'heure after every joy; the bill that must be paid when the cakes have been eaten and the wine has been drunk; and this quarter of an hour had to come to Roger and Georgie. Mrs. St. John had left them rope enough for the hanging. All the day after the first brush about the carriages she had purposely ignored the existence either of sister or secretary. Her sharp eyes, and hers alone, had detected little Georgie stealing off into the wood where Roger Lewin had sauntered not so long before—and she had held her peace: nay, she had ever seen Georgie's fresh muslin whisking through brians and brambles, in the endeavour to find a lonely place where Love might take his ease and not need Caution to stand sentinel against intruders—and still she held her peace: but when they all reached home, then the storm burst forth; and fat, lazy, irascible old papa lost a night's rest for trouble at the ill news his 'daughter St. John' brought him. He was a proud man, though a vacillating and a weak, and had no intention of allowing his prize child to fling herself away on a young fellow like Roger Lewin—a mere nobody, all very well in his way, but with only character and good looks for his fortune. And that didn't seem quite enough to the old banker, used to deal with thousands and tens of thousands. So the next morning the young secretary was sent for, betimes, into the library, and shown the bill—the cost of yesterday's confirmation of his love.

'So young man!' cried Mr. Fenton, pushing his spectacles up over his forehead, and looking at Roger with as much disdain as anger; 'a pretty use you have made of your time, I hear; and a fine return for all my kindness to you!'

'I am sorry, sir, that you have heard anything unfavourable of me,' answered Roger quietly.

'Unfavourable? Oh! you call it unfavourable, do you? Well done, Mr. Roger! You can be mealy-mouthed to yourself, I see, however bold in action. Disgraceful, sir; dishonourable, unmanly; that's what I call it! Unfavourable, indeed! I like that!'

Roger flushed. 'May I know the conduct to which you apply these terms, Mr. Fenton?' he then said. 'They are hard words for a man to hear unconnected with any definite fact.'

'Come, come, Mr. Roger! this kind of bravado will not do for me! You know well enough what I mean; and to affect this simpering ignorance is only to add hypocrisy to dishonour. Yes, sir; hypocrisy to dishonour. I repeat it. What is all this I hear of you and my daughter, Miss Fenton, eh, sir? Answer me that, I say!' striking the table with his fist.

'I do not know what you have heard, Mr. Fenton,' answered Roger, raising his eyes full to the old man's. 'I only know what I have to tell; I love your daughter, and she loves me; beyond this I have nothing to confess.'

Mr. Fenton's puffy face changed curiously during his secretary's audacious speech

'You love my daughter, and she loves you! Oh! that's it; is it?' he said, after a pause, speaking in slow, deliberate way, quite different to his former petulance.—'Well, then, let us argue the matter coolly, Mr. Roger. There is nothing like coolness and Cocker. I suppose you have not rushed into solemn responsibilities without consideration? If you have induced my daughter to love you, you must have some plans for the future; marriage, I should suppose, and a home, and all that? What, now, have you got to offer her?' crossing his legs; 'what is your fortune? and what settlements will you make on her? I am not hard, you see, or unreasonable, and can discuss the matter calmly.'

'I can make no settlements, and I have no assured fortune. I have only my love, my brains, and my hands,' answered Roger a little gruadly.

'Poor pay, young man! poor pay! I doubt the pot boiling over that fire.'

'With love and courage, it is not such a very bad prospect!' returned Roger smiling, encouraged by Mr. Fenton's manner. Love is so credulous of good!

'Love and a fiddlestick's end!' roared Georgie's father, blazing out again. 'Don't talk your absurd sentimentalities to me, sir! There's no rational business in them! I ask you again; what do you mean to do for my daughter?'

'Work to maintain her; as you worked, dear sir, when you were young, and married Mrs. St. John's mother.'

'Now look, Master Roger,' said Mr. Fenton, uncrossing his legs and speaking not unkindly—for he really liked the lad, and was almost as sorry as he was angry at the whole affair—'this kind of folly must come to an end. You must see for yourself that it has no root, no foundation, no possibility of future life in it. Give it up, boy, as a dream—very natural perhaps, to your age and inexperience—but as a dream that must be shaken off. I trust your word so thoroughly, that if you will now promise me on your honour as a gentleman, to have done with this folly, I will overlook the past, and we will go on again as before. Give me your word, Roger, and let the thing stand by.'

'Thank you, sir; I feel all your kindness and understand it to the utmost,' answered Roger; 'but I cannot give up your daughter's love, or her promise. So long as she remains true to me, I will remain true to her; and after. I cannot give her up, save at her own desire.'

'Then we must part, Mr. Lewin; we must part,' said Mr. Fenton testily.

Roger turned pale. 'I cannot remonstrate, Mr. Fenton,' he said sadly; 'you are in your right here, and I have but to obey.'

'I am sorry for it, Roger, very sorry; very sorry indeed to lose you, because I really like you, and, until now, have respected you; and you just suit me. But I cannot keep a young man about me who makes love to my daughter, and wants to marry her on nothing a year. You have been a fool, my boy, that's all; but we part in no ill feeling, remember; and when I can befriend you, I will. I wish you had not been a fool, Roger!' He put out his hand kindly, and looked at the young man with almost tenderness.

Roger shook his head warmly. 'Promise me one thing only, dear sir,' he said earnestly; 'promise that there shall be no unfair play with your daughter; but leave me free to win her, if I can satisfy your requirements.'

'I will do nothing,' said Mr. Fenton, emphatically. 'I cannot answer for others,' he added below his breath.

'Thank you sir,' again said Roger; 'your promise is everything to me.' Then he turned away, once again looking back and bidding good-bye before he closed the door behind him, for the last time as Mr. Fenton's private secretary.

'I wonder,' said the old man to himself half aloud; and then he stooped and thought. 'Oh no! no!' he cried out, 'what would Carry say!'

Roger had no difficulty in finding little Georgie. She, too, had her fears about the 'bad quarter of an hour;' and knowing that her lover had been summoned at an unusual time by her father, hung about the passage, waiting for his appearance.

'Come with me a moment, alone,' said Roger in a low voice. 'I must see you alone, Georgie, whatever happens!'

She felt that something was wrong, and clung to him lovingly; not weakly, but with all her heart of love and girlish tenderness centered in that one earnest, clinging touch. They went into the conservatory—that favourite place for lovers; and there Roger told her what both knew would have to come when their secret was discovered; that Mr. Fenton knew all; that he was dismissed, and must leave the house to-day.

'To-day!' said poor Georgie hiding her face. 'To-day! so soon after yesterday! Oh, Roger! what shall I do? what shall I do?'

'Trust to God, Georgie, and be a brave hearted girl,' said Roger with quivering lips; 'and believe in me. Whatever you may hear, and whatever you may not hear—and the one is sometimes worse than the other—never have a moment's doubt of me. Believe in me, as I shall believe in you, though I neither see nor hear of you for twenty years to come; and be sure that the love which can be faithful through absence and trial, will be blessed in the end!'

She looked up into his face, and put both her hands in his. 'I will,' she said fervently. 'I will believe in you, Roger; and I will be faithful and true to the last day of my life!'

'Even if you never receive a written line from me? for I know that your sister would not suffer us to correspond openly, my Georgie; and I would not ask you to stoop to anything involving management or intrigue. But, can you believe in me through years of silence?—perhaps against the harder trial of falsehood, hearing that I was untrue to you!—going to be married to another?—all the reports so sure to be set afloat, where there is something to be gained by the severance of two lives!'

'Yes,' she said; 'I know that you will not deceive me; and I would believe in any one's falsehood rather than in yours.'

He caught her to him in a very passion of grief and love. 'God bless you, my angel! now I am satisfied! Oh! never doubt me, my Georgie. Trust me as I shall trust you, through all things—evil reports, apparent neglect—everything; and believe, as I do, that if we are true to each other, we must come to a good issue at the last! Wear this, somewhere out of sight, for my sake,' he then added, taking his signet-ring from his finger; 'it is my crest you see—a mailed arm holding a sword, and my motto "Faithful and True;" and if ever you are inclined to doubt me, or to waver in your own heart, look at this, and let it bring you back to this moment and the solemn pledge between us.'

'I will,' she said again very earnestly, kissing the ring which she fastened to a small chain she wore, and hid in her bosom; 'I never shall be tempted to desert you or to disbelieve in you, Roger, darling; but if I do, I will look at this, and come back to you again.'

He held her in his arms, and pressed her to him. 'Good-bye, then, my beloved! God bless that sweet life! My beloved, my only love! this is but for a time; believe that it is not for long, my Georgie; and again I say to you, trust me! You have no need to say the same to me!'

With a rapturous strain he pressed her once more fervently to his heart, and kissed her tearful face again and again; she clinging to him with her whole force of love, sobbing now as if her heart would break. And then, the door opening, and Mrs. St. John appearing in all the glow of her angry triumph, the brief hour of summer love was at an end, and the long day of sorrow began.

PART II.

It had been summer when Roger Lewin and Georgie Fenton brought their happiness to so sorrowful an ending by the imprudence of their love; it was winter now when Mrs. St. John and her young sister were sitting by the fire in the great drawing-room (where Georgie had been caught and had her ears boxed for playing chess with the secretary), outwardly occupied about some woman's work, though inwardly absorbed in their own thoughts, pleasant with neither if ominously steadfast with both.

By Mrs. St. John's advice Mr. Hunter had of late, and since Roger's departure, refrained from any very open demonstrations contenting himself with merely 'paying attention' to Miss Fenton—such as sending her the best of his hothouse flowers and greenhouse grapes; lending her pleasant books to read; insisting (he had a way of insisting very arbitrarily, if quietly, on a point; and a great disclamation to 'take no for an answer' when he had set his heart on 'yes' instead) that he should ride his little half-Arab Leila, which he declared to her one day in a loud whisper he had bought for her use alone—after which she would as soon have mounted a Royal Bengal tiger; making her presents of outlandish curiosities, of which, girl-like, she was very fond; and the like. All of which small amenities poor Georgie knew portended more; and the special thought now agitating the mind of each sister was—'I hope he will not be rash, I am afraid of her yet,' with the one; and 'I wish he would say it out plainly at once, and then I should have done with him, for a time at least,' with the other.

But neither spoke. Indeed there had been very little speaking of any kind between the two since Roger went away. There had been no complaining from Georgie; no reproaches, no tears—at least not in public; but she had silently withdrawn her sister as from a declared enemy, and lived with her as with a stranger in the house. They sat and worked together in the morning—as is usual with the women of a family—while papa dictated letters and his essay on safe speculation to his new secretary in the library, and Mr. St. John, in the dining-room read the 'Times' from 'hair to nails,'—from the first sheet of the Dead and Alive to the last of the sales' advertisements; and they drove out together sometimes, not often; and they dined at the same table; and sat together again in the evening with papa and St. John for additional companions; and there their intercourse ceased. For all real purposes of sisterhood they were as entirely severed as if in separate houses. A state of things which be sure sister Carry made the most of when indulging in confidential talk with the neighbourhood; so that little Georgie came to be known throughout Brough Bridge as the most deceitful little varlet in the place, 'very sweet and charming and all that, but leading that poor Mrs. St. John quite a dog's life, and treating her abominably.' The only persons who stood up for her with anything like thoroughness were Charley Dunn and his great ally, Louisa Globb. All the Globbs, indeed, spoke kindly of her, though they did think her a great many degrees too slow, and wondered at her for not being more jolly. But these two were her especial champions, and never allowed an ill-natured word about her to pass unchecked.

Her trial had changed Georgie. From a mere child whose main characteristic was her crystalline simplicity, and who gave herself up to love and pleasure without a question of to-morrow or how was it all to end? she had become a silent and reserved woman, with a charge to maintain and a treasure to defend; more sweet, perhaps, than when she was only a good tempered girl who had never known a true sorrow, and whose amiability came more from the absence of trial than from the presence of patience; but so quiet and dispirited, so unlike the blithe, bright creature whose face had turned like a sunbeam on the graver party in the phaetos that happy summer day! It was all for the best though, she used to say to herself. Her present time of probation would steady her, and make her fitter to be Roger's wife than she would have been if nothing had happened; and perhaps after all—and this was a great thing for her to say—her sorrows were blessings in disguise, as she had so often read, but as she had never believed before. So she waited and hoped and trusted and believed; and read the second column of the 'Times' advertisement sheet.

Of course she received no letters.—Roger had written one; but getting no answer he knew what had become of it, and that it was quietly reposing in Mrs. St. John's desk; unless, indeed, she had made an end of it altogether, and burnt it. So he wrote no more, not wishing to afford sister Carry food for either wrath or amusement by his love. But instead of the post he substituted the 'Times.' Every Monday morning, at the second column, appeared these words: 'Faithful and true:' so more. Sometimes, not always in the very bad weather, on Wednesday or Thursday the same announcement came again, a little varied: then it was "Faithful and True." I also.' Mrs. St. John could intercept letters, but she could not touch this. She used to see the advertisement with the rest, and comment on it with the rest; laughing at the idea of people corresponding in such a manner, and declaring it to be a smuggler's trick: she had heard that all those queer announcements were smuggling messages; but she never looked at Georgie when she spoke, not connecting her with the matter in hand. And if she had, the quiet face bending tranquilly over her work would have told her nothing. It was a secret known only to two people in the world, if suspected by a third—Charley Dunn, the 'rattle' of Brough Bridge.—And he, happening to know that Roger Lewin had for crest a mailed hand and arm coupe at the elbow, with the motto 'Faithful and True' beneath, and being of the nature, as he phrased it, to put two and two together when he wanted to make four, came to the conclusion, not too rashly, that 'little Georgie was carrying on that game, was she, sly little puss in boots!' and 'who'd have ever thought it! but mihi beati! how love does sharpen folks' wits to be sure!—fancy sharpening up little Georgie Fenton's to correspond by the "Times!" My word!' said Charley to himself, thinking it all over, a little doubtfully, 'if that vixen of a sister Carry only knew!'

It had been snowing for forty-eight hours, and the country was almost impassable. Only a few of the hardier gentlemen in duck shooting boots and rough pilot coats went like feathered millers from house to house, carrying ladies' gossip and dealing out scraps of local news, acceptable in a country place, but doubly acceptable on days when every one else was confined to four walls and home faces learnt by heart years ago. Not always by heart though; but by eyesight and brain, which is more monotonous. And among the rest there came to the Hall where the Fentons lived, Charley Dunn escorting Miss Louisa Globb; and soon after them Mr. Samuel Harmer Hunter, bent on his second grand proposal. He would try his fortune this once again, he thought, and if she was still obdurate he would do—he didn't quite know what; cut his throat, or blow out his brains, or leave Brough Bridge for ever, or more probably, go home and be very miserable, and drink an extra glass of whiskey toddy to make himself sleepy, and to insure a good night's rest. He was rather annoyed when he saw the obstructive visitors there before him; but he trusted to his friend Mrs. St. John, and determined to wait the issue of the day's events; a day destined to be of supreme importance to more than one.

Months of futile watching had lulled Mrs. St. John's fears. Daily had she inspected the post-bag; but, save that first letter written the day after Roger's departure, nothing had come, and though she still asserted her right of looking first into the bag, and apportioning the letters to each, yet she did this rather as a bit of magisterial authority than as a precaution. To-day, however, the post was late, so that the time had gone by; her mind was occupied with Mr. Hunter; and the postman blew his horn so gently, or its sound was so muffled by the fast-falling snow, that she did not hear him; and, in fact, did not think about him at all. But Georgie, impelled by some strange impulse—she could never understand what—left the room when she heard the hall door open, and, receiving the bag from the footman, unlocked it and looked at the letters. For a moment she turned deadly pale, and the ground seemed to reel under her; but she had strength and presence of mind enough to thrust one letter, addressed to herself, unseen into the pocket of her dress, before giving back the bag to the servant to take to Mrs. St. John. Then she ran up stairs, scarcely breathing, and not living so much as feeling Paradise about her; and when she was fairly in her own room, she locked the door and bolted it too, and sinking into a chair broke the seal of her first love-letter—the all but actual presence of the one she loved and who loved her!

How long she remained there, wrapped in delicious dreams, she did not know; but all this time Mr. Hunter was on fire, and Mrs. St. John on thorns, while Charley Dunn and Louisa Globb looked and wondered, and one at least was in the dark. If the other was partly illuminated—a good guess often proving a serviceable lantern when nothing more confessed is at hand.—At last sister Carry could bear it no longer. With a flushed face and one of her most intolerable glances, she rang the bell—a little too violently for perfect good breeding—bidding the footman tell Flounce, the maid, to go look for Miss Fenton; 'and remind her' said Mrs. St. John, with sarcastic spite, 'that visitors are in the drawing-room.' Words spoken with all her fiery temper up and alive, to Charley Dunn's distress lest his favourite should feel annoyed; though Mr. Hunter, being a man of authority, thought she showed a becoming spirit, and knew when to tighten the reins to perfection.

But Georgie was too well fortified to feel annoyed at anything. The worst she felt was a kind of sighing trouble at being torn away from Roger; but knowing that she could meet him again in the same way, and at the same place, this very evening and for countless days after, she came down on the summons, full of pretty blushes and apologies for her rudeness.

'I think I must have been asleep!' she said laughing, and opening her eyes wide at the tell-tale timepiece; 'I had no idea I had been away so long.'

'Oh! you need not be asleep to be stupid,' snapped sister Carry in a fume.—'You are not asleep all the days of your life, and I am sure you are never anything but stupid! Just like you, going sitting upstairs without a fire on a cold winter's day like this!'

'Come and warm yourself, Miss Fenton,' said Mr. Hunter, making way for her to pass between him and the fire.

'I am not cold, thank you,' answered Georgie, not perhaps quite so graciously as she might have spoken. But then one does not like to be called stupid in company; and it is but human nature to vent one's displeasure on the unoffending. Which was what Georgie did when she passed Mr. Hunter, a little disdainfully, and coaxed herself into a chair next to Charley and Miss Louisa, partly because it was the farthest possible from the iron merchant and Mrs. St. John, and partly because a thought had struck her on entering the room, and she wanted to 'make up' to Charley Dunn. Dear innocent little girl! she was so transparent in her cajoleries.

In a short time Miss Louisa left her place, and chattered across the room to where Mr. Hunter sat. She wore what it pleased her to designate as 'clumpers,' and they made a noise like a company of dragoons striding over the floor. At least this was what Mrs. St. John said in her peevishness, because she was vexed at the 'intrusion' from first to last, and could not therefore see any manner of good in the intruders. Not that Miss Louisa cared; she only laughed her peculiarly rollicking laugh, and then she attacked Mr. Hunter, whom she wanted to do something for 'society'—that is, she and all her set wanted him to give a ball on the same scale and as charmingly managed as the pic-nic. When she had gone, Georgie, speaking rather low and very hurriedly, said to Charley, 'Oh, Mr. Dunn! come and see what a beautiful tasselled fern Lady Scratchley gave me last week,' rising, and going quickly to the door of the conservatory.

Charley followed her; and when they were at the farther end, and out of sight of the people in the drawing-room, she said, still speaking hurriedly, 'Will you do me a favour, Mr. Dunn?'

'You know I will if I can, Miss Georgie; a thousand and one, if you like.'

'Yes, I know you will; you are so good to every one. Well then, if a letter should come for me under cover to you, will you give it me quietly, and not tell any one about it?'

'Yes,' said Charley looking innocent.

'You are so kind, and I am so grateful,' said little Georgie, putting out her hand.

'I would do a great deal for you,' answered Charley. 'I don't care for many people more than I do for you, Miss Georgie.'

'You will have done more than any one in the world has ever done for me, and I do so like your not asking questions.' And Georgie gave him such a smile! Had it been for anything else than receiving a letter from her lover, it would have almost upset poor Charley.

'I don't want to ask questions; I know all about it,' cried Charley with a burst, meaning only to be honourable.

'You know all, Mr. Dunn?' and Georgie felt as if she were going to faint.

'Yes: you are, or were—I won't swear to the tense—engaged, or something like it, to Roger Lewin; and your sister has broken up everything and wants you to marry Hunter instead.'

'Who told you this?'

'You did yourself.'

'I?' cried Georgie aghast; 'when? how? I never told you, Mr. Dunn!'

'Yes you did; when we were at the pic-nic at Harrowfield-side; I saw it all. For the rest, about Hunter, I know only what every one else knows, and is talking about.'

'What on earth are you two doing closeted here!' cried Mrs. St. John's sharp, metallic voice, as she came briskly into the conservatory. 'What has Georgie been saying to you, Mr. Dunn?' she added, as that young lady, rather confusedly and without much thought of shoulders or crinolines, pushed by her and escaped.

'I'm sure I don't know,' was Mr. Charley's ungallant answer. 'Nothing of any consequence, anyhow.'

'Oh, stuff! I am certain she has been saying something,' persisted Mrs. St. John. 'She is so odd! Upon my word I think she is half mad!'

Mr. Dunn whistled. 'Well then,' he said after a pause, 'if you know so certainly that she and I have been talking secrets or concocting plots, perhaps you can tell me what they have been all about;' and he laughed noisily.

'Oh! that kind of thing won't do with me,' said Mrs. St. John, petulantly. 'I thought you knew me better, Mr. Dunn!'

'But how the deuce can I make something out of nothing!' exclaimed Charley; 'if you know so much you ought to know more; and if you are so very sure that things are going on, you ought to know what things they are, for I'm sure I don't!'

'Don't be rude, Mr. Dunn,' retorted Mrs. St. John angrily. 'I will find it all out, you may be sure of that! for I can see there is something understand between you and Georgie, and I'll not bear it, so I tell you.'

'Come, come! no quarrelling between friends,' cried Charley. 'That will never do! never pay the old woman her impudence, as my old friend used to say; and he took her saucily by the waist, in his character of the chartered libertine, and made her laugh, because, as she said, 'he was so funny.' Then, afraid to remain longer, lest she should find a hook somehow whereon to fasten the quarrel for which she was ripe, Charley made a sign to Miss Louisa Globb, and they both went away into the wind and snow, smoking cigars 'like a house a-fire,' said Mr. Charley Dunn. But he was not alone in that amusement; for cigar-smoking was one of the Miss Globbs' peculiarities, which, though not decidedly sinful, yet stood midway betwee vice and crime in the Brough Bridge estimate of morals.

BEAU IN THE CLOUD.—I have always been astounded," said Miss Smith, "at the anxiety of young ladies for beaux; but I never potied a female more than when Miss Mountfathers left school. Seeing her gazing toward the sky, I asked her what she was looking for. 'That beau,' said she, 'which is told of as being set in the cloud—I wish he'd come down.'"

THE DEFICIENCY.

Mr. Galt's Budget, brought down on the 29th ultimo, reveals a deficiency of $713,397 for the fiscal year ending June 30th. The last change adopted with respect to the time of closing the public accounts made it necessary to take into consideration the accounts of a year and a half. On this period the deficiency amounts to $540,823. The imports for the year ending June 30, coin excepted, have been $39,852,000; and the exports for the same perion, $40,792,000, showing a total trade of $80,644,000. The total income amounts to $10,528,000, against a total outlay of $11,541,329. It is not a very satisfactory state of accounts to shew $713,397 to be provided by new debentures; and this continuing from year to year does not show much financial statesmanship.—Mr. Galt may be able to make a three hours speech over the budget, and show very clearly how this deficiciency has arisen; but we think three hours spent in endeavouring to provide for it would be better spent and more to the point. The financial ability of the man may very justly be questioned who has permitted several millions to be added to our already large debt, and all through annual deficits. Is he afraid to meet the necessities of the position he occupies and provide for the yearly demands—which ought to be done every year, unless when some great work is being carried on? But during these last years no great public works have been on hand—no railroads, no canals made, nothing but the working machinery of the country, and yet there is no annual deficiency of three quarters of a million of dollars. Is Mr. Galt the right man in the right place? It may be doubted.

Strange Doings in Toronto.

From our Toronto correspondence it will be seen that the police there have been doing good service in securing some of the most daring and infamous burglars. Those taken appear to be old hands, well acquainted with their art, and prepared for every emergency. All their cleverness, however, did not avail them this time, they are now awaiting results, which we trust will be Penitentiary during their natural life. A strange quirk in law was set up at their trial by the defence, namely, that house-breaking and robbery, or intent of burglary, is not burglary if done before nine o'clock in the evening. This is a very nice point, perhaps, in law, but cannot have a shadow of reason about it. Very few will be able to see the difference between house breaking at 59 minutes past eight, and the same deed one minute past nine, or two minutes afterwards. If such a principle is held in law, the sooner it is swept from the law books the better. Of its existence the burglars seem to have been aware, and are trying to avail themselves of its advantages; but it is not likely to be applied to their case this time.

Flax Returns.

Mr. Alex. Scott, Communication Line, South, informs us that the product of about four acres which he sowed has amounted to 1130, or about 283 per acre. He also tells us that one half of the ground sown was favourably situated for the season, not being too dry; and if he had taken this part by itself, it would have averaged over $40 to the acre thus leaving an average product for the unfavorable portion of his field of about $20 per acre. Mr. Scott also spoaks favorably of the future prospects of growing the plant, either for the fibre or the seed, and thinks that the seed alone would pay $10 per acre, equal to the returns of even a good crop of spring wheat, while the farmer would still have the fibre or straw for his trouble. He would advise trying a few acres any way. Let every farmer do this next year, and we feel certain they will not have reason to regret it. This is the first year; with the working of the crop the farmers are in a great degree unacquainted. The cost of raising it, therefore, and bringing it to market now, is more than it will be after a few year's experience. What a change has been wrought in harvesting wheat in the last 30 years; and may we not expect improvement in this respect also? Mr. Calcutt has this year purchased 80 tons of the straw. He has been at considerable expense in fitting up sheds for steeping or rotting it, and also for machinery, yet he hopes to make reasonable returns for labor and cost.

Grammar School.

The friends of the Grammar School will be glad to learn that at the late examination of the school by Professor Young, that gentleman spoke in very flattering terms of the progress of the pupils since the last examination. In the presence of several members of the Board of School Trustees, the Professor remarked that the answering was good, and showed a clear understanding of the principles of those studies in which the pupils had been examined.

Two teachers are now required to take charge of two departments at present vacant, or almost so. Care in filling these will do much for the institution. Personal application is necessary, and after selection all wrangling should cease, personal predilections should give way to the public weal.

The Old Town Hall.

This venerable old building is again disposed of—Mr. Dunsford being the successful bidder. The commissioners realize the enormous sum of Twenty-seven Dollars for a building that was insured for over $900. It will now devolve upon the Council, as soon as the building is removed, to do something to put the market square in some kind of repair. In muddy weather it is not very pleasant getting around just as it is: besides the look of it is not very respectable. Could those who are convicted for various crimes and misdemeanors not be used to the advantage of the Town or County in repairing such places? It is too comfortable a berth to enjoy the commodious apartments of Mr. Norton's noble mansion, at the expense of the Town; and the sooner those that are frequenters of the place are forced to earn their bread by the sweat of their brow, the sooner will crime begin to decrease—and instead of a race to get in, as we witnessed not long since, we would find that those parties would more studiously avoid the Police Court. It is too bad to force law-abiding citizens to sustain them by providing board for those whom they are compelled to convict to render society safe.

Farmers Guide.

We have received a Prospectus of a work on the Counties of Peterborough and Victoria, purporting to contain the name and exact location of each farmer, stating also whether he is a freeholder or householder. This is a work much needed by business men, who require to know with whom they are dealing. The agents for this work will be in town shortly, and we hope they will receive all the encouragement which such an undertaking deserves. The publishers, Messrs. McEvoy & Co., have for many years been connected with Messrs. Mitchell & Co., in the compilation of books of the same character, and no doubt are capable of fulfilling all they represent.

Fires.

On Friday night last the barns of Mr. William Graham, in Smith, were consumed by fire, and their contents, together with stables, implements, harness, fanning mill, and numerous other articles. At the time the barns containing about 400 to 500 bushels of wheat unthrashed; also, 30 tons of hay, 150 bushels of peas, and about 30 bushels of oats. The fire took place about 2 o'clock in the night, and cannot be accounted for, unless from fires that were in the fields, but these were some distance away and must have been carried a considerable distance, either by the high winds or by some unknown agency. It will be remembered that the winds were very high that morning. Mr. Graham's loss is about $1400; he is insured in the Farmer's Mutual for $700 only.

We have received a letter from a friend at Washington, who has taken the trouble to write to us on the Fenian movement in the United States, and the intentions of the association. He professes to have been made acquainted with some of the intentions of the order, and very kindly gives us a word of warning. Of the good intention of the benevolent order we have our own ideas: of its power to hurt us—though ever so much inclined to do so—we have no fear. The uprising of the Fenians will prove their own destruction. If, therefore, they desire long life, they will cultivate the arts of peace rather than of war. "Whosoever taketh the sword shall perish by the sword." We thank our kind friend for his good will towards us, however, and will be glad to hear from him again.

Press Association.

The members of the press held their annual convocation last week at Brockville. From the immediate local papers we learn that a large number of this influential body availed themselves of the opportunity of meeting together. After the business of the meeting was over, those present proceeded to Ottawa City, where they were kindly received by their confreres of the capital.—When they each return home again we will perhaps hear more of this ambitious city and of the picturesque scenery of Ottawa.

We have been asked what object this body have in thus assembling. This we beg leave to answer in the words of a contemporary.

"We have been asked by outsiders what are the objects of the Press Association? Our reply has been, that is an Association of Editors and Publishers to protect and foster the art preservation of all arts—to encourage a social, generous feeling among writers for the press—to lay down rules for the guidance of journalism, whereby it may be preserved from personal wrangling—to encourage love of literary excellence—to foster a high literary tone in the public press; and, lastly, in matters of business and financial moment—to establish certain general principals calculated to advance the interests of publishers, and produce an harmonious business system. Such, if we are not mistaken, are the objects of the Press Association. And such objects are no less of special advantage to the press than they are of general advantage to the public."

The crops are all safely harvested and housed in this county. Farmers acknowledge a good yield generally, and the quality never was better. The earth has surely yielded an abundant increase to meet the wants of dependent creatures. The dry weather has also been succeeded by a few showers, and although more is needed, yet what has come came very opportunely for the sowing time: a verification of the promise,—"Seed-time and harvest, cold and heat, summer and winter will be to the end of the world" "Thy word is truth."

Bank of Montreal v. Stinson, Dennistoun for plaintiff. Verdict $129.18.

McConkey v. Tate, et al; Burnham for plaintiff. Referred.

Beatty v. Golborne: Burnham for plaintiff. Verdict £56 3s. 11d.

Ringland et al v. Scott et al: Fairbairn for plaintiff. Verdict $104.20.

Patterson v. Daveley: Fairbairn for plaintiff. Verdict $116.66.

O'Brien v. Elmison: Interpleader case: Scott for plaintiff. Verdict for plaintiff.

Lundy v. Mehill et al: Interpleader case: Dunsford for plaintiff. Verdict for plaintiff.

THE following important decision may interest some of our readers. We quot from the Hamilton Spectator:—"In a case tried at the last sittings of the Division Court in this city, His Honor Judge Logie has decided that a Bailiff, making a distress for arrears of taxes under a warrant form the Collector, is entitled only to charge $2 for his fees in distressing and selling. If he distrains merely, and the taxes are paid before sale, he would be entitled to $1. The grounds of the decision are that as the duties of the Sheriff in distressing for arrears of taxes under sections 133, 134 of the Assessment Act, are identical with those of the Collector under sections 96, 97 and 98. And as the statue allows the Sheriff $2 for these services, the Collector can only collect the same fees in addition to the remuneration allowed him by the Council. The Bailiff employed by the Collector can collect the fees only which the Collector himself would be entitled to if he acted personally in making the distress.

His Honor intimated his opinion that if costs are incurred in removing the goods or keeping possession, the Colector would be entitled to is actual disbursment for such extra costs, if reasonable in amount."

Products of New Zealand.

Mr. Robt. Goodfellow, North Monaghan, has kindly shown us a very nice sample of Flax fibre, from the Island of New Zealand, also some flowers. The Flax fibre is 4 feet 3½ inches long, and of a nice quality; it appears to have been stripped off after steeping. The flowers are of the daisy tribe, and the wall flower. A letter from a friend now residing in New Zealand to Mr. Goodfellow says that the flax plant there reaches 7 or 8 feet in height very often.

PRESS ASSOCIATION.

The annual meeting of the Press Association took place at the Victoria Hall, Brockville, on Wednesday afternoon. There was a very large attendance. The President of the Association, T. White, Esq., Hamilton Spectator, delivered an address. Several matters connected with the association were then disposed of at the conclusion of which the following gentlemen were elected office bearers for the ensuing year:

M. Bowell, Belerille Intelligencer, President; Thomas Sellars, Echo, Montreal, 1st Vice President; James Campbell, Whitby Gazette, 2nd Vice President; W. T. Cox, Huron Signal, Secretary; William Buckingham, Stratford Beacon, Honorary Secretary; Messrs. Siddon, London; White, Hamilton; Somerville, Dundas; Nicholson, Barrie; and Wylie, Brockville, Executive Committee.

Free passes were granted to the members of the Association by the several railway and steamboat companies, for which votes of thanks were tendered. A vote of thanks was given to the Telegraph Company for the free transmission of messages connected with the association, also to the Corporation of Brockville for the use of the Victoria Hall.

The meeting was then adjourned to be continued on board the boat the following day.

In the evening the annual dinner was partaken of at the Wilson House. Between 70 or 80 members sat down to table. A glorious evening as may be imagined followed.

On board the boat yesterday a variety of routes for the excursion next year were proposed, and after considerable discussion the following was selected: Members to meet in Kingston some time in August, proceed down to Montreal, where the annual meeting will be held. From Montreal the members will proceed to Quebec and from thence return home.

The members of the association left Brockville yesterday morning by railway for Arnprior, and from thence to Aylmer. At the latter place stages were in attendance from Ottawa for the conveyance of the party to this city.

Ald. Cunninghan, and Mosgrove and the City Clerk, having made such provision in the absence of the Mayor. The wives of several of the members accompany them.

BURGLARS TRAPPED.

Since I last wrote you we have had some strange doings. Sergeant-Major Cummings, Acting Chief of Police, by some means became informed of an intended burglary, and in a very business-like manner set about trapping the burglars. The burglary had been at first planned to take place at the business place of a Mr. Drouilliard, on Queen Street East, but as the burglars found out that Mr. Drouilliard was going to be out on a visit on an evening in the latter part of last week, they changed their plan and fixed to rob his house in his absence. The Sergeant-Major found out the whole plot and informed the gentleman of it, desiring him to keep the information secret and to go on with his visit, leaving the house in charge of the police. Two policemen were placed in the house in the evening, and another party, with the Sergeant-Major, behind the fence opposite the house. At a few minutes before nine o'clock the two thieves came on the scene. One of them, after some manœuvring, entered the house and proceeded to break open drawers, &c., very systematically: his career was soon put a stop to, and he was secured in about six minutes after he got in. The other one seemed to be on the watch outside, as he kept moving about, but he was also caught. They are the notorious Jim Brown and his confrere J. B. Robinson, who were the parties accused of the Pittsburgh burglaries in the States some time ago. They were taken up for that crime, but escaped through some difficulty in the the direct proof, although every person who knew anything of that affair set them down as the guilty parties. Since their seizure the police have ferretted out some others of the gang, and to all appearance it will be the breaking up of a desperate set of ruffians. Three of them are taken, viz., John Thompson, William Jones and James Ellis; Thompson is said to be one of the formerly notorious Townsend gang. He was sent to Penitentiary some years ago for the robbing of the Hamilton Post Office. Ellis was raised in this city, but on the breaking out of the American war he became a bounty jumper, and now, as Othello's occupation is gone, he has taken up another style of thieving; but it is very likely that his career will have to end in King-ton. The people were all delighted since their apprehension, thinking that the community would be relieved of such a villainous set; but this evening there is quite a damper thrown on their expectations, as some of the beautiful uncertainties of the law came out in the investigation to-day, as some of the witnesses proved that the prisoners were taken a few minutes before nine o'clock at night, and the lawyers make it appear that a burglary cannot be committed before nine at night; so it has to be laid over for further developments, which it is hoped may settle the matter with them, though it will be hard to catch them, for it seems that they were aware of the state of the law on that head, and they think to creep out of it only as a misdemeanor. The police in searching Thompson's house found a set of burglar's tools complete, and in a water tank on the premises some clothes which were proven to have belonged to Brown. There was a burglary committed lately at the tobacco factory of Mr. Scales, Adelaide Street, and the same parties are accused of it—it is thought that a clue is found which will lead to their conviction in that affair. It will be a good thing for the community if they can be sent to Kingston to board at the public expense.

HUMAN REMAINS FOUND.

In the latter part of last week, while some labourers were cleaning out a drain on Dundas Street, at a house lately occupied by a Mr. Murphy (one of whose family has lately become famous in this part of Canada as being mixed up with the Hamilton robberies, brought to light by the detective Armstrong), just a few feet from the back they came upon the head and leg of a human body. After further search the rest of the body was found. It had been inclosed in a box, and must have been some years there. It is supposed that it is the remains of a drover who was missed from the city some five or six years ago, and who had a large sum of money with him when he went away. The Coroners held an inquest to-day, and after a careful sifting of all that could be learned on the subject they have come to the decision that they are the remains of some person unknown, and it is equally unknown how he came to his end or by what means placed where they were found. It is the earnest hope of the people that some clue to the mystery may be found out. Murder very seldom escapes detection, and it is likely that this one may come out yet, with such at present, appearances are against the prospect of such a finale to the bloody deed.

ENGLISH CELEBRITIES.

A large party of the great men of England, in the shape of railway men, bankers, correspondents of the great English papers, &c., have come over to this continent to see with their own eyes some of the great lines of road with which they are connected. I will give you their names, viz., Sir Morton Peto, Baronet, M.P., he is Member of Parliament for Bristol, and Chairman of the London Board of Directors of the Atlantic and Great Western Railroad; Hon. A. Kinnaird, who will represent the town of Perth, in Scotland, in the ensuing Parliament; Senor Leon Sillo, the Parisian banker of the Spanish Government; Mr. Goddard, Manager of the Rock Life Insurance Company; Mr. Sutherdwaite, the well known London broker; Mr. Forbes, General Manager of the London, Chatham and Dover Railroad; Mr. Kensal, manufacturer, of Rochdale; Dr. Stark, physician to Sir Morton Peto; Mr. M. Peto, son of Sir Morton Peto; Mr. Morton Betts, nephew of Sir Morton; Mr. Bevan, Lombard Street, London; Mr. T. W. Kinnaird, son of the Hon. A. Kinnaird, M. P.; Mr. Cassham, a great coal mine proprietor. The rest of the party consists of Messrs. Belcher, merchant, Liverpool; Rixon, banker, Liverpool; Hull, solicitor, Liverpool; Grain, notary, London; Woodman, secretary to Sir Morton Peto: Woods, of the London Times; McDermott, of the Morning Post, and Aewitt, of the Morning Star. Mr. James McHenry, who originated the trip, is a native of Philadelphia, son of Dr. McHenry of literary fame. The party since the arrival in New York on last Thursday has been joined by a good number of American celebrities. Sir Morton Peto and a good number of the party arrived in this city this evening.

MILITARY SCHOOL.

An examination has been going on to-day of some ten members of the first squad for second class certificates, and three for first class. Nine of the former have passed so far, and it is supposed that they and the three first class men will get finished up to-morrow in time to go off to join the Camp of Instruction at Montreal, where all the graduates of the Military Schools of the Province are ordered to assemble on the 16th instant, to go through a course of camp instruction. You have seen by the speech of the Attorney General West that the Toronto School is reported to be the most severe of any in the Province. After the number who will have passed at this examination there will be only about twenty six remaining in the School.

A MAN KILLED AT PRESCOTT.—On Saturday last, about five o'clock, two men, named William Stewart and Jesse Baldy, attacked Alexander Holmes, who keeps a small ginger beer saloon, on the corner of Water and James streets, Prescott, and a fracas ensued which caused the death of Baldy. Stewart threw a four pound weight at Holmes, and Baldy threw a ginger beer bottle at him. Holmes picked up the bottle and struck Baldy on the head with it, from the effect of which blow he died. Holmes is sent to the assizes. The Jury in their verdict state that he struck the blow that killed the dec—

Life on the Kashogawigamog.

No. 2.—ANOTHER PIC-NIC.

On the last day of August, 1865, old Father Kashog saw a sight such as he has never seen before since the white man's rule predominated. In the largest of a chain of lakes studded as above, stands an island of renown, for tradition says it was the head-quarters of Indian Chiefs, from whose shores went forth many a fleet of war-canoes, to the cry of vehement red men maddened by their war whoop. The almost recent growth of trees, its location, and other indications go far to prove that account to be probable. Well, Mr. Editor, this 31st of August here a fleet of pleasure-boats assembled, some bearing five and thirty souls, and so on down to the punt of the would-be-man, the boy of some twelve summers manning a vessel of his own make, and it not twelve square feet in area. The shores of the island are of clean white sand, and by 12 or 1 o'clock they presented quite a busy aspect, as gentlemen and ladies, lads and lasses, and children too, disembarked. The scene was gay—heavy baskets, the spatterings wet, the enkindling fire, the passing and hurriedly re-passing of large pots and kettles, all told of energy and open-heartedness; for in company, socially, heartily, the active asters in this scene intended to enjoy the fruits of their bustling in such a multiplicity of doings.—Inland, some were erecting tables after quite a novel mode; the living trees intruding on space were notched and so formed table-legs in no time of undoubted firmness. Other in concert hid amongst the shades; while others were preparing for that amusement noticed in my last, the swing of new notoriety to your correspondent. But when the good things appeared, what could you guess as being most noticeable: the lady of S. S. Peck, Esq.; of Snowden, brought up a turkey, such a bird for August too, it weighed thirteen pounds; and the lady of S. Eastman, Esq., of Lutterworth (say Minden village), contributed a roasting pig of 12 pounds. Mrs Buck also, of the same, did grandly, with Mrs. Stewart, the lady of C. R. Stewart, Esq., of Haliburton. But why have I named any, when so many played so good a part for self and others' weal. Dinner served and all to the satisfaction of 150, the time for drinking came. And let me tell. This picnic had two things in view, a double interest: pleasure and business. It was to feel out the public mind in regard to the agricultural exhibition in connection with the Dysart, Minden, and Snowden Agricultural Society. Therefore soon after dinner a council was formed of the greater portion of the gentlemen present, the Committee and members having invited all to join in the consultations. S. S. Peck, J. P., Esq., presided, with C. R. Stewart, of the English Company's service, and of Dysart the Company's township, as secretary was on duty. Messrs. C. Austin Reeve of Minden, J. Erskine, W. Erskine, J. Stothart, Adam H. Garrett, J. McKelvey, R. Garrett, S. Eastman, J. P., D. Buck, A. Hartell, &c., &c. Many a blut was thrown out, several additional prizes were decided on, and two new officers were elected, viz. Rev. F. Burt, 1st Vice-Presiden, and Mr. D. Barcourt, senior, as 2nd Vice-President.—The former took the chair ex-officio immediately. Great unanimity prevailed. The council over, the company of the ladies and younger folks was sought and again was a general mingling and neighbour brightened neighbour's face till Tea was announced. Grace was sung and all partook. By this the day was nearing fast away, and to the boats once more was the general rush. All on board, words of hope to meet again passed round. The Rev. F. Burt called for cheers, after a few remarks, to the following a ntiment—"Success to the Dysart, Minden, and Snowden Agricultural Society," which was heartily responded to. C. Austin, Esq., Reeve of Minden, and S. S. Peck, Esq., Reeve of Snowden, also spoke; and C. R. Stewart, Esq also made many flattering remarks in respect of the company then present, of the society, of the resources of the townships represented, and of his hope for the future.—Cheers were given for Good Queen Victoria, and as all boats were put in motion the National Anthem became the parting song. The Haliburton show is to be on the 26th September, instant. The young men and others of Minden, Stanhope, &c., have also made a successful effort to hold an Exhibition; so, the Dysart one over, an Agricultural Show at Minden village is decided on. All hearts beat high for crops are good. F. B.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

DEAR SIR,—The following beautiful Poem is from the pen of Mr. James Haggaton, pastor of and Old School Covenanter Congregation in the State of Ohio. It appeared in a late number of The Old Dissenter, a monthly magazine published in Rimington, Ohio. He is the author of some of the most beautiful poetry of the age, and the "Hymn of the Covenanter" is a fair specimen of his genius and talents. I know of but one thing of its kind that surpasses it in sublimity, and that is Milton's peerless sonnet, beginning

"Avenge, O Lord! thy slaughtered saints."

What a crowd of recollections, Mr. Editor, spring up in the memory of the reader of Scottish Church History, as the majestic mind of the author carries him through this beautiful piece of poetry. I feel as if I was looking in upon an assemblage of Covenanters, in a wild and desolate glen, to which they had fled from the murderous assaults of Graham, of Clavershouse. The flash struggles with the spirit, in view of the merciless slaughter to which Scotland's heroes were exposed. Mr. H. seems to have caught the very spirit of the ancient Covenanters, and he has succeeded where Walter Scott failed. I do not envy the man who can read this production without emotion.

I am, Mr. Editor, yours,

C. S. D.

Hark! plaided watchman of the hill,
What of the night?—What of the night?
The winds are low, the woods are still,
The countless stars are sparkling bright;
From out this heathery mossland glen,
Hushe any moor fowl only trod,
We raise our hymn, unmixed of men.
To Thee—an omnipresent God!

Jehovah! though no signs appear,
Through earth our aimless path to lead,
We know we feel thee ever near,
A present help in time of need.
Near as when passing on the way,
Forever in thy people's sight,
A pillared wreath of smoke by day,
Which turned to fiery flame at night.

Whence came the sun in his forth leap?
From Thee awoke the warning cock?
Out from your nests, O fowls! Lo!
The heathens warfare girds them round.
Sons of the faithful! up—awake!
The lamb must of the wolf beware:
For falcon on the dove he prey:
The fowler spreads his cunning snare!

Degenerate Scotland! days have been,
Thy soil where only freemen trod,
When mountain, crag, and valley green
Poured forth the lion proclaim to God!
The fire which liberty imparts
Refulgent in each patriot eye,
And graven on a nation's hearts
The Word—for which we stand or die.

Unholy change! the sconrge's chair
Is now the seat of those that rule,
Fetters and bonds and death the share
Of all except the tyrant's tool.
That fate in which our fathers trembled
And had their life for which they died.
That peerless birthdom they bequeathed
Their sons, our supreme foes deride.

So we have left our homes behind,
And we have toiled on the sweet,
And we in solemn league have joined
Yea! covenanted with the Lord.
Never to seek our homes again,
Never to give the sword its swath,
Until our rights or faith remain
Unfettered as the air we breath!

O Thou who rulest above the sky,
Begirt about with starry thrones,
Cast from the heavens of heavens thine eye
Down on our wives and little ones.
From hallelujahs surging round
Or for a moment, turn thy ear,
The widow's pleadings on the ground,
The famished orphan's cries to hear!

And thou wilt hear! it cannot be
That thou wilt let the wrong be bound.
When from their nest they cry to thee.
And in due season set them free!
It cannot be that thou wilt weave
The lily such superb array,
And yet neglect motherhood leave
Thy children as if less than they!

We have no hearth—the spoiler he
In blackness where they brightly shone.
We have no home—the moorland sky
Our covering, earth our couch alone.
We have no heritage—deprived
Of those we call our own on earth.
Our hearts are sealed: we seek in heaven
For heritage, and home, and hearth.

O Salem, city of the saint
And holy men made perfect! we
Pant for thy gates, our spirits faint
Thy glorious golden streets to see.
To catch the rapture that inspires
The ransomed and redeemed by grace.
To listen to the seraph's lyres,
And greet the angels face to face.

Father in heaven! we turn not back,
Though brave and thorns choke up the path.
Neither the texture of the rack
Was trod the trampeon of thy wrath.
Let Dundee come, let torrents shower,
Let whirlwinds roars the boiling sea:
What is the turmoil of an hour
To an eternal calm with thee!

OUR EXPORTS.

THE Commercial year of Customs, Mr. Bouchette just issued a summary statement, showing the value of the principal articles of Canadian product and manufacture exports for the fiscal year ending 30th June last. Documents of this kind are generally of a "dry" character, and although having a large circulation, are seldom or never read by the great majority of the people. The present report, however, is worthy of attention. It derives its chief interest at the present time from the fact that it contains a list of our Exports to the United States, with their values; and in view of the anticipated abrogation of the Reciprocity Treaty, the figures cannot fail to be interesting.

From this statement we learn that the produce of our Mines exported for the year ending 30th June last amounted, in round numbers, to $575,000. Of this there were exports to—

Great Britain	$397,000
British Colonies	661
United States	196,649
Germany	5,790
Other foreign countries	13,168

There is also a slight decrease in the products of our Fisheries—the amount for this year being $764,000, as compared with $770,520 in '64. This year's products were divided among the different countries in the following proportions:—

Great Britain	$93,000
British Colonies	107,000
United States	89,000
Other countries	474,000

The most important of our Exports are this year Lumber and Timber. The total amount exported represented in value the sum of fourteen and a quarter million dollars, showing a slight increase on the previous years—the value of these articles

BALSAM OF WILD CHERRY IN CANADA.

The following testimony from a well known and highly respected Merchant of Prescott, is corroborative of the general approval given to Dr. WISTAR'S BALSAM OF WILD CHERRY:

PRESCOTT, C. W., Dec. 8th, 1859.

Messrs. S. W. Fowle & Co., Boston.

Gentlemen: —

Being solicited by your Travelling Agent, for an expression of opinion of Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry, I with pleasure assert that it is, in my belief, the best remedy before the public for coughs and pulmonary complaints.

Having tested the article with myself and family, in case of severe coughs and colds, for years, with uniform and unexceptionable success, I unhesitatingly recommend it with full confidence in its merits.

Yours truly,

ALFRED HOOKER.

To Mrs. Rose Heppin Jones.

Concerning Her Dislike of Routine and Her Desire for change and Amusement.

There are some women in the world and you seem to be one of them—who never heartily, and with devoted purpose, enter upon the work of life. You do what you are compelled to do by circumstances. If circumstances should compel you to do nothing, you would do nothing. All work is an interference with your favorite pursuits, or your mode of spending time. Nothing would be more agreeable to you than to have the privileges of going and gadding, and seeking for fresh amusements all your life. You certainly must recognize a difference between yourself and many estimable women who, from choice, have undertaken a life long task to which they cheerfully and systematically devote their powers. They keep their houses, and understand the minutest affairs connected with them. They devote themselves to the right training, in body, mind and morals, of the little ones born of them. In society, they are the reliable ones—the women of character and consideration. They are women who use time for good ends, outside of themselves, and who take delight in action—in the useful employment of their powers. You must, I repeat, recognize a difference between yourself and these women. They have their life in exertion; you have yours in amusement. You exercise no power, but find your sweetest satisfaction in the varied impressions that are made upon your sensibilities.

There is another class of women from whom you must find yourself differing very appreciably. I allude to those whose greatest delight is in opportunities for culture. If you read a book, you read it for the same purpose that a child reads. You read only for amusement. You never read for instruction. The idea of taking up a book for purposes of study, is one that never occurs to you; and you have no delight in a book that taxes your mind. Whatever you read must amuse you—interest you—absorb you—or you lay it down and call it stupid. There is no culture in such reading as this there is only dissipation. You read a book for the same purpose that you attend a theatre, or engage in a frolic—for the simple purpose of having your emotional nature excited, and your sensibilities played upon. You never seek for mental nourishment or mental exercise anywhere. Thus, though you read a great deal, and really enjoy some works that are enjoyable by sensible people, you gain nothing. You read for momentary excitement, and win nothing of permanent use. You cannot weigh a book. You cannot even talk about a book, further than to say, that you like it or dislike it. The philosophy or the lesson of a novel or a poem is never grasped by you; and every book you read is to you just what Mother Goose's Melodies are to the child, and no more.

You must also perceive a difference between yourself and those who love society for society's sake. There are many women who love society because of the mental stimulus it brings them—because, in the presence of intelligent and sprightly men and women, they feel themselves brightened and strengthened, and because they find in such society the most grateful opportunity to act upon others. They are talking people who think before talking, and who think while they talk. I have noticed that while you are exceedingly fond of society, you always shun these people. You can talk nonsense, after a fashion, but your special delight is in hearing other people talk nonsense; and the man or woman in society who says the drollest things, and "runs on" in the wildest way, and does the most to amuse you, and to relieve you from the necessity of either thinking or talking, is the one who monopolizes your attention. If you have any special horror, it attaches to being cornered with a sensible man or woman, and being expected to talk sense with them.

You see, therefore, that you do not go into society with anything in your hand to pay for that what you receive, except your agreeable person, your willing ears, and your ready and complimentary laugh. These make you popular enough; but are you not just a little ashamed to think that your love of society would be destroyed if could find in society none but those who have drains and a disposition to use them in sensible talk? Are you not ashamed that all social circles are stupid to you in the degree that they are brilliant to the wise, and the intellectual, and to the ready witted? Are you not ashamed that the clever buffoon of a company interests you most, and helps you most to what you call a "good time?"

You must also perceive that you are very different from those women to whom home is the sweetest spot on the earth. I know many women who have become so much enamoured of home that they will never leave it willingly. They never go into society without a sense of sacrifice. They cling to home as if they had grown to it—as if every tendril of their heart-life had wound itself around its pleasant things, and could only be dislocated by violence.—This love of home and its self confinement to its walls and its duties may become, and often does become, an intensely morbid passion of the soul—deprecated as an unhealthy love of change—but you cannot but feel that a supreme love of home and devotion to its duties are very lively, and that the best women you know entertain this love and this devotion far beyond yourself.

Your home is not your refuge, so much as the home of your neighbor is. When you wish to be happy—when you feel the need of some soothing and comforting influence—you do not draw the curtains of your home about you, and draw the loved ones of home closer to your heart, but you rush to the house of your neighbor that you may forget your troubles in the diversions of lively society. Your life is not at home. Home is only your boarding place; and if there were no such thing as "visiting" to be done, you would feel life to be shorn of most of its attraction. In short, you are never so much at home as you are when you are not at home. You are affected by a chronic mental uneasiness which prevents you from remaining long in any place—especially in any place to which a duty holds you.

I have thus endeavored to reveal you to yourself, by calling your attention to the contrast which you—consciously, I must believe—present to four different classes of women worthy to be respected and loved, namely: to those who by definite purpose, have devoted themselves to a life of active duty at home and in society; to those whose satisfactions are found in culture and its opportunities; to those who love society for the mental stimulus and strength it imparts, and to those who are supremely in love with home and its quiet enjoyments. To one of these four classes, or to sundry or all of them combined, you must know that the best women of this world belong; and I believe that you have sense enough to feel, that you are not of this number.—Timothy Titcomb's Letters to the Joneses.

Button-hole, Cording, Braiding and Embroidering

SEWING MACHINE COMPANY,

627 BROADWAY, NEW-YORK.

THE BUTTON HOLE made by this entirely simple and novel machine, are not only equal to the best hand-made in the pearl or right side, but greatly surpassing them in beauty on the wrong side, which is formed by a beautiful braid stitch, made by an extra stitch, which no hand made button-hole possesses; thereby imparting to the same a much greater strength, which renders cording or barring altogether unnecessary.

One Needle and Two Threads are only Used.

Unlike other Sewing Machines it manufactures its own Braid and Cord.

The best Merchant Tailors freely admit that its beauty, finish and strength cannot be attained by the most skilful hand.

Simplicity is one of its great merits, therefore not liable to get out of order, and it can be worked with ease by any young lady, who will, after a few days' experience, make from 1,000 to 1,200 perfect button-holes in one day.

This is the only machine produced that will throw a stitch over the edge, so as to bind and cover it in a manner indispensible for Button-holes, Cording and Braiding, each of which can be done with colored, shaded or chine silks, and produce a fabrique of varied colors unexcelled for beauty and taste.

Ladies at home, Dress, Mantilla and Cloak makers, Shoemakers, Tailors, Hatters, Bookbinders, Saddlers, &c, &c, it is indispensable; it is also admitted to be of great value, to other branches as it Braids, Embroiders, and Cords plain and fancy on all kinds of Cloths, Cassimers, Linen, Velvet Leather, &c., &c.

Instructions and Needles accompany each Machine.

Every Machine is Warranted for Twelve Months.

Thinning Fruit.

Few owners of fruit trees will be apt to consider any advice under this head as applicable the present season, the crop being mostly a very light one. There are some trees, however, on which the fruit might be thinned to much advantage. Many trees are allowed to bear in ordinary seasons, from four to six times as many specimens as accords with their full and perfect development. The fruit is consequently small and deficient in flavor. This is the very year to learn a lesson on the subject. If the trees bear but few specimens comparatively, take off all the scabby, wormy and defective ones, which will be of no value in any event, and the crop which is left, having plenty of room, will show a size, beauty and perfection that can not fail to convince cultivators of the advantage of thinning. We have heard a skilful orchardist assert that by taking off two-thirds of his peaches, the remainder increased so much in size as to give the same number of bushels as without thinning, while their improved appearance and quality enabled him to realize triple the price.

It is an easy task to thin out the fruit of an orchard, and is a positive saving of labor—inasmuch as it is easier to remove the fruit when it is small, and requires no care in picking and handling, than to do it when the specimens become full-sized at maturity. For example, if a tree bears at first three thousand when they may all be thrown into a single basket, than to pick the same two thousand afterwards with all the care requiredin careful handling to prevent bursting. One great advantage in gathering large, fine specimens, over small and imperfect ones, is the great rapidity with which they may be taken from the tree.—Country Gentleman.

After-Management of a Grafted Apple Orchard.

Judging from the many inquiries I have received, and from the numerous grafted orchards I have seen, I am apt to think that the subject of after management of a grafted orchard is not well understood, and as the practice of grafting orchards is becoming more general, where the fruit from any cause becomes unsatisfactory, I will go on to say, that my custom is not to wait till the trees get large, but as soon as I get fruit from a variety for a sufficient length of time to become satisfied, I commence the work at once, and graft all of that variety, except a specimen tree or two—putting in two scions in each stock grafted. On or before the first of July I visit my grafted trees, and if both scions are growing, which will generally be the case, if the work is well done, I pull out the weakest one, or the one least needed in shaping the top of the tree, rub off all sprouts, (and there will be plenty,) and enough of the limbs to give plenty of room, light and air, so that the grafts may make a good healthy growth. This I continue through the season as time and opportunity offers, sometimes pinching the ends of the graft if growing too rapidly. The following year cut one half or more of all the old wood remaining—cut back the grafts if the growth is too great, which is rarely the case, and see that the tree is well balanced, especially not too heavy on the east side. If there have been any failures and more grafts are needed, put them in. If too many, cut them out and see that plenty of room, air and light is given again, through the growing season. The third year cut out all the balance of the old wood, and the job is finished except keeping the sprouts rubbed off, and sometimes stopping the grafts by pinching as before, to make them stocky. Trees thus managed make as fine an orchard as root grafted trees, and frequently much finer."

TRAINING CATTLE TO JUMP.—A Western farmer says he makes it a rule that whenever cattle are made to pass a fence, whether through bars or "slipgap," to leave one rail for them to pass under. This gives them a downward tendency, and lessens their inclination to jump or look upwards, as they are sure to do when a lazy attendant throws down a part of the rails, and makes them vault the rest. Cattle may be learned to go over any fence, by the careful training they often get for this end, performed as follows: First starve them, or give them poor feed, which will make them light and restless. As soon as they go over the lowest part of the fence after better provender, make them jump back again, and put on one more rail, saying, "I guess that will keep 'em out." Next day, (as of course they will be in mischief again,) repeat the process, adding another rail; in a short time they will take care of themselves, and harvest the crops without charge.—Tucker's Rural Affairs.

GROWING TIMBER.—"I want to tell my story, which I know to be true and perfectly correct, as all the parties are to me well known and of unimpeachable veracity. The scene is in Berkshire county, Mass. A boy reaped wheat in a field—that boy grew to be a man, and lived to the ripe old age of 82 years. Before he died, he sat in his chair and saw a neighbour of his from day today drawing saw logs to the mill. This man drew, had naved, and sold 152 000 feet of lumber, and all from 3½ acres of ground upon which the old man when a boy had reaped wheat. The timber was mostly pine, some oak. I believe pine will grow as fast here as that."—HAWK EYE, in Country Gentleman.

GRAIN that has been injured and become musty, may be restored to nearly its original sweetness by pouring boiling water over it, and permitting it to stand till cool. The scum which arises to the surface of the liquid during the process of purification should be carefully removed. Unless the gluten of the grain has become chemically affected—which is rarely found to be the case, except in very old grain—every trace of mustiness will be removed, and the grain rendered fit for use.—N. E. Farmer.

GALLS ON HORSES.—(R. W.) We seldom do anything except to wash the shoulders repeatedly with cold water, and put the collar so as to ease the sore spot. If the skin is broken, a little mutton tallow should be applied to keep the air from the sore. It is said to be a good plan to keep a little, very fine, white lead in a paper in your pocket, and when you stop your team, several times during the day, dust a little on the galled places. White lead and milk applied several times a day with a gentle, rubbing, is said to be excellent.

A CANDIDATE for a Scotch burgh, when canvassing, did his best to securing the good grace of the electors wives. In one house he kissed the guidewife on the cheek, slipping at the same time a few guineas into the hand which had modestly been extended to protect her face. Delighted with the sight of the yellow pieces the matron enthusiastically called to the candidate, as he withdrew, "Kiss my dochter, too, sir."

See what the most popular and widely circulated periodicals say of our Establishment:

From the "Dispatch" of February 25, 1865.

We take pleasure in calling the attention of our readers to the announcement of Messrs. Devaugh & Co.'s Great Sale of Jewelry, Silver Ware, and Fancy Goods, in our advertising columns. We are personally acquainted with the members of this firm and know them to be gentlemen of sterling worth and integrity. Their stock of goods, for variety and extent, we have scarcely seen paralleled.

From the "Mirror of Fashion," March 1, 1865.

Messrs. Devaugh & Co.'s Great Sale of Jewelry, etc., opened on the 15th ult., and we venture to say that no finer display of goods was ever exhibited by any establishment in this city. The ladies thronged their bazaar almost to suffocation, although the streets were rendered nearly impassable by the melted snow and slush. We predict for them a wonderful success.

From the "Ledger," February 28, 1865.

Our lady friends should visit the extensive establishment of Messrs. Devaugh & Co., No. 15 Maiden Lane, if they wish to indulge themselves with a sight which they will long remember. Such a profusion of elegant Watches, Chains, Rings, Earrings, and, in short, of Jewelry of every name, kind and description, we never before witnessed. Their silver and plated ware is superb and almost casts into the shade the other splendid establishments which have long been the boast of our city. It is estimated that their stock is worth not less than one million of dollars.

PIANO-FORTES

DRIGGS' NEW PATENT.

ARE THE ONLY INSTRUMETS constructed on a truly scientific principle. That have greater strength, and will remain longer in tune than any other Piano. The construction is simple and natural, all the extraneous lumber in the body of the instrument is dispensed with; the sound boards are merely two arched planks of thin wood, like the front and back of a violin; the strings are attached to a strong iron frame, which is separate and entirely independent of the case, thereby dispensing with the old harp form of stringing by substituting straight bridges, preserving at the same time The Over Strung Bass, of which Mr Driggs is the inventor. By these improvements we gain much more vibratory power, at the same time preserving all its purity and richness of tone.

They have received the highest testimonials from the Press, and all the principal artists in the country, among which are:

Harry Sanderson,	L. M. Gottschalk,
Max Maretzek,	S. Thalberg,
Theodore Eisfeld,	Wm Mason,
Herman Wollenhaupt,	A Barili.
Francis H. Brown,	M. Strackosch,
Wm. Henry Fry,	Charles Fradel.

Mr. SIGESMUND THALBERG, the great pianist, says:—I have examined your new Piano-fortes and I cordially approve of its system of construction. Its principle, by which great increase of vibratory power is obtained, being very simple and perfectly philosophical. The tone is grand and noble; it has great capacity for sustaining the sound or singing, and its volume of tone or power I have never heard excelled in depth, purity and sympathetic sweetness.

Wm. HENRY FRY, late musical critic of the N. Y. Tribune says:—I have examined your newly invented Piano-Fortes. They merit all the praise given to them by Messrs. Thalberg, Gottschalk, Strackosch, Mason and others. As regards the structure, they are original and philosophical; in purity, volume, and continuity of tone; in vocal versimilitude, that crowning excelence which enables the pianists to "sing" on the instrument. Your Pianos deserve the highest rank. Your invention, in my opinion, is destined to work radical changes in the manufacture of Pianos throughout the world.

From the N. Y. Herald, Sept. 5.—Upon a careful examination of Dennis Piano-Forte, we find the results obtained are a very fine singing tone, great purity and brilliancy throughout the entire instrument, not often found in Pianos constructed upon the old plan.

The N. Y. Times, July 12, says:—We have now an instrument without an equal. It can sing with a smoothe delicacy, perfectly unattainable on any other instrument; an ordinary player obtains with no exertion, the fullness of a Grand Piano Forte and they must speedily supercede the old styles.

GENTLEMEN:—Having thoroughly examined and tested the Piano-Fortes invented and patented by Mr S. R. Driggs, I am of the opinion that the tone resulting from his improvements, as exhibited in the instruments under examination, in point of richness, depth and brilliancy, equals that of the best Grand Piano-Fortes, and excells them in pure, musical and actual tone power thus aproximating closer to what I consider perfection in the instrument than has yet been achieved by any other system of manufacture.

Yours respectfully,
L. M. GOTTSCHALK.

ARE YOU IN AGONY?

A WELL SPRING OF HOPE FOR ALL!

CAN BE FOUND IN

Holloway's Pills.

Be of Good Cheer! The Sinking may be Saved!

BY THE USE OF

Holloway's Ointment.

THE history of these great Remedies is the most wonderful medical revelation that the world has ever known. It establishes the all important fact that WHEREVER, and in WHATEVER SHAPE internal diseases exists, the disinfecting, searching and healing properties of the Pills are fully equal to its subjection and cure, and that, with the Ointment, they are

The Great Ambassadors of Health to all Mankind.

This is not a history written by one man, or even derived from the experiences of one nation. It consists of a compilation of testimonials from the sick of every country—an unimpeachable record, the like of which has never been adduced in favor of any discovery or invention since time began.

These Mighty Healers, World Known and World Tried are a Boon to the Sick

The want of a sterling medicinal to meet the ills and necessities of the suffering portion of humanity, and one entirely free from mineral and other deleterious particles, was severely felt till this all powerful medicine was ushered into the world; HOLLOWAY'S INVALUABLE PILLS have become the HOUSEHOLD REMEDY of all nations. Their attribute is to PREVENT as well as to CURE: they attack the RADIX OR ROOT of the complaint, and thus, by removing the hidden cause of disease, re-invigorate and restore the drooping energies of the system, assisting nature in her task of VITAL and FUNCTIONARY REFORMATION.

Disorders of the Stomach

Are the sources of the deadliest maladies. Their effect is to vitiate all the fluids of the body, and to send a poisoned stream through all the channels of circulation. Now, what is the operation of the Pills? They cleanse the bowels, regulate the liver, bring the relaxed or irritated stomach into a natural condition, and, acting through the secretive organs UPON THE BLOOD ITSELF, change the state of the system from sickness to health, by exercising a simultaneous and wholesome effect upon all its parts and functions.

Woman in all her Difficulties

Is invited to test the regulating and restorative powers of this harmless but effective preparation. At the two epochs of life in which the female system undergoes the most important and critical changes, the Pills will prove a positive safeguard against evil consequences. They are also confidently recommended as a specific in every disorder to which females are exclusively subject.

Be it Understood,

That the above statements can at all times be verified by the written testimony (extending through a quarter of a century) of tens of thousands of unimpeachable witnesses.

Bilious Maladies, &c., &c.

In whatever form disease attacks the liver, it is repelled and exterminated by this searching, painless, and irresistable curative. Bilious remittente, bilious purging, and all the ordinary disorders of the organ, indicated by pain in the right side and between the shoulders, yellowness of the whites of the eyes, weakness and debility, &c., are relieved and removed by the remedy, with a celerity which astonishes the sufferers and their friends. Let the sick whom the faculty have abandoned, resort with confidence to this powerful anti-bilious agent, and a restoration to health and activity will be the unvarying result.

Dyspepsia, Diarrhœa, Weakness, &c. &c.

The terrible bodily and mental pangs which characterise Dyspepsia are at once mitigated by the Pills. Diarrhœa, const pation, headache, physical prostration, nervous tremors, hot flushes, spasms, affections of the kidneys, hemorrhoids or piles, and, in fact, all internal complaints, from whatever cause arising, give way before the salutary influence of this extraordinary remedy. As a specific for dyspepsia, and the disorders connected with it, or growing out of it, the Pills are always to be relied on when every other medicine and mode of treatment has utterly failed.

Holloway's Pills are the best Remedy known for the following diseases:

Asthma,	Headaches,
Bowel Complaints,	Indigestion,
Coughs,	Influenza,
Colds,	Inflamation,
Chest Diseases,	Inward Weakness,
Contiveness,	Liver Complaints,
Dyspepsia,	Lowness of Spirits,
Diarrhœa,	Piles,
Dropsy,	Stone and Gravel,
Debility,	Secondary Symptoms,
Fever and Ague,	Vernal Affections,
Female Complaints,	Worms of all kinds.

CAUTION.

If the readers of this "notice" cannot get a box of Pills or Ointment from the drug store in his place, let him write to me, enclosing the amount, and I will mail a box free of expense. Many dealers will not keep my medicines on hand because they cannot make as much profit as on other persons' make.

None are genuine unless the words "Holloway New York and London," are discernible as a Water Mark in every leaf of the book of directions around each box, the same may be plainly seen by holding the leaf to the light. A handsome reward will be given to any one rendering such information as may lead to the detection of any party or parties counterfeiting the medicines or vending the same knowing them to be spurious.

 Sold at the manufactory of Professor HOLLOWAY, 80 Maiden Lane, New York, and by all respectable Druggists and Dealers in Medicine throughout the United States and the civilized world, in boxes, at 25 cents, 88 cents, and $1 40 each.

ISLE OF BEAUTY.

Shades of evening close not o'er us,
Leave our lonely bark awhile;
Morn, alas! will not restore us
Yonder dim and distant isle;
Still my fancy can discover
Sunny spots where friends may dwell;
Darker shadows round us hover—
Isle of beauty, fare thee well.

'Tis the hour when happy faces
Smile around the taper ligh;
Who will fill your vacant places?
Who will sing our song to-night?
Through the mists that float above us,
Faintly sounds the vesper bell,
Like the voice of those that love us,
Breathing fondly, fare thee well.

When the waves are round me breaking,
As I pace the deck alone,
And my eye in vain is seeking
Some green leaf to rest upon;
What would I not give to wander
Where my old companions dwell;
Absence makes the heart grow fonder—
Isle of beauty, fare thee well.

"FAITHFUL AND TRUE."

A TALE IN THREE PARTS.

By the Author "Grasp your Nettle."

PART II.

Mr. Hunter had come to the Hall meaning to stay to dinner. Things had come to a crisis in his heart, and the sooner the mountain of suspense was smoothed down to the level of certainty, the better. He never seriously contemplated that this level might land him in the uncomfortable swamp of rejection. He was too proud for that—had too high a top on his head, as he used to say, and held his own material advantages too dearly.

The retired iron merchant was by no means a sentimentalist, and had no very romantic ideas of love-making. With him it was a business pretty much the same as other businesses, to be got through best when undertaken most methodically, and with least fuss or disguise. He had no notion of hiding away in corners with the girl he wished to make his wife, and there essaying his arts of persuasion unassisted; his wooing, like his iron trade, must be done in the face of day, and with the world and the family for witness. In accordance with which system, he opened his brief so soon as the dinner was at an end and the servants had withdrawn; and there, once again, before father, sister, and brother-in-law, asked Georgie Fenton solemnly, 'if she would make an honest man who loved her, happy, and consent to be his wife?'

Imagine a girl of twenty receiving an offer of marriage in a well-lighted dining-room, over the wine and walnuts, and in presence of all her family elders! It would have been painful and embarrassing at any time, and under any circumstance of either indifference or love—but to-day!—the pain and embarrassment were as nothing compared with the disgust. With Hyperion Roger in her heart, poor Mr. Hunter was nothing better than a satyr, and a very ugly one, to Georgie Fenton.

'You say you will not, and you really mean it?' he asked, as much in astonishment as sadness when Georgie had stammered out her refusal; for he never could understand why she, whose fortune would be a mere song when her father died—as he had good reason to know—could not see her interests more clearly, and accept what was undeniably the best marriage in the country. 'What is there against me, Miss Fenton? Tell me frankly; why do you dislike me so much?'

'There is nothing against you, and I do not dislike you,' said Georgie in a low voice. 'But finding fault and marrying are two separate things; and though I do not dislike you as a friend, yet I may not wish to marry you, all the same.'

'You might do worse, child,' put in the father, to whom Mr. Hunter mutely appealed.

'Absurd! ridiculous! giving yourself such airs!' cried Mrs. St. John. 'What can you be dreaming of, you silly girl, to refuse so good an offer, and so kind a man?'

'Do as your sister says,' said Mr. St. John, peeling an orange. He always played chorus to his wife's monologues, and found that a pleasanter office than being in opposition: which he had once tried but never repeated.

'You ask what is impossible,' said Georgie, looking up and speaking more boldly than was usual with her, a little desperately, too, as if at bay. 'Can any of you advise me to marry a man I do not love, because he is kindhearted and has money? Is that marriage?' with a scornful emphasis on the word.

'Why, what else is it?' exclaimed Mr. Hunter, pushing his grizzled hair straight off his forehead, and looking bewildered.

'There is something behind all this,' cried Mrs. St. John, very wrathfully; 'you would not be so excessively reined and particular and all that, if you had no other feeling!'

'And if I have?' said Georgie, with her face all a-flame.

'Then you ought to be ashamed of yourself, Miss!' sneered Mrs. St. John.

'Why more ashamed of myself than you were of yourself, when you married Mr. St. John and said that you loved him?' retorted Georgie.

'If you are going to be impudent, I shall leave the room,' said sister Carry, in a rage.

'Mrs. St. John! now don't pray! Mrs John!' exclaimed Mr. Hunter annoyed at the turn things had taken, and quite understanding that little Georgie was no the kind of person to be driven save by himself. 'Leave Miss Fenton time for reflection, and I am sure she will see her duty better; and do as I and all her friends desire. She must see that it is her duty: she only wants time.'

'No! no! Mr. Hunter!' cried Georgie. 'I have had time! This is not the first time you have—— done me this honour,' she added, fetching herself up with some difficulty after a pause: it is so hard to be polite when one is disgusted?' 'and indeed, Mr. Hunter, if you have any real kindness for me it will be the last. It is very, very distressing to me: of course it is!' she said; and then breaking down entirely, and with no further hope of manful fight in her, she went over to where her father sat, and, kneeling down by him, laid her head on his knees and took refuge in the womanly sanctuary of tears. 'Papa!' she sobbed. 'do not let them tease me so! Take my part, papa, and do not let them make me so unhappy.'

'I think she must have her own way, Hunter,' said vacillating old papa, smoothing her hair. 'You are not the man to want a forced wife.' (He was though: he wanted the fulfilment of his will as much as of his love, and only objected to driving when he did not hold the whip, and when he saw the little creature was turning down all manner of streets' where she had no business to go, by the clumsy goadings of others.) 'Let the question rest for the present. She is very young,' apologetically; 'and though you know that I would like it better than anything that could be proposed, still, if she don't take it in that light you had better leave her alone.'

'Thank you, dearest, best papa!' cried Georgie, taking his hands and kissing them; 'you are my own dear, dear papa, and I love you so much!'

"How can you be so weak, papa?' cried Mrs. St. John, dashing up from her seat and nearly upsetting a decanter, 'you know what all this encourages; and yet you condescend to act as advocate to a penniless adventurer by giving way to her fancy like this. Do you want her to marry a beggar—a mere nobody, after all? Do you want her to marry Roger Lewin? I dare say she will say yes, and thank you fast enough then!'

My dear,' said papa, very angrily, 'wash your linen at home; you need not publish your sister's indiscretions.'

But the 'great word' had been launched and Mr. Hunter knew now the reason of his otherwise inexplicable fate. The whole scene of the dog-cart and the pic-nic flashed across him, and he wondered at his past blindness. Like most masters over young men, Mr. Hunter had a profound contempt for all underlings. It was not the personal [illegible] from the vantage ground of pedigree on the muddier multitude below; but the contempt of the successful man who had made himself, and who knew no reason why all men should not make themselves as he had done. It was the doctrine of self-help run into agressiveness, success rampant over worth.—Indeed there was no worth in his eyes where there was not success; and the want of money was with him synonymous with the want of both gift and virtues. 'No man who is poor can be worth his salt either intellectually or morally,' he used to say; 'and those who fail never deserve to succeed.' It is to be presumed that he did rank failure in love as of the number of a man's deservings.

With these principles, then, it can easily be understood what he felt when he heard that he had a rival, and a successful one—for so he argued from Mrs. St. John's manner—in a mere copying clerk; (he laughed at the title of secretary as a silly euphuism established for pride); a young fellow not making a hundred a year, under the orders of a testy old fool like Mr. Fenton; a mere upper servant in the house, not higher than the governess or the tutor, and scarcely above the favourite lady's maid, or the confidential man. A copying clerk to be preferred to him. Samuel Harmer Hunter, owning the largest property and the longest purse for twenty miles around! The only thing that could have made him really angry with Georgia Fenton, or that could have induced him to withdraw his suit, was the knowledge of the disgrace with which she voluntarily covered herself, and the degradation which she had wilfully chosen. She might as well have professed an attachment for the groom as for a young man living on the unassisted work of his own hands, and making a hundred a year for income—not more.

'It is a most fortunate discovery' he said, and he could not have looked more solemn whatever he had discovered, 'and if you please, Mrs. St. John, we will say no more about it. No talking can make it better, and too much will be sure to make it worse. I am sorry, Miss Georgia, very sorry; I had hoped better things of you; but let all that pass now; dreams must come to an end some time—the sooner the better, perhaps.'

'See what your wicked folly has done!' cried sister Carry, almost crying with anger. 'lost us the best friend we have ever had.'

'Ah, that's true! I did not think of that,' said papa uneasily, taking his hand off his daughter's head, and glancing up at Mr. Hunter. But he, balancing his dessert-knife over his finger, mechanically adjusting the pivot, neither heard nor saw; it was only later in the evening that the recollection dawned on him that Mr. Fenton owed him a large sum of money; and the St John's, too, had managed to negotiate a pretty little loan on their own account. As he thought of this, his face grew dark and his heart hardened.

'You have one comfort to take to bed with you,' said Mrs. St. John, as they parted for the night, 'you have ruined your father and me, and made yourself a beggar.'

'I am very sorry,' said Georgia, gently, 'but I cannot sell myself to put things straight. I will work for papa and myself, and do all I can honestly; but I cannot marry a man I do not care for, just because papa owes him money; nor,' said little Georgie, lifting up her eyes and speaking steadily in spite of her sister's angry glance, 'do I think it right to fail a man I do love, and loves me and trusts to me.

Saying which she vanished into her own corridor, and Mrs. St. John was left to digest this bitter pill of her young sister's independence and confession as she best could.

'Don't tell me, St. John,' she said to that much enduring man, when the confidence of night was between them, 'she corresponds with him somehow. Don't I know what girls are made of? not one in a thousand has the strength or courage to trust what they don't see, and certainly not one in a thousand would believe a man constant unless he told them so a dozen times a week; and a man ever so far away, too. Don't tell me, indeed, that young scoundrel writes to her somehow.

'Perhaps so, Carry,' said Mr. St. John, meekly, 'you ought to know best.'

'I should think so!' said Carry, snorting. 'But what shall we do, St. John, if Mr. Hunter takes against us, as he most likely will? We are all in his power, you know; papa, and you and I—what shall we do? He is a dangerous enemy, that I can tell you!'

'We must do the best we can, Carry.'

'The best we can! That is just like you, St. John! always some stupid common place that helps no one! Of course we must do the best we can, no one doubts that, but what is the best, you stupid fellow?'

'We must wait and see, my dear.'

'But I won't wait and see!' cried irascible Mrs. St. John, who wanted everything settled now before midnight.

'I am afraid you will be obliged, my dear,' said Mr. St. John, sleepily: then turning on his side he grumbled out, 'Oh! bother, Carry! don't worry any longer, and do for heaven's sake, go to sleep and hold your tongue,' goaded by irresistible drowsiness to this most unusual act of self-assertion.

'What a brute you are, St. John!' muttered his wife; 'you deserve to be ruined. But St. John was snoring, and her anger might have been left unsaid.

'What can you be going out for!' cried Mrs. St. John, the next day, when little Georgie in hat and coat and uncompromising balmorals, prepared to set out into the snow with as much zeal and courage as Miss Louisa Globb herself.

'I have been in the house so long,' returned Georgie, evasively; 'and I am going to the village.'

'Why?'

'For a walk,' replied Georgie steadily.

'Stuff! you have some other reason, I know,' said her sister in her highest key.

'You had better find out what it is, then,' answered Georgie walking out of the room, and out of the house almost at the same moment.

'She has gone to post a letter!' said Mrs. St. John, aloud. 'And for once she was right; suspicion flooding the mind at times with a wonderful amount of clairvoyance. 'But I will take care that she has none in return. How the little minx can have learned his address I do not know: there has been no letter for her—that I can swear to!'

And then she stopped, and she thought of yesterday, and her sister's long absence, and then—had her strange conference with Charley Dunn any meaning in it?—any occult connection with this disgraceful matter? The more she pondered the more she suspected, and the more she floundered, seeing but dimly.

She watched the postbag vigilantly after this, on the time-honoured principle of the steed and the stable-door; and felt more than ever sure that something was going on, unknown to her, by the very quietness and serenity of her sister. She never thought of 'Faithful and True,' in the 'Times;' or noticed that Monday was a specially bright day with Georgie, or that Tuesday or Wednesday—unless, indeed, the weather was too bad for even gentlemen in duck-shooting boots, or the Miss Globbs—she invariably walked to the village, where she posted a certain letter with her own hands. This last fact, indeed, she could not have known by any method short of bribing Mrs. Twoshoes the postmistress, who was not to be bribed; though she might have judged of all the rest.—Her uneasiness was at its height when Charley Dunn called, a few days after the Hunterian mishap; and he and Georgie again retreated to the conservatory, where Mrs St. John found them a few minutes afterwards, Georgie very red, and Charley suspiciously nonchalant, pretending—she could see it was only pretence—to be examining the ferns again; as if they cared so much for for ferns that they must go in and look at them every three or four days!

Oh, Mrs. St. John! if you could have looked through the screen of plants and stands, as you came pattering so quickly, and yet not quick enough across the drawing room, you would have seen Dr. Dunn slip into your sister's hand a letter written in the ex-secretary's broad and clear handwriting; you would have seen her rapid action of gratitude and Charley's brightened face; and you would have understood far more than you do now, when you find them merely pottering about the flowers, as you say, standing at quite a respectable distance from each other, and talking of nothing in heaven or earth worth even your sharp ears to catch!

'I am sure that something is going on!' said Mrs. St. John again, and again she resolved to watch and see.

But love, who laughs at lock-smith, laughs at more at sisters; and when the wit of Brough Bridge took his departure, there was no power on all the house to prevent little Georgie from rushing into her own room, locking the door, and, half blinded by tears and excitement, reading again and again this second and the last; for on the following day Roger was to sail for China, as he had told Georgie in the first; and which, indeed, was his reason for writing at all, braving the fate of Mrs. St. John's hands and eyes, in his anxiety that his darling should have as little cause for sorrow as might be.

'And now,' said he, 'not even 'Faithful and True' could reach her; and they must both live on faith alone; he in a land of barbarians, and she among the temptations to distrust and forgetfulness of home. It would be only for a few years, and then he would return sufficiently wealth to claim her hand even from her father, and able to keep her as she should be kept when he had got her. She was to believe in him, as he believed in her; and if she wavered from any cause, save her own deliberate desire, she was to think of him as living only in and through her love; and that if this was withdrawn, he should die, having nothing more to live for. But he did not think she would change, for he believed in her as in himself.

It was an earnest, fervid, loving letter, and fed poor Georgie's soul with joy, even while it filled it with anguish at the greater gulf of separation which it opened. And yet, she thought, if it should be only the beginning of the end—if this exile to China was the best and quickest way of ending their suspense—if, in a few years time, he should return, and he, as he said, able to make her his wife—well, then, this present sorrow would be all forgotten, and they would come to their happiness none the less loving and blessed for having suffered. In which mood, half resigned and half despairing, but resolute in her love and faith, Georgie Fenton buried her face in the pillows, and cried as if her poor heart was breaking.

Mr. Hunter was not a man of any refinement or real generosity. He was too arbitrary, too selfish, and with too little regard for the feelings of others; he thought too much of money, and had too high an opinion of himself; he was too material, and too rudely 'commen-sensical,' as he used to call himself, to be refined. What he cared for most in life was to have his own way; and when he could not have that he had no very great interest in anything. It had been his will that he should make Georgie Fenton his wife. Hitherto she had refused him, certainly, but with so much gentleness and sweetness that he might easily flatter himself as to the reading of the future, and believe that she could be brought round. Not knowing any rival and alive to his own eligibility, he could not but hold on and hope; but now, while he thought, his face grew very dark, and his heart hardened and hardened until it seemed it seemed as if it would harden itself into stone outright.

'They shall pay for it!' then said Mr. Hunter, rising from his stiff high-backed chair and walking about the room. 'They shall learn what it is to insult money and to brave power!' This he said with his hand on his writing-table, in the left-hand drawer of which was Mr. Fenton's acknowledgment for ten thousand pounds, lent by Mr. Samuel Harmer Hunter, docketed with an I O U signed by Stephen St. John and [illegible] these words, 'Five thousand pounds.'—Fifteen thousand pounds had his wooing of little Georgie cost him: and the result had been—an upper servant not worth a hundred a year preferred before him!

'They shall pay for it!' again said Mr. Hunter, seating himself at the table and writing to his lawyer. 'Good-natured as I have always been to them, they shall learn that I am not to be insulted with impunity, and that if they have thought to make a catspaw of me they have been grievously mistaken.'

They had thought nothing of the kind; and Mr. Hunter knew they had not: but when men are angry they are invariably unjust: and Mr. Samuel Harmer Hunter was angry. Wherefore he wrote his letter to Mr. Pike, his lawyer, and told him that he must recover these two debts, and be quick about it; and that, for certain private reasons not necessary to go into, he was not disposed to show favour or even leniency. A fiery, red-hot epistle, not like his usual calm and well-judged instructions; which made Mr. Pike purse up his mouth and whistle softly to himself, seeing deep into the millstone. But this was the first time that Mr. Hunter had been smitten beneath his armour, and for once passion triumphed over calculation. When he had written his letter he felt happier; for now that the war had begun, it did him good to feel that he had carried reprisals into the enemy's very camp, and had burnt their homesteads about their ears.

The family had foreseen nothing of all this. They had felt it an unpleasant mischance that Georgie should have refused so good an offer, and they had considered the fifteen thousand pounds, which her marriage would have wiped out of their books altogether, as an uncomfortable debt which must be paid—some time. But as for any open acts of hostility on the part of Mr. Hunter, in spite of Mrs. St. John's fretful forebodings which was only temper, counting on his love for Georgie too confidently, they expected it as little as a snow-storm in July. When, therefore, they received Mr. Pike's letters, the one addressed to Mr. Fenton and the other to Mr. St. John, requiring payment of the moneys advanced to them by Mr. Samuel Harmer Hunter at their earliest possible convenience, which meant inconvenience, it was as though a live bomb-shell had burst among them, and they did not at first know how much any one had suffered.

'This is your doing!' said Mrs. St. John to Georgie, showing her the letter, and not sorry to make her the first victim. 'See what your wickedness has brought on poor father! You have ruined him, and us, and every one!' she added, with a vague generality of despair.

'I am very sorry, Carry,' replied Georgie kindly a little frightened too; 'but I cannot see how I can help it.'

'Yes you can; you can and know quite well, so don't be a hypocrite!' said sister Carry, tartly. 'If you would do as you ought; if you were a good, and dutiful, and virtuous girl, and say that you would marry Mr. Hunter, do you think there would be any more annoyance then?'

'But I cannot marry him,' said Georgie, firmly.

'How can you talk such nonsense, and tell such stories?' cried her sister. 'Why do you not say "will not" instead of "cannot?" I suppose there is nothing to hinder you but your own obstinacy and wicked self-will?'

'Yes, there is,' said Georgie, 'there is honour.'

'Bah!' said her sister, 'you are a perfect idiot, Georgina! I declare you are!'

'Well, I cannot, and I will not marry a man I do not love, because you speculated on my doing so, and borrowed money which you now have to pay,' cried Georgie, with spirit. 'If you think it right to try and sell your sister for so many thousand, I am not disposed to allow myself to be bought!'

Whereat she walked out of the room in anger, and her sister saw no more of her for that morning.

Anger, indeed, was the prevailing feeling just now at the Hall. Mr. Fenton was angry with his dough or, St. John, for having lured him by false hopes to ask this loan of Mr. Hunter; he was angry with the iron merchant for acceding to it; and most of all he was angry with little Georgie, hitherto the light of his eyes, for harbouring a naughty love for an undesirable young man whom he had dismissed, and for refusing to make things straight by now following her plain line of duty. Mrs. St John was angry with her father for not insisting; with Mr. Hunter for not persevering; and with St. John with whom she was angry neit er more than less than usual; but she, too, was angry most of all with little Georgie for refusing. And little Georgie was angry with them all, for the cool way in which she had been disposed of—bought and sold like a bale of merchandize, and mortgaged even before possession. So that the spirits were not very cool or comfortable at this time; and the future looked as dark and stormy as the present. One thing only seemed too certain—Mr. Samuel Harmer Hunter was not going to play the generous creditor; and, though not a cruel man, nor a bad one, still, it was evident that he would rather reduce his old friends to the dust and ashes of ruin for revenge, than quietly lose his money to benefit the family of Roger Lewin's wife.

PART III.

By no possible mercantile transaction short of selling the Hall 'and entering the lodge at the gates,' as Mrs. St. John used to add spitefully, could the Fenton family see how the debts were to be met; or rather how Mr. Hunter's loan was to be repaid; for nothing else was pressing, though much was owing. The estate was heavily mortgaged already, and would do little more than cover its own shame even if sold; unless it was sold at a fancy price. Mr. St. John had been unfortunate in some mining transactions; he called it being badly hit; and his private means, which had once been very fair, had gone to mere rags and tatters. Mr. Fenton himself had never been careful about money; but had always spent a handsome income on himself, using his fortune a little too royally, if pleasantly, both for pride and sense; so that things did really look very awkward for them, unless Mr. Hunter could be brought to relent, or Georgie be made to concede; neither of which two contingencies seemed likely to happen. And in the meantime Mr. Pike wrote letters of accumulative harshness, and the split between the two was widening into a gulf which soon not even Georgie, as the Curtius, would be able to fill up. In the midst of which discomfort of circumstance and feeling Mr. Hunter gave a grand ball to all the gentry round; but not, of course, including the Fentons; his quarrel with whom had been the standard subject of gossip for the whole dreary winter month during which it had lasted.

Yet a Brough Bridge ball without pretty Georgie Fenton was Hamlet with the part of Hamlet left out—the summer without flowers—the winter without Christmas.—It was not like a Brough Bridge party at all, said many of the young men, striking through the room discontentedly, and feeling personally ill-used by her omission. But if the entertainment fell flat and dead in the minds of many, it was brisk enough to slender Miss Annie Turnbull, who, now that 'the Fenton girl,' as she styled Georgie, was definitely shelved, seemed to think her chance of the Hesperian greenhouses and viveries not so very bad after all. Both she and Miss La Jeune knew by heart that the best moment to strike is during a rebound, and that a man's heart is never so easy to win as when he has been rejected by another. And they put in practice what they knew. By the end of the evening they had advanced their chance many stages on the way to certainty; and they saw that, with a few more strokes, the iron which had been so long impervious to their blows would take just the shape they wished. Others thought so too; for Mr. Hunter made himself quite conspicuous by his attentions to Miss Annie, he being one of those crafty pachyderms who, even when they are wounded, never turn their soft side to the world, but present only impenetrable hides and pointed plates of armour which not the sharpest eyes can pierce through—a man to stare down eagles in his quiet stolid way, and to let foxes eat into his vitals without a cry.

And when the Fentons heard all about the ball, which they did from half a dozen good-natured friends, and were told how Mr. Hunter had opened it with Miss Turnbull, and had danced with her every other dance—such a marked thing you know, and really quite insulting to the other ladies; only that he danced so badly no one cared, excepting for the mere look of the thing—and how he had taken her down to supper before all the dowagers, old Lady Scratchley and all, saying quite loud, that beauty was before age in his eyes—and had toasted her as the beauty of Brough Bridge and the belle of the ball, when he and the other gentlemen had made havoc with the refreshments,—and when the same good-natured friends, seeing from which quarter the wind was setting, were unanimous in their praise of Miss Annie's beauty and Miss Annie's grace, and Miss Annie's lady-like manners, and her dignity and aristocratic appearance, and all the rest of it—then Mrs. St. John felt that the Fenton family vessel was really sinking, and that nothing short of a miracle could save it.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 21, 1865.

PARLIAMENTARY.

Parliament was prorogued on Monday, at three o'clock; thus bringing the session to a close. About 118 bills have been passed, and by the consent of the Governor General no more have been introduced. The principal ones are the Registration Bill; Amendment to Municipal Act; one relating to collecting School Rates; an Act to ensure to wives and children the benefits of assurance on the lives of their husbands and parents; an Act to amend the Insolvent Act; an Act for quieting the titles to real estate in Upper Canada; an Act in reference to qualifications for Justices of the Peace; an Act for abolishing the punishment of death in certain cases; an Act to facilitate prosecutions under the Act respecting tavern keepers and the sale of intoxicating liquors. An Act also has been passed relating to the Cobourg and Peterborough Railway: also an Act to provide that the Cobourg and Peterborough Railway Company may construct a tramroad or branch railway from the Marmora Iron Works to the river Trent, or to Rice Lake, and for other purposes. The following are three clauses of this Act:—

4. The Cobourg and Peterborough Railway Company are authorized to unite with the Marmora Iron Company, with the consent of a two-third majority of the shareholders, and proprietors of each of the said Companies, for the purpose of mining for ores, minerals, marble and any other valuable substances, and of smelting any such ores and mineral substances, and of carrying and conveying the same to market by the said route, and generally for all the purposes of this Act, and any provisional or final agreement between the said companies with the consent of a majority of shareholders, shall be binding.

5. The said companies may for the more effectual carrying into effect of such union consolidate their respective debts and unite their stocks, properties and effects, and on such terms, either of complete or partial union, and either of joint or separate, or now with either absolutely or for a time, and either for the whole or any one or more of the objects of the said Companies respectively, or of this Act, as such Company shall deem meet, and any deed or agreement under the seals of the said Companies ratified by the shareholders as aforesaid shall be valid and binding to all intents and purposes as if the same had been incorporated with this act, from and after the same shall have been filed in the Registry Offices of the West Riding of Northumberland, and the North Riding of Hastings, and the publication of notice thereof for——weeks in the Canada Gazette.

6. All the powers of the said Companies respectively shall continue to be held by them as fully and amply as if this Act had not been passed, and the said Companies are likewise empowered to pledge their credit and properties for any such joint object as shall have been ratified by the shareholders, and may issue their joint or joint and several debentures, in accordance with any such agreement so filed as aforesaid, which shall be binding, and they may charge their several properties therefor, subject to any existing liens or charges thereon, such debentures to be for sums not less than one hundred dollars respectively.

Another Act of importance relates to Grammar Schools. We are sorry we did not receive a copy of this bill. We think from what we learn from private sources that it will be a benefit to the cause of education; as by this Act necessary funds must be provided before any school can receive any of the Grammar School funds; and the basis of apportionment will be the number of pupils in Latin and Greek. These, we think, are the principal bills of this session; we only wish that they may prove adapted to the wants of the community and the state of society.

The Intercolonial Railway was not brought forward this session, but in the event of confederation it will be a subject for legislation.

The subject of defence remains as it was, and the Militia law; but, no doubt, the work will be advanced more or less, and just now a considerable amount of martial spirit is being inculcated among the people.

No legislation on the North West has been heard of; yet the country, to all intents and purposes, is pledged to the purchase of it as soon as satisfactory arrangements can be made.

This session has lasted about five weeks, long enough anyhow for members to claim full compensation.

Day of Thanksgiving.

From the Canada Gazette we learn that the Governor General has, by Proclamation, appointed Wednesday, the 18th day of October as a day of general thanksgiving for the bounties and mercies of Providence this present season.

We would call attention to the fact that the Gazette fixes the day on the 18th of October, various days having been given by the Reporters. The Lakefield Show will be on the 10th of October, the County Show on the 12th. It was feared that this would have to be deferred. This, however, will set doubts to rest.

Provincial Exhibition.

This week the Provincial Exhibition is being held at London, C. W. The entries are numerous, and the crowd of visitors equal to those of preceding years. From the Globe we learn that the entries amount to about 7,000.

Our thanks are due to Col. Haultain, for several Parliamentary and other papers during the session.

Press Association and Excursion.

The members of the Press of Canada, having, in their wisdom, formed themselves into an Association for certain purposes connected with their calling; and annually at the time of assembling themselves together, they being accustomed to make a trip to some places of interest, we availed ourselves of the opportunity presenting itself this year, and throwing aside all worldly care, we joined the "Press Gang." It was a pleasant trip, and resulted in the formation of numerous acquaintances and friendly ties that shall not soon be forgotten. We left Peterborough on the 5th inst., and proceed by the morning train to Port Hope and thence by Grand Trunk proceeded on our way to Brockville. At various places on the way our numbers were increased. Among those whom we met was Mr. O. VanDusen, now of Owen Sound, but formerly of Peterborough. The trip to Brockville was both pleasant and agreeable, and the road we found in a better state than we had expected. We noticed, however, that there were numerous fires along the line of the railway; in many places the fences were completely consumed. At Brighton we observed that the Hop crop was very light—being almost a failure—owing to the unfavourable season. The pasture, too, is burned up; and nature languishes for lack of moisture. One thing we admired at the Kingston and Brockville Stations, and that is, the neat little flower gardens that are cultivated at these points, showing a little more taste and desire for the beautiful than at any of the intermediate stations. We arrived at Brockville about 4 o'clock, p. m., where carriages were in waiting to convey the "Press Gang" to the Wilson House. There we met our worthy friend D. Wylie, Esq., of the Recorder who had done everything in his power to make things agreeable and pleasant for his confrers.

BROCKVILLE

Is a thriving little town of about 5,000 inhabitants, situated at the foot of the Thousand Islands, on the St. Lawrence.—The appearance of the town is neat and clean, with good streets. The public buildings are behind none in the country; and the hotels are large and commodious. Three papers are published in it. On Wednesday Messrs. Campbell and Reid, owners of the neat little steamer Gazelle, very kindly offered to take a number of the excursionists for a trip among the islands. The scenery is grandly picturesque as the tourist passes through the narrow passages, where the water runs swiftly and is at the same time of considerable depth. Yet the little Gazelle dashed through, and after the most delightful trip returned in good trim. After this the association visited the public schools and other places of interest.

ANNUAL MEETING.

The annual meeting was held on Wednesday afternoon, in the Town Hall; the result of which has already been given in our columns; and on the evening of Wednesday the annual dinner came off, and was in every respect a complete success; more than one hundred partaking of the good things provided.

THE INLAND TRIP.

On Thursday morning an invitation was accepted from the Brockville and Ottawa Railroad Company to pass over their line to [illegible] route we passed through the villages of Smith's Falls and Almonte. At Smith's Falls a large business is done in the manufacture of stoves, ploughs, &c., and it can boast of a very good newspaper called the Review. We also stopped at Almonte, a thriving village, where there are a number of excellent woollen factories, grist mills, tanneries, &c., in fact the water power here is about as fine as there is along the whole line of travel, excepting Ottawa. Mr. O'Donnell, brother to John O'Donnell, Esq., Dentist, of Peterborough, publishes a paper at this village called the Almonte Adeance. The population is about 1,000. Arnprior was the last place and terminus of the road: a small incorporated village with about 900 inhabitants, situated on the Madawaski river, near to Shaw's Lake. It was here the Prince of Wales and suit landed while on his trip on the Ottawa and planted an oak tree on the grounds of Mr. McLaughlin, a lumber merchant, who has one of the finest residences in that part of the country. Leaving Arnprior the party took a ferry steamer and proceeded across the rapids, a distance of three miles, thence by tram railway four miles to the Ottawa river, through as rocky a piece of country as we have about Buckhorn. Leaving the tram road we found the splendid river steamer of Union Forwarding Company waiting at the wharf, where all got on board and proceeded a distance of about 35 miles to Aylmer, where carriages provided by the corporation of Ottawa, were in waiting to convey the party to that city.

THE CAPITOL.

A smart hour's drive, over an excellent gravel road, brought us to the Capitol of Canada. The party visited the various places of interest: the Parliament Buildings, the Chaudiere Falls, Locks of the Rideau Canal, &c. The scenery around Ottawa is far beyond the imagination even of strangers. The view from Cataract Hill is one of surpassing grandeur. To give our readers a faint idea of the grandeur and magnificence of the Parliament Buildings, would require more space than we can afford. Ottawa is destined to become a great city; it has at present a population of 15,000 or 16,000.

On Friday afternoon a number of the party took the train for Prescott, where they arrived early in the evening, whence some continued their journey to Montreal by rail; others remained in Prescott over night, and visited Ogdensburg, on the American side of the St. Lawrence. On Saturday morning the remainder of the excursionists arrived from Ottawa, when all met at the Campbell House at Prescott, to await the arrival of the downward boat; but on account of the stormy state of the weather, the boat did not arrive till Sunday morning, when those who had been waiting got on board and steamed off for Montreal, running the Long Sault rapids, which is a rich treat for those who had not been down the St. Lawrence before. Lake St. Charles was reached, where a dense fog set in, when the steamer had to anchor and lay over until Monday, during which day the party arrived at Montreal; once there, some went about business, others to sight-seeing.

The Toronto Burglars.

Robinson and Brown have been committed to stand their trial at the other four, who, no doubt, have been accomplices, have been acquitted, but are bound to appear against the two who are committed.

EDUCATIONAL.

A Picnic was held in the woods near the Town Hall, North Monaghan, by the children attending the different Schools in the Township, with friends of education from Peterborough and the country around. John Gilmour, Esq., the Reeve of the Township, was elected President; and both he and Mr. Roberts, the Superintendent, addressed the meeting in a brief but impressive manner; and, in addition to the "feast of reason and flow of soul" contained in speeches and addresses, plenty of "good things" for the use of the body were provided for the occasion. Examiners,—Mr. Roberts, aided by Teachers from the Township of Smith.

Prizes were awarded to the children attending the several Schools in the Township, on recommendation of the different Teachers for proficiency, good and regular attendance; and special prizes were given to the most proficient in Spelling, Mental Arithmetic, Grammar, &c.—the classes being formed promiscuously from all the Schools in the Township.

The resolutions of the meeting were:

Moved by R. Lang, Esq., and seconded by Wm. Robson,—That the best thanks of the people here assembled, be given to the Hon. Billa Flint, for his generous donation ($10), for the purchase of Reward Books, for the use of the different Schools in the Township.

Moved by J. Dandas, Esq., and seconded by R. Goodfellow, Esq.—That the thanks of this meeting be tendered to Mr. Roberts, for the satisfactory way in which the reward-books have been distributed, and the examinations conducted on this occasion.

Moved by Henry Collins, and seconded by C. Leary,—That the thanks of this meeting be given to the friends of education, Examiners, and others from other Townships, who have given us their presence and help on this occasion.

An Essay on "Education; The Teacher's difficulties and troubles," by Mr. C. S. Dunbar, Teacher, Otonabee, was read, when it was requested that said Essay be sent to the Examiner and Review offices, with a request for publication.

A vote of thanks to the President, Mr. Gilmour, for his services on the occasion was moved, and carried unanimously.

The singing by the children attending the School taught by Mr. Wm. Douglas, and also by the children attending Miss Dowling's school, added much to the enjoyments of the day; and near the time when "Sol makes his exit in the west," the meeting dispersed, each one much gratified with the different proceedings of the day.

PIC-NIC.

A general school examination and Pic-Nic of the children of the Common Schools of the Township of Smith was held on Pic-Nic Hill (near Bridgenorth) on the 12th September, and also for the distribution of prizes to the most deserving of the scholars attending the schools of said township, towards the purchase of which books the Hon. Billa Flint generously contributed $10. Mr. J. Bell was elected Chairman, and he and Messrs. Schofield, Taylor, and others, addressed those assembled, both parents and children in appropriate terms. The day was fine, and the scenery beautiful; which on the green sward the children and others did ample justice to the good things contributed by kind friends for the occasion.

[illegible] seconded by Mr. I. Garbutt,—That this meeting herewith express their approbation and return their thanks to the Hon. Billa Flint, for his generous donation of $10, towards the purchase of prize books to the several School Sections in this township.

It was also moved by Mr. A. Hall, and seconded by Mr. R. Chowan.—That the thanks of this meeting be given to the Rev. Mr. Roberts, for the satisfactory manner in which the prizes have been distributed and examinations conducted.

Moved by Mr. John Hall, and seconded by Mr. M. Waram,—That the thanks of this meeting be given to those friends of education from a distance, who have come among and honoured us with their presence and assistance, Examiners of classes, Messrs. William and John Wood, &c.

Special prizes were awarded to Mary Anne Sanderson, S. S. No. 3; William Rosbury S. S. No. 4; Robert Nugent, No. 7 (2 prizes); and Miss Houlihan, S. S. No. 7.

Sports were the order of the day; all were gratified and delighted when near the close of day, parents and children,

"Each took off his several way
Resolved to meet some other day.

New Publications.

We have received the first number of a new literary periodical, called the Saturday Reader. It is intended to supply Canadian readers with Canadian reading. Its value will depend, in a great degree, on the support it receives. Canadians have had to supply themselves with foreign publications, which have been and must continue to be injurious to the interests of the country; as with such matter we import foreign ideas, at variance with the principles that should be nourished and cherished by our inhabitants; we trust, therefore, that the Reader will continue to supply interesting and attractive matter that will drive foreign publications out of the field. The first numbers promise well, and from the appearance of the work and the matter it contains, we predict for it a good reception.

Almost an Accident.

While the steamer Otonabee was passing down the river, a few days since, Mr. T. Hales and his brother sought to get on board; but on nearing the vessel, they went too much in the front and were drawn in between the steamer and the scows laden with lumber. One of the brothers seized the scow and managed to hold on, but the other staying in his little craft passed under part of the scow. The punt in which he was was struck with the paddle-wheel and partly broken, and his own hand hurt. The steamer being moved a little he came out almost dead. After a little, however, he was all right, having only his hand hurt by the stroke.

Cobourg and Peterboro' Railway.

On the 14th inst., Mr. Cockburn moved the third reading of the Bill to amend and extend the Acts relating to the Cobourg and Peterborough Railway Company. Mr. M. C. Cameron moved the six months hoist, which was lost on a division—22 to 61. Mr. M. C. Cameron moved that the bill be re-committed with a view to the insertion of a clause providing for the sale of the railway.

Petroleum.

We learn that the Petroleum Company have commenced the operation of boring; everything works well, the only result now desirable is "Oil."

The Lady's Friend.

The October number of this excellent magazine opens with a beautiful steel engraving, called "The Wanderer's Return." The sentiment of this engraving is very touching—the wanderer has come back to the scenes of his youth, and gazes with a heart full of emotion on the church where in childhood he passed so many pleasant and reverential hours. Of the Fashion Plate of this number we need only say that it is equal to any of its predecessors. Ladies tell us that the fashion plates of this magazine are particularly due. The Music is "Minnie Minton, or I'll Meet You in the Morning." (Song and Chorus.) The music alone of this magazine is worth more than the price of the book—did our fair readers ever consider that? Then we have numerous engravings of "The Corded Corsage," "Zulaima Jacket," "Patterns for Morning Caps," "Riding Habit," "Evening Head Dress," "Bodice with Basque," &c. &c. The literary matter of this number is "Ronald's Mistake," "A Memory," "Across the Plains," by Virginia F. Townsend; "Contrition," by Annie F. Kent; "Told by the Sun," by Beatrice Colonna; "The Land of Dreams," by Charles Morris; "A Dying Child's Request," "Only an Episode," "Abel Carn's Temptation," "Titian Vecelli," "The Old Bedquilt," "Our Christian Names," "Our Darling;" Editorials, Receipts, Fashions, &c. &c. Price $2.50 a year; 2 copies $4.00; 3 copies (and one gratis) $6.00. Now is the time to get up clubs for 1866. Specimen numbers for this purpose will be sent for 15 cents. Wheeler & Wilson's celebrated Sewing Machines are furnished as Premiums in certain cases.

THE BURGLARS.

As I told you in my last it was likely the burglars Brown and Robinson would be caught in some way. It has just turned out as I expected. There were three others taken, and as they were only parties to their crimes, after or before they were committed, and not principals, they were put in the witness box, and brought the burglary committed in the tobacco factory pretty conclusively home to Brown. So it is supposed they will both get their deserts, as they are committed to stand their trial at the assizes soon to come off. What a fine thing it will be to have two such scoundrels placed in safe keeping, where they may do something for the public good in the shape of breaking stones, &c.

THE WEATHER.

During the past week the weather has been as hot here as it has been for any time all summer; but on Sunday morning rain began to come, and all that day we had beautiful pleasant showers, which has made quite a change in the air; everything feels fresh and changed for the better since.—Yesterday was a most charming day; if it continues so it will surely have a beneficial effect on the general health, as well as everything else. For some time past there has been a great amount of sickness, and a number of deaths from dysentry and such diseases, and the extremely hot weather was very unfavourable to the recovery of any delicate person attacked by any disease of such a nature.

THE PROSPECTS OF TRADE

Everything seems to be beginning to stir in the business line in this city, and I believe there was much need of a change, as trade was hardly ever so dull in this place as it has been this season. The farmers are bringing in their grain and that is creating quite a stir in the market. On Saturday last there was upwards of 5,000 bushels of barley taken in at one storehouse on the Queen's Wharf; there was a continuous stream of teams from half past six in the morning until two in the afternoon. The price ranges from 67 cents to 71½ cents per bushel, and some prime lots went up to 74½ cents. It seems that the farmers will get remunerative prices for their produce this season, and as there has been a bountiful crop, if they only bring out their surplus produce now, and turn it into ready cash, it will do an immense amount of good to the country.

EXCURSIONS.

The city has been visited during the past week by an immense number of people who took advantage of a cheap excursion trip on the Northern Railway from Collingwood and intermediate places. They were to be numbered by thousands. Pleasure and business were very profitably united by almost all of the excursionists, as you might see them wending their way to the railway station on their return heavily laden with the purchases made in the city. Many of the citizens received visits from their "country cousins," and it seemed to be a good time and well enjoyed by all.

CHICAGO CITY FATHERS.

On Saturday last a number of the City Council of Chicago visited Toronto, and took our City Fathers by surprise, as they were not expected until some time this week. Notwithstanding short notice, the Torontonians, on the spur of the moment, got up an entertainment befitting the occasion. They went off from this to the Falls, escorted by a large number of the leading men of the the city, on board of the steamboat. On visiting the public buildings, and after examining the very elegant and substantial "Osgoode Hall" and the "University," they expressed themselves astonished with their architectural beauties, and one of them exclaimed, "I go for annexation to Canada, after this, as we cannot produce anything like this on our side." And your correspondent joins him in that opinion, as the only annexation which we as a people need ever think of is one in which they shall be forced by our superior privileges and stable institutions, to come over to us, and not we to them. By the by, you may see in to-day's Globe that the Canadians have beaten Brother Jonathan in the New York State Fair, in the article of Cheese. For some years past, our Yankee neighbors have turned their attention to large dairies, and the manufacture of Cheese on a large scale. They thought themselves foremost in the world at that trade; and in the fair just over they had a building set apart for their display in the products in that line. What was their surprise to find "a grey coated Canadian" bearing off the palm from them in their own pet trade? It is a fact! Mr. Smith, of Norwich, in the west of Canada, entered a cheese for competition upwards of four thousand pounds in weight: and when they beheld its vast proportions, they said "Wal, I guess it won't be so good as other's;" but there they were deceived also, for the Judges, after tasting them all thoroughly, gave their award in favour of Mr. Smith's big Canadian Cheese, both largest and best. So may Canada ever turn out in the race; and if all Canadians would only do as Mr. Smith has done, as far as lies in their power to advance their country by perfecting its resources in every line of trade and manufacture—let grumbling and looking for outside help go to the winds, and depend more on ourselves—we would become the envy of nations on this continent, and our country would become a place where all who wished for a happy and prosperous home would desire nothing better than to settle down in our midst. The picture may appear rather highly coloured, but I assure you it is in accord with the opinions of more than

"EDUCATION: THE TEACHER'S OFFICE—ITS DIFFICULTIES AND TROUBLES."

(Read by Mr. C. S. Dunbar, Teacher, North Monaghan, at the Educational Picnic, held at North Monaghan, September 12th, 1865.)

It is not necessary to compare the season of youth with the Spring of the year, or with the mariner just entering upon a perilous voyage; and if there be applicability, if truth, in such illustrations, and if peculiar culture, care and caution be required in conducting those to a happy termination, how much more necessary are they in the formation of those early habits of morality in youth, that shall guide them to eminence in after years—a retrospect that shall abound more in joy than in sorrow.

An open Spring naturally promises both a plentiful harvest and an abundant Winter's store: yet not without industry and cultivation. The opening flower requires a more jealous care than even the full blown rose and the mariner who has "gone down to the deep" feels fewer throes of fear than when he left the shallows and shores behind him.

Some people imagine that the education of youth begins when they enter the school-room, and ends when they leave it altogether. But this is a mistake. Education comprehends every influence exerted upon them from the first moment of existence to the closing scene of life. Life the child has, and the animal functions are going on; but it has no knowledge to discern, or power to administer to its own wants. Let the tender care of her who gave it birth be withdrawn for a few short hours, and its connection with the world will come to a close, and its remembrance among men will perish. Place him in the wigwam of the red man of the American forest, and if he survives the severities of such a situation he will grow up erect and active, fond of the chase and fonder still of war. Put him among the wandering children of Ishmael in their wild and arid deserts, and when he arrives at manhood his hand will be against every man and every man's hand against him. Place him among the rich and aristocratic ones of this "heap of dirt," which one of our British essayists says "human vanity has divided into climates and regions," ranks and distinctions, and he will need a carriage and attendants. Place him among the poor, and they who pay him may have his services. Place him among the middle classes of society, and he will feel too independent to need a servant and too noble himself to become one. If born in Turkey he will live and die a zealous follower of the Arabian imposter, or if born in a Christian land and in a Christian household, where the Bible is daily read and daily put into practice, he will in all probability become a Christain, and rejoice in reducing to practice the precepts of the meek and lowly Jesus. External circumstances, therefore, it is evident, must have a great and controlling influence either for good or evil upon our children. Of what great importance then must it be that that influence be enlightening, elevating and moral, and under the training of intelligent and Christian teachers, judicious parents, and virtuous associates; for habits formed in youth are as lasting as life itself: and if these habits be, as it is most desirable they should be, numerous evils will be averted; but if a wrong bias is given to our young ones, the evils will increase in every subsequent period, for 'tis

"Education forms the common mind.
Just as the twig is bent the tree's inclined."

In many school sections in Western Canada (although there be many praiseworthy exceptions) many think of and act towards teachers as if they were mere machines, having no right and who must do as they are bidden They indeed, in many cases, act towards them in the very way that the natives of ancient Egypt used the Israelites while in a state of bondage, by requiring them to make bricks without straw. In order that a child be properly educated, the parent must do his duty in sending the same regularly to school, and teaching him to respect his teacher: while on the other hand the teacher must do his duty faithfully in the way of instruction. But how stands the case in many of our school sections? Irregular attendance is the rule, not the exception; and instead of inculcating on their young ones the duty of respect towards their instructor, they exhort them to act the part of spies in the schoolroom; his every movement is watched carried home and commented on; and yet after doing all this they (the parents) have the unblushing effrontery to saddle the teacher with what is not his fault, but theirs. Other classes in society are considered innocent till their crime is proven; but with teachers society adopts a different plan: they are generally condemned unheard; their failings being both judged and punished at the same time. Reason they will not listen to, and every attempt to influence them by it will be as unsuccessful as that of Canute to rule "old ocean."

Far more unfortified than the colours of the rainbows are the tastes and whims he has to contend with. One wishes him to be very strict, while another will design that the rod be not used. One will admonish him to be temperate, and a second will solicit very certain attention towards his young ones. Some will let him govern the school in his own way, while some again will try and govern him. Some will be anxious to see the school prosper, while others will be entirely indifferent. Some will cheerfully furnish all the necessary books, while others again will think it enough to send them to school without any. Some will be ever ready to speak evil of him in the presence of their children and thus effectually destroy his influence for good, while some again will act a more Christian and judicious part and caution them to tell no tales out of school.

Although the office of a teacher is a most honourable and important one the man who holds it in many cases is neither honoured nor respected. The Saviour is called the "Great Teacher," and some of the greatest names that have adorned the page of history have thought it no disgrace to their dignity to "teach the young idea how to shoot" But how has mankind used them. Let history tell!! The Saviour endured cruel mockery and scourging, and was crucified upon a tree. Socrates was put to death. And one great obstruction to human progress has ever been the stigma of Utopianism fastened on the world's benefactors by the envy and stupidity of mankind. "From age to age," says William Howitt in his History of Priestcraft, "the great spirits of the world have raised their voices in behalf of liberty and education, but the cry has been drowned by the clash of arms or the brutish violence of untutored mobs. Homer and Demosthenes in Greece; Cicero in Rome; the poets and martyrs of the middle ages; the Puritans and Covenanters; our sublime Milton, the maligned but unmoveable servant and sufferer of freedom, who laid down on the altar of liberty his peace, his comfort, and his very eyesight; our Hampdens and Sydneys; the Hofers and Bolivars of other lands, have from age to age cried Liberty! but ignorance and power have been commonly too much for them." "When," says Armour, "will talkers refrain from evil speaking? When listeners refrain from evil hearing." At present there are many in our school sections so credulous of evil that they will receive suspicions and impressions against teachers (and others) whom they don't know, from a person whom they do know in authority to be good for nothing.—"Throw mud, and some of, it will stick," is an old adage, and many persons have a bump for scandal and detraction so monstrously developed in their craniums that their whole life seems a vivid commentary of the truth of the adage, a ferrid panegyric on the potent effects of mud (scandal) and a commendatory treatise on the art of throwing it. Scandal is a necessary stimulant to their system, like a morning dram to the sot, or a cup of strong "gunpowder" to a servish old dame. They live at home when taking a character to pieces, and can do it, too, with all the relish of an eager lecturer on economy; and if not ready to throw the first stone at the instructor of their children, they are ready to cast another, and another, and another, till a whole cairn of them is heaped up; and as for mud, they are never ashamed or tired of throwing that, and they chuckle as they think that some of it will stick. They "who watch men's looks, and carry tales about, have done more mischief in this world of ours than the assassin's knife or poisoned bowl," and Cowper graphically hits them off, when he says

"Of tempers as corrosive as an asp,
Censorious, and his every word a wasp.
* * *
Lanches at the reputations he has torn,
And hoists them dangling at arms length in scorn."

Some folks fabricate and add, but never diminish, and whistle down a good name in the wind and stab a reputation in the dark. Do such characters ever read their Bible? They may, but it's evident from their doings it is reading only. "They preach but practice not."

Love all there is in living thing
Which God has not created.
Leave all there is of living thing
Which God has ever hated.

A good education is intimately associated with a taste for reading. Not such garbage as the novel, and Reynold's Newspaper or the New York Mercury, whose effect will be to corrupt the mind of the reader; but something of a more substantial and elevating kind, beginning first with the Bible, "the book of books."—Where, in all the lists of human productions will we find anything to compare with it. The works of Spenser, Milton, and Shakspeare are no doubt full of genius; their authors were nature's nobles: but for pathos, fulness, beauty and sublimity they must yield the palm to the lyres of Moses, David and Isaiah. A good book is a great blessing—an angel of benevolence and mercy: so a bad book is a great curse—a destroying demon, full of venom and malignity, no matter how nicely bound or beautifully illustrated. Thoughts black as ink that wrote them are in print, and myriads of human beings have been polluted by them. There is poison not only in beer, wine and spirits, and there is some of the worse kind in many of our publications. "Truth is always strange: stranger than fiction. How much would novels gain by the exchange."

My fellow-teachers, hold on your course undismayed. Our office is indeed an honourable and important one. The progress of society and the destiny of nations are in our hands.—Detraction and vulgar abuse may sometimes be our portion. Falter not! "Faint heart never won fair a lady." We may fail in receiving the approbation of some men; but the approbation of the intelligent and the good, and the approval of God and of a good conscience, will be an ample recompense.

Though we see in looking round us,
Man to wickedness is prone:
Though the snares of vice surround us,
Virtue's path but rarely known;
Well we know that in our nature
Is a spark of life divine:
We must love the soul from thraldom
If we wish that spark to shine.
We must all be up and stirring
With determination true:
Parents and teachers, old and young men,
We have got a work to do.

Life is but a scene of labour,
Every one his task assigned.
We must each assist our neighbour
When we see him lag behind.
We must strive by education
Man's condition to improve.
And find men of every station
In a bond of union move.
All must then be up and stirring.
With determination true,
Pastors and fathers rich and poor men.
Yes, we have got a work to do.

Otonabee, Sept. 13, 1865.

CURIOUS QUESTION RATHER.—On Monday last a decent looking traveller went into Mr. Patterson's and asked for a pair of large books, for which he paid $10, giving Mr. Patterson a $20 bill. Mr Patterson did not possess small bills in change; so he immediately called next door on Mr. Poole to melt the $20 bill, which he did. The stranger departed with his $10 (single dollar bills) and the books. A few minutes subsequently Mr. Poole made his appearance in Patterson's store, declaring that the $20 bill was a forgery, which, on examination, appeared indisputable. Mr. Patterson had, therefore, to refund the $20, and began calculating his total loss. How much was it?—Contributor.

The Assessed Value of our Property.

The Municipal Returns for 1864 have been laid before Parliament. They are prefaced by an interesting Report from the pen of Mr Langton, the Auditor General, and contain, in a condensed form, information as to the assets, liabilities, revenue and expenditure of all the municipalities within the Province. The grand total of the assessed property of the country is given as follows:—

Real and personal estate, C. W.	$265,979,238
Do. do. do., C. E.	170,421,919
	$435,501,157

Taking the population of the country at 2,881,000—Mr. Langton's estimate—we find the assessed value of property per head to be $151 (making by the computed population of Upper and Lower Canada respectively, viz. 1,396,000 and 1,220,000), we find the average assessed value of property to be:—

In Upper Canada	$160 per head
In Lower Canada	139 " "

Our Provincial debt being given at $60,247,575, or nearly $21 per head, we can see at a glance how much of our property is mortgaged for its ultimate redemption.

In addition to this, however there are Corporation Debentures of about $10,000,000, which raise our total indebtedness, on what may be considered public account, to about $26.59 per head.

Another way of looking at the value of our property is to see how much it amounts to per ratepayer. The number of ratepayers assessed is—

In Upper Canada	285,000
In Lower Canada	210,000
	495,000

This gives us as the property assessed per ratepayer:—

In Upper Canada	$920
In Lower Canada	811
Average—all Canada	$870

This, it should be remembered, is the assessed value. Something should undoubtedly be added to bring it up to the real value, and we should probably be under the mark if we were to say that each ratepayer owns property worth $1,000

Mr Langton points out how unequal the assessment is in the various counties of Upper Canada and thinks much of this inequality is due to defective assessment. While this may be the case, we nevertheless see that the value given to property follows a pretty regular rule, being highest in the old settled counties traversed by railways—lowest in new districts far away from such means of communication.

The increase of the assessed value of property is given in Upper Canada, not in Lower Canada, because the system of collecting municipal returns from Canada East is only just being put upon a proper footing. The figures for Upper Canada are:—

	Real Estate.	Personal Property.
1864	$340,063,966	$25,015,442
1863	235,947,963	24,169,811
Increase	$3,116,003	$845 631

The taxation of the municipalities for municipal purposes yielded under the rates for 1864:

In Canada West	$1,900,000
In Canada East	1,600,000
	$3,500,000

This is about 8 mills in the $1 on the total assessed property—or, converting this into casual value, at six per cent, it is equal to 13½ cents on the $1.

The arrears of taxes are heavy—$1,786,145 in Upper, and $598,083 in Lower Canada. The municipalities ought not to allow so large an amount to be outstanding.

Murder at Niagara Falls.

BY TELEGRAPH.

Suspension Bridge, Sept. 19th, 1865.

The excitement still continues unabated here since yesterday. To-day about two o'clock, the fire alarm bell rang and quite a crowd began to assemble to its warning notes, many supposing that another fire had broken out but it proved to be a false alarm, and the feelings of the crowd took another change. A person named Woodie having been arrested for assault and battery, and the crowd thinking the magistrate not severe enough they were under consideration whether to take the law into their own hands or not. The magistrate addressed the crowd assembled and ejaculated with them, asking them to keep cool and not let their excitement get the better of their judgement so far as to cause more destruction of property, but his voice was drowned by the tumult of voices raised against him. The feeling against the magistrate is great and may be said to be next to that against the parties of the place near where the murdered man was found. The people complain greatly of his leniency towards those brought before him, and especially to the class belonging to the houses of ill repute, of which class there were a great many; but which, the doings of yesterday, will give to understand that their presence is not required in the place nor even before the magistrate's bench. A coroner's inquest will be held on the body of the murdered man on Monday next, which will probably bring to light something about this mysterious murder.

A WOMAN MURDERED IN ORANGEVILLE.—Last Saturday the body of an old woman named Godfrey, was found in a shanty occupied by her in Orangeville, in an advanced stage of decomposition. The whole family are of very intemperate habits, and last week were enjoying a spree, when it is supposed that a dispute arose among them, and the son, beat her to death. She was a poor old cripple, having lost the use of one side some years ago by a paralytic stroke, and could not walk upright, but crept along on her hands and knees. She was much bruised about the body and head, as if kicked or beaten with some heavy cudgel. Suspicion was at once fixed upon her son, Francis Godfrey, who a day or two before the discovery of the body, left for Collingwood. A constable was immediately despatched to Collingwood, who arrested him and brought him back to Orangeville. An inquest was held on the body of the murdered woman by Dr. Joseph Corbet coroner, and the jury returned a verdict that the deceased came to her death at the hands of her son, Francis Godfrey. Francis Godfrey was accordingly brought to Guelph, and committed to jail to take his trial at the ensuing Assizes. He is rather a respectable looking man, of medium height. When searched by the jailor an old greasy leather pocke'-book was found stowed away in his clothing, when, on examination, was found to contain 13 sovereigns, eight $10 and a $1 bill. The prisoner's story is that when he left Orangeville to go to Collingwood, his mother was alive and well as usual. He acknowledged that all had been drinking, and says that a quarrel arose between his wife's sister and his mother, and that his sister-in-law beat the old lady to death.

THE STEAMER CORINTHIAN.—We had the opportunity of paying a personal visit the other day to the steamer which met with so sad a misfortune in July last. The repairs of the vessel have been very thorough and extensive. It was found in raising the walking beam that it was defective in another place besides the one where the break occured. But not only has the part broken been re-cast with the strongest iron but it is further strengthened by large welds, and in addition to this, a massive iron girdeon has been attached to the walking beam, throughout its entire length. A new cylinder has also been placed in the vessel, and the copper tubes which were found defective on the fourth of July excursion, have been replaced by new ones.—The boiler is encased in a covering to prevent the radiation of heat, thus rendering the vessel cooler, and adding to the comfort of passengers. Formerly passengers complained of a disagreeable tremor in the boat caused by the mode of construction of the water wheels. The buckets of the wheel have now been altered so as to prevent this entirely in future. We may add that the strength of the machinery of the Corinthian is now considered at least equal to that of the Champion. The vessel is expected to resume her trips during the present week.

THE FACE OF THE CHOLERA.—The Times says: "Hitherto the disease has always advanced in a certain track pre-monably from India, towards the regions of Western Europe. At the present time we hear nothing who ever of the cholera as on its route from India. It was first reported quite abruptly from Alexandria. It has not advanced beyond Marseilles, or beyond any of infected ports on the east coast of Spain. Southern Italy has been attacked, but only under similar conditions. In short, upon a summary of the evidence, we come to this conclusion, not that an Asiatic pestilence is advancing upon us across Europe, but that there has been an extraordinary outbreak of cholera in the basin of the Mediterranean. This marked and special limitation of the epidemic may and unreasonably suggest to us some hope of immunity. Within the basin of the Mediterranean no shore has escaped; beyond it no camera has appeared."

NEW YORK, September 4.—Last evening a carpenter named Joseph Holt, residing a New Brighton, Staten Island, was shot by two soldiers, and is not expected to recover. The soldiers had been hanging about the place for several days, and last evening got in a dispute with Holt, when they fired two shots from their revolvers, one shot taking effect in Holt's shoulder and one in his temple. The soldiers then fled into the woods where, it is supposed, they are now concealed. Witnesses say that Holt, who is an inoffensive man, gave no provocation.

The body of a young woman named Catherine Fitzgerald, supposed to have been murdered, was brought to the Eagle House, King William street, from a house near the Roman Catholic Cemetery. An inquest will be held this morning. The corpse presents a deadly appearance, the jaw being literally smashed, and the indications are that the unfortunate woman was pounded to death. She has, we believe, been long known to the police as the

5. That for the purpose of forming a sinking fund for the payment of the said debentures and the interest at the rate aforesaid to become due thereon, an equal special rate of one mill in the dollar shall, in addition to all other rates, be raised, levied and collected in each year upon all the rateable property in the said Municipality during the continuance of the said debentures or any of them.

Poetry.

Cut Out.

It is many years since I fell in love
With Jane Jerusha Skeggs,
The handsomest girl by far
That ever went on legs.

By meadow, creek, and wood and dell,
So often did we walk,
And the moonlight smiled on our lips,
And the night-winds learned our talk.

Jane Jerusha was all to me,
For my heart was young and true,
And I wed with a double twisted love,
Ah! a love that was honest, too.

I roamed all over the neighbors' farms,
And I robbed the wild wood bowers,
And tore my trowsers and scratched my arms
In search of choicest flowers.

To my joyous love I brought all these
To my Jerusha Jane,
But I wouldn't be so foolish it
I were a boy again.

A city chap then came along,
All dressed up in store clothes,
With a shiny hat and shiny vest,
And a moustache under his nose.

He talked to her of singing schools,
For her father owned a farm,
And she left me, the country love,
And took the new chap's arm.

And all that night I never slept,
Nor could I eat next day,
For I loved the girl with fervent love,
That naught could drive away.

I strove to win her back to me,
But it was all in vain;
The city chap, with the hairy lip,
Married Jerusha Jane.

And my poor heart was sick and sore,
Till the thought struck me,
There just as good a fish remained
As ever was caught in the sea.

So I went to the Methodist Church one night,
And saw a dark brown curl
Peeping from under a gipsy hat,
And I married that very girl.

And many years have passed and gone,
And I think my loss my gain;
And often bless that hairy chap
That stole Jerusha Jane.

Varieties.

The First 'Bus in America.—Columbus.

Cackling may be termed, poetically the "Lay of a Hen."

Whale a youngster, and what do you get out of him?—Blubber.

When is a man chapfallen?—Probably when the chap is knocked down.

The Height of Absurdity.—Painting a mud-cart white.

Where is sugar most profitable to grocers?—At the bottom of the molasses measures.

Fresh rolls every morning.—Rolling to the other side of the bed for a fresh snooze.

When is a farmer very maternal? when he cradles his grain.

An exchange in its market report, quotes "whisky 6@8." Shouldn't wonder; it's been pretty cold lately.

Take his very tools from a poor cobbler and what do you deprive him of?—His awl (awl), of course.

Potatoes alone are at any time sufficient for a man's dinner, if they can only be found meat-y enough.

JEREMIAH was telling how much he liked calves' head for dinner, when the mistress, exclaimed 'Oh you cannibal!'

In narrating the circumstances of a recent suicide, the papers say that beside being deaf, dumb, and at old bachelor, the unfortunate man exhibited signs of insanity.

A little boy returning from the Sunday school, said to his mother:—"Ma, ain't there a kitten-chism for little boys? The catechism is too hard.

The toper never lacks an excuse for drinking. If the weather is fine and open it is so dry that he must wet himself. If damp and foggy he is still tempted, for then the weather is muggy.

Entering a fruiterer's store on Broad way, a gentleman took up a tropical fruit, and politely asked what it was. The very rude reply was:—"Man-go."

An English writer says that wild and mischievous boys are apt to make old men. Very bad boys are apt to make prematurely old men of fathers, if not of themselves.

A lady wished a seat in a crowded hall. A handsome gentleman brought her a chair.

'You are a jewel,' said she. 'Oh, no, I am a jeweller, I have just set the jewel.'

At the door of a parish church near P—— was recently nailed the following notice;—'The church wardens will hold their quarterly meeting every six weeks, instead of half-yearly as formerly.

A little boy seeing a drunken man prostrate before the door of a groggery opened the door, and putting in his head, said to the proprietor:—"See here, sir, your sign has fallen down."

A country paper says, "Wanted, at this office, an editor who can please everybody. Also a foreman who can so arrange the paper as not allow every man's advertisement to head the column.

'Pa, can you tell what brought about this cruel war?' Yes, my darling. It is caused by the unfortunate landing of a vessel called the Mayflower, at Plymouth Rock, in the year 1620.'

ASTRONOMICLE.—We are unable to state positively that all the jokes relating to crinoline are not used up. For instance: Why do ladies wear such extraordinary things as crinoline?—Because all the heavy bodies move in eccentric circles.

DIFFERENCE OF OPINION.—Arabella—"Now, Charlie, dear, do have a little courage.... When I have a powder to take, I don't like it any more than you do.... but I make up my mind that I will take it, and I do!"—Charlie—"And when I have a Powder to take, I make up my mind that I won't take it, and I don't!!!"

A country gentleman, walking in his garden, saw his gardener asleep in an arbor. 'What!' says the master, 'asleep, you idle dog? You are not worthy that the sun should shine on you!' 'I am truly sensible of my unworthiness,' answered the man, 'and therefore I had myself down in the shade.'

On one occasion Rockvill was coming along the street awful fee, when he met in with what he took to be a man, but which was a pump. Round it he jumped with his face to it, hoping that it would step aside; but last tired of his dancing, he stepped, and, behaving himself on his pins, exclaimed, "I've tired, had, to pass you, you can try and pump me."

SEWING MACHINE COMPANY,

627 BROADWAY, NEW-YORK.

THE BUTTON HOLE made by this entirely simple and novel machine, are not only equal to the best hand-made in the pearl or right side, but greatly surpassing them in beauty on the wrong side, which is formed by a beautiful braid stitch, made by an extra stitch, which no hand made button-hole possesses; thereby imparting to the same a much greater strength, which renders cording or barring altogether unnecessary.

This is the only machine produced that will throw a stitch over the edge, so as to bind and cover it in a manner indispensible for Button-holes, Cording and Braiding, each of which can be done with colored, shaded or chine silks, and produce a fabrique of varied colors unexcelled for beauty and taste.

To Ladies at home, Dress, Mantilla and Cloak makers, Shoemakers, Tailors, Hatters, Bookbinders, Saddlers, &c., &c., it is indispensable; it is also admitted to be of great value, to other branches as it Brads, Embroiders, and Cords plain and fancy on all kinds of Cloths, Cassimers, Linen, Velvet Leather, &c., &c.

Little Falls Farmers' Club.

This club had a good meeting May 26, and from its discussions, as reported in the Utica Herald, we call a few extracts:

SOILING MILCH COWS OR GREEN CORN.—With regard to feeding milch cows green corn fodder or grass for soiling purposes, it was better to have it wilted before feeding. It should be cut in the morning and lay in the sun till afternoon, and then fed. In this way some of the external moisture will be got rid of, and the food will be preferred by animals, and produce better results. The food is very succulent and juicy, and does not need to be still further diluted by feeding when dew and water is adhering to it. Better reduce the watery portions by wilting and partially drying. Drilling in the seed for corn fodder was preferable to broadcast sowing, it yielded more, and was easier cut. The drills should be about three feet apart.

FEEDING CALVES.—In feeding oil meal and whey to calves, dip off the whey from the vat when sweet, bring it to a boiling point and turn upon the meal, let the mixture stand till night and then feed. It is better not to feed calves all the whey they will drink at one time. A large feed of whey cloys the appetite and deranges health. A half pail of whey at first, is enough for a feed, which may be increased to three-fourths of a pail as the calf increases in age. Two meals a day if it runs to pasture is sufficient.

Mr. Lewis, of Schuyler, uses a pint of oil meal per day for five calves. Mr. Brown, of Fairfield, did not exceed one-half pint per calf. He advised mixing skippings with the oil meal, it keeps the meal from packing. The calves ought not to be weaned until they can get a good bite of after-feed. It is important to keep them in a growing, thrifty condition with no check. When weaned earlier, their growth is often checked by reason of short, dry or insufficient feed in pastures.

PLASTER.—Mr. Lewis thought it a good time to sow plaster immediately after haying, there was more leisure then, and it gave a good coat of grass in the fall. He wanted his milch cows in high condition to commence the winter. When plaster is to be sowed in spring, would prefer to have it on the late snows; but plaster could be sown at any time during the growing season with good effect. As to the quantity of plaster per acre, more depended upon even distribution than large quantities unevenly put on. About 100 pounds to the acre if properly applied annually would be about right. Plaster used to be sold by measure, 29 bushels being considered a ton.

GRASS SEED.—Many people, it was believed, make a mistake in sowing too small a quantity of grass seed in seeding meadows. A half bushel per acre is little enough.—When only a peck per acre is used there are vacant spaces and it takes long to get a good sod. It is bad economy to waste the use of land in this way. Better pay a little more for seed in the first instance and be prepared to get full crops, right along.

TESTING EGGS.—Put them in water. If good, they rest upon the side. If one floats end up, you may be sure of a bad egg.

An able physiologist has written that one-fifth of the human body is composed of bosphorus. Punch remarks that this most likely accounts for the number of matches made.

A PIG WITH A WOODEN LEG.—The Edinburgh Courant says:—"A tailor in Cupar Angus, who had a pig which got one of its legs broken, has replaced the injured limb with a wooden one. It is curious to see the animal hobbling about, but it is thriving as well as before the accident."

A SURE REMEDY FOR A FELON.—The following remedy is vouched for by the Buffalo Advocate, as a certain thing from its own knowledge: "Take a pint of common soft soap and stir in air-slacked lime till it is of the consistency of glazier's putty. Make a leather thimble, fill it with this composition, and invert the finger therein, and a cure is certain." This is a domestic application that every housekeeper can apply promptly.

GOOD STOCK.—There is much less profit in keeping a large number of poor, scrubby cattle, than a less number of first-class animals. Get rid, say we, of your scrawny stock. Raise your likely, well formed calves. Sell your poor to the butcher. It costs little more to keep well built, well favoured, clean limbed animals, than it does to keep an inferior kind; while the former are worth double the money, and afford ten times the pleasure to the farmer that the latter do. It would be for the interest of the farmer to look less to the quantity, and more to the quality of his stock.—Kansas Farmer.

SPECTACLES FOR A HORSE.—The U. S. Gazette relates the following:—A gentleman had an old and valued horse whose sight was defective. For some time past he evinced a tendency to stumble, and to strain his sight at objects close to him in a manner that set the owner to devising a remedy. He judged that with a pair of glasses the horse would do as well as in prime. An optician ground to order a pair of pebble spectacles, about the size of the object glasses of a large orgaelte (opera-glass.) They were fixed in a frame over the horse's eyes, and no elderly gentleman ever showed a greater appreciation of the convenience. When put in the stable the spectacles are removed.—Boston Cultivator.

NOVEL WAY OF PRODUCING EARLY POTATOES.—The Irish Farmers' Gazette says:—"A sample of very fine kidney potatoes (Moss's Pride), 4 and 5 inches long, has been shown in this office, grown in the demesne of Andrew M'Cullagh, Esq., St. Brendon's, Coolock, on a peculiar system. His gardener, Mr. Byrne, has found out a mode (which he preserves as a strict secret) of growing potatoes in the open air, without permitting the sets to produce tops; the new crop coming direct from the eyes of the old potatoes, and to which they are attached, and it seems that this crop has taken but six weeks to come to perfection and that from the same piece of land he has had two crops in twelve weeks, commencing about the 5th March last. The advantages of this system are, that there is no forcing, no manure, and that the surface can be occupied by other small garden crops that require both light and air to bring them to perfection. We have seen many years ago new potatoes repeatedly produced during the winter season by packing the whole potatoes in layers in a mixture of earth and coal ashes on hurdles in a dry out-house, but how Mr. Byrne at this season (when all nature puts on her holiday garb in green and gorgeous tinting) prevents the potatoes from putting forth their green stems and leaves, and yet produces new potatoes, is to us a mystery.

See what the most popular and widely circulated periodicals say of our Establishment:

From the "Dispatch" of February 25, 1865.

We take pleasure in calling the attention of our readers to the announcement of Messrs. Devaugh & Co.'s Great Sale of Jewelry, Silver Ware, and Fancy Goods, in our advertising columns. We are personally acquainted with the members of this firm and know them to be gentlemen of sterling worth and integrity. Their stock of goods, for variety and extent, we have scarcely seen paralleled.

From the "Mirror of Fashion," March 1, 1865.

Messrs. Devaugh & Co.'s Great Sale of Jewelry, etc., opened on the 15th ult., and we venture to say that no finer display of goods was ever exhibited by any establishment in this city. The ladies thronged their bazaar almost to suffocation, although the streets were rendered nearly impassable by the melted snow and slush. We predict for them a wonderful success.

From the "Ledger," February 28, 1865.

Our lady friends should visit the extensive establishment of Messrs. Devaugh & Co., No. 15 Maiden Lane, if they wish to indulge themselves with a sight which they will long remember. Such a profusion of elegant Watches Chains, Rings, Earrings, and, in short, of Jewelry of every name, kind and description, we never before witnessed. Their silver and plated ware is superb and almost casts into the shade the other splendid establishments which have long been the boast of our city. It is estimated that their stock is worth not less than one million of dollars.

PIANO-FORTES

DRIGGS' NEW PATENT.

ARE THE ONLY INSTRUMENTS constructed on a truly scientific principle. That have greater strength, and will remain longer in tune than any other Piano. The construction is simple and natural, all the extraneous lumber in the body of the instrumen is dispensed with; the sound boards are merely two arched planks of thin wood, like the front and back of a violin; the strings re attached to a strong iron fram , which is separate and entirel. independe t of the case, thereby dispensing with the old heap form of stringing' by substituting straight bridges, preserving at the same time The river Strung Bass, of which Mr Driggs is the inventor. By these improvements we gain much more vibratory power, at the same time preserving all its purity and richness of tone.

They have received the highest testimonials from the Press, and all the principal artists in the country, among which are:

Harry Sanderson,	L. M. Gottschalk,
Max Maretzek,	S. Thalberg,
Theodore Eisfield,	Wm. Mason,
Herman Wolfenbuapt,	A. Barili,
Francis H. Brown,	M. Strackosch,
Wm. Henry Fry,	Charles Fradel

Mr. EGESMUND THALBERG, the great pianist, says:—I have examined your new Piano-fortes and I cordially approve of its system of construction. Its principle, by which great increase of vibratory power is obtained, being very simple and perfectly philosophical. The tone is grand and noble; it has great capacity for sustaining the sound or singing, and its volume of tone or power I have never heard excelled in depth, purity and sympathetic sweetness.

Wm HENRY FRY, late musical critic of the N. Y. Tribune says:—I have examined your newly invented Piano-Fortes They merit all the praise given to them by Messrs. Thalberg, Gottschalk, Strackosch, Mason and others As regards the structure, they are original and philosophical; in purity, volume, and continuity of tone; in vocal versimilitude, that crowning excellence which enables the pianists to "sing" on the instrument. Your Pianos deserve the highest rank. Your invention, in my opinion, is destined to work radical changes in the manufacture of Pianos throughout the world.

From the N. Y. Herald, Sept. 5.—Upon a careful examination of Driggs Piano-Forte, we find the results obtained are a very fine singing tone, great purity and brilliancy throughout the entire instrument, not often found in Pianos constructed upon the old plan.

The N. Y. Times, July 12, says:—We have now an instrument without an equal. It can sing with a smoothness delicacy, perfectly unattainable on any other instrument; an ordinary player obtains with no exertion, the fullness of a Grand Piano Forte' and they must speedily supercede the old styles.

GENTLEMEN:—Having thoroughly examined and tested the Piano-Fortes invented and patented by Mr. S. B. Driggs, I am of the opinion that the tone resulting from his improvements, as exhibited in the instruments under examination, in points of richness, depth and brilliancy, equals that of the best Grand Piano-Fortes, and excells them in pure, musical and actual tone, power thus approximating closer to what I consider perfection in the instrument than has yet been achieved by any other system of manufacture.

Yours respectfully,
L. M. GOTTSCHALK.

ARE YOU IN AGONY?

A WELL SPRING OF HOPE FOR ALL!

CAN BE FOUND IN

Holloway's Pills.

Be of Good Cheer! The Sinking may be Saved!

BY THE USE OF

Holloway's Ointment.

THE history of these great Remedies is the most wonderful medical revelation that the world has ever known. It establishes the all important fact that WHENEVER, and in WHATEVER shape internal disease exists, the disinfecting, searching and healing properties of the Pills are fully equal to its subjection and cure, and that, with the Ointment, they are

The Great Ambassadors of Health to all Mankind.

This is not a history written by one man, or even derived from the experiences of one nation It consists of a compilation of testimonials from the sick of every country—an unimpeachable record the like of which has never been adduced in favor of any discovery or invention since time began.

These Mighty Healers, World Known and World Tried are a Boon to the Sick

The want of a sterling medicinal to meet the ills and necessities of the suffering portion of humanity, and one entirely free from mineral and other deleterious particles, was severely felt till this all powerful medicine was ushered into the world; HOLLOWAY'S INVALUABLE PILLS have become the HOUSEHOLD REMEDY of all nations. Their attribute is to PREVENT as well as to CURE; they attack the RADIX OR ROOT of the complaint, and thus, by removing the hidden cause of disease, re-invigorate and restore the drooping energies of the system, assisting nature in her task of VITAL AND FUNCTIONARY REFORMATION.

Disorders of the Stomach

Are the sources of the deadliest maladies. Their effect is to irritate all the fluids of the body, and to send a poisoned stream through all the channels of circulation. Now, what is the operation of the Pills? They cleanse the bowels, regulate the liver, bring the relaxed or irritated stomach into a natural condition, and, acting through the secretive organs UPON THE BLOOD ITSELF, change the state of the system from sickness to health, by exercising a simultaneous and wholesome effect upon all its parts and functions.

Woman in all her Difficulties

Is invited to test the regulating and restorative powers of this harmless but effective preparation. At the two epochs of life in which the female system undergoes the most important and critical changes, the Pills will prove a positive safeguard against evil consequences. They are also confidently recommended as a specific in every disorder to which females are exclusively subject.

Be it Understood,

That the above statements can at all times be verified by the written testimony (extending through a quarter of a century) of tens of thousands of unimpeachable witnesses.

Bilious Maladies, &c., &c.

In whatever form disease attacks the liver, it is compelled and exterminated by this searching, painless, and irresistable curative. Bilious remittents, bilious purging, and all the ordinary disorders of the organ, indicated by pain in the right side and between the shoulders, yellowness of the whites of the eyes, weakness and debility, &c., are relieved and removed by the remedy, with a celerity which astonishes the sufferers and their friends. Let the sick whom the faculty have abandoned, resort with confidence to this powerful anti-bilious agent, and a restoration to health and activity will be the unvarying result.

Dyspepsia, Diarrhœa, Weakness, &c. &c

The terrible bodily and mental pangs which characterise Dyspepsia are at once mitigated by the Pills. Diarrhœa, constipation, headache, physical prostration, nervous tremors, hot flushes, spasms, affections of the kidneys, hemorrhoids (piles and, in fact, all internal complaints, from whatever cause arising, give way before the salutary influence of this extraordinary remedy. As a specific for dyspepsia, and the disorders connected with it, or growing out of it, the Pills are always to be relied on when every other medicine and mode of treatment has utterly failed.

Holloway's Pills are the best Remedy known for the following diseases:

Asthma,	Headaches,
Bowel Complaints,	Indigestion,
Coughs,	Influenza,
Colds,	Inflamation,
Chest Diseases,	Inward Weakness,
Costiveness,	Liver Complaints,
Dyspepsia,	Lowness of Spirits,
Diarrhœa,	Piles,
Dropsy,	Stone and Gravel,
Debility,	Secondary Symptoms,
Fever and Ague,	Venral Affections,
Female Complaints,	Worms of all kinds.

CAUTION.

If the readers of this "notice" cannot get a box of Pills or Ointment from the drug store in his place, let him write to me, enclosing the amount, and I will mail a box free of expense. Many dealers will not keep my medicines on hand because they cannot make as much profit as on other persons' make.

None are genuine unless the words "Holloway New York and London," are discernible as a Water Mark in every leaf of the book of directions around each box; the same may be plainly seen by holding the leaf to the light. A handsome reward will be given to any one rendering such information as may lead to the detection of any party or parties counterfeiting the medicines or vending the same knowing them to be spurious.

 Sold at the manufactory of Professor HOLLOWAY, 80 Maiden Lane, New York, and by all respectable Druggists and Dealers in Medicine throughout the United States and the civilized world, in boxes, at 25 cents, 63 cents, and $1 40 each.

☞ There is considerable saving by taking the larger sizes. 33

INTEMPERANCE.

How long, oh Holy Father,
Shall this dark presence dwell
In our fair land, its victims
The hosts of ruined swell?
We weep; our tears avail not,
And willing arms are weak;
They stretch to rescue vainly,
And vainly still they seek.

To vanquish the dread monster,
Oh must the countless tears,—
The strivings weak but earnest—
Be lost, and must the years
Still bear to the dark future
The demon's countless throng
Of hapless writhing victims
Before our gaze? How long?

Shall prayer be unavailing;
Forever is thine ear
Grown heavy, that the wailings
Of grief thou dost not hear?
Is thine eye dim; does anguish
Attract no more thy sight;
Are the abodes of misery
Unseen, thine arm of might.

Has it grown weak? Oh Father,
As thou art changeless, save
Our country's sons; oh conquer
Intemperance! the brave,
But wearied, strengthen; hasten
In thine own time the day
When prayers shall yield to praises,
And tears be wiped away.

Oh weary ones take courage,
Your strivings are not vain,
Nor are your prayers unheeded—
They shall not come again
Unto you void; take courage;
Deliverance will come,
Through Him girt on your armour
And chase the demon home.

"FAITHFUL AND TRUE."

A TALE IN THREE PARTS.

By the Author "Grasp your Nettle."

PART III.

(CONCLUDED.)

The shipwreck seemed none the less imminent when, about a week after the party, Miss Le Jeune and her neice called at the Hall with the unmistakeable air and manner of success which tell of a woman's triumph.

'We were sorry you were not at Mr. Hunter's the other night,' began Miss Annie with the most affable manner and in her sweetest voice: she had a great many manners and voices too.

'I hear it was a pleasant evening,' answered Mrs. St. John curtly.

'Oh, delightful! the most delightful evening I have ever had!' cried Miss Annie enthusiastically. I had no idea that Mr. Hunter's house had such capabilities of beauty.

'It is a capital house,' said Georgie, when her sister, disdaining a reply, took to knitting her zebra sofa-cover with portentous energy, 'and has plenty of room for all kinds of beautifying.'

She meant simply what she said, that the space was so large you could do what you liked in it: but Miss Annie told Mr. Hunter, in good faith too that she was repeating the sentiment if a little confusing the words, that Miss Fenton had said, when she, Miss Annie, had praised his house, that 'there was plenty of room for improvement, though it was a large place.' And as Mr. Hunter was proud of his house, and, like many men who calculate the artistic value of a purchase by its money cost, exceedingly proud of his taste which he believed to be superior to most men's, poor little Georgie's reported sarcasm did not help to make things sweeter between them.

'You should have been there, Miss Fenton,' continued Miss Annie: 'why were you not? I was looking for you all the evening, and made so sure you would come!'

'We were not asked,' said Georgie smiling: she smiled at Miss Annie's transparent falsehood.

'Not asked? Why not? Why you' emphasized a little satirically, 'were always such a favourite of Mr. Hunter's! What have you been doing to get out of favour?

Miss Annie's eyes were called grey; but they were of the kind which become sea-green under the influence of certain emotions; and they were green now.

'There have been some painful matters between Mr. Hunter and us,' said little Georgie; 'and as he is angry with us, it is scarcely likely he would ask us. I thought every one in the place knew that he had cut us,' she added, in her turn looking straight into Miss Turnbull's face.

'And we always thought you were to be mistress of The Oaks,' said that lady, maliciously. 'How strangely things turn out in this life!'

'Yes,' said Georgie; 'but it would have been more strange if I had ever been mistress of Mr. Hunter's house.'

Miss Annie gave a little laugh. She thought so too, now. 'There might be worse fates,' she said, smoothing the back of her glove, and looking down demurely.

'A great many,' said Georgie frankly; 'to be mistress of such a place as that would be a most enviable position to most women.'

Oh! then, it is the man you dislike!' cried Miss Annie, looking up, her eyes very green indeed, and her face in a manner radiant with malice.

'I did not say so,' answered little Georgie firmly: 'I never said I disliked Mr. Hunter, because I do not; but we may like a friend most sincerely and yet not wish to marry him. People never seem to think that possible,' she continued warmly.—'You are accused of personal dislike so soon as you will not marry any one, no matter what your reason: as if one could marry all the people one likes as friends and acquaintances!' she added, arching her eyebrows as was her pretty trick when excited.

'Well, Miss Fenton, don't be angry,' answered Miss Annie, just a trifle insolently. 'I am sure I had no intention of exciting or displeasing, you are always so excitable—it is such a pity!'

Georgie laughed. She was too good-tempered to take offence; besides, she was not really excitable. She had only a vehement manner sometimes—not often.

'Good-bye, then,' said the ladies, aunt and neice, rising to take leave. 'Good morning, Mrs. St. John,' continued Miss Le Jeune. 'And do not be very much surprised if you should hear something more particular some day soon,' with an arch glance to where Miss Annie stood twisting her muff.

'Oh, aunt!' said Miss Annie; but she did not blush, though she whispered.

'I'm sure I don't know about hearing anything particular,' returned Mrs. St. John, tartly. 'I hope it won't be anything disgraceful if we do—that's all.

'I know what you mean, Miss Le Jeune,' said Georgie good-naturedly, 'and when we are told officially that we may, I am sure we will all congratulate you most heartily!' and she looked the heartiness she spoke of.

'What a fool you are, Georgina!' said her sister, when they were alone.

'Aunt, I cannot make that girl out! Is she a simple ass?' said Miss Annie, when they also were alone.

'I can, my dear; she is in love with some one else,' answered Miss Le Jeune.

'But who can it be, aunt? There is no one in the place to fall in love with—except Mr. Hunter,' said Miss Annie. But the saving clause a little dragged, as if it had been forced out by reflection.

'Perhaps it is with Mr Denn, or Adolphus Globb,' Miss Le Jeune answered. 'But whoever it is, she is in love with some one, you may be sure.'

Fortunately for Georgie neither of them remembered the ex-secretary, or connected that drive in the dog-cart with the present rejection of the iron-merchant's hand and the ruin of the Fenton family.

Ruin, indeed! for now there was no reprieve possible. Mr. Hunter had been struck, and well struck too—struck home, while the iron was fiery hot with indignation—and he had yielded to the blows and been hammered into the shape desired. Suddenly he awoke to the consciousness of Miss Turnbull's manifold perfections; he became quite a convert to the doctrine of blood as exemplified in her birth and condition—he the son of a day-labourer in the mines, and whose highest post had been captain of the mine!—he, the despiser of all the mylords that ever lived, in favour of the self-made men shaping the coarse clay of their own fortunes by their own hands! Also at the same time he found out that auburn hair and green-grey eyes were far more beautiful than chesnut hair and dark blue eyes; that Miss Le Jeune was worth a dozen Mrs. St. Johns; that Miss Annie Turnbull put Miss Fenton in the shade in everything—mind, manners, appearance and character; in a word, he formally recanted his professions of faith to little Georgie by making an offer of marriage to Miss Annie, which was accepted without even the pretence of blushing.

Accepted and rendered irrevocable by the grand ceremony which took place in the parish church not two month after that tremendous snow-storm when Charley Dunn and Louisa Globb had called at the Hall, and Mr. Hunter had stayed to dine and make love to Georgie after. The whole thing was rather too hurried, perhaps, for true aristocratic dignity; and its very haste expressed both Mr. Hunter's feverish dissatisfaction with himself and his dread and Miss Le Jeune's dread, on her side, lest some untoward accident should occur even at the eleventh hour to prevent penniless neice Annie from becoming Mrs. Samuel Harmer Hunter and the mistress of The Oaks after all.

And now what could the Fenton family do but bow their heads to the inexorable decree of fate and marriage, and die decently at the foot of the great statue of Debt as soc al somebodies henceforth reduced to mere ghosts? Their funeral hymn was sung in noisy fashion enough—set to the jarring chords of the auctioneer's hammer when he put up the old Hall for sale, and Mr. Hunter became its purchaser for a sum not quite two thirds its real value; when all the neighbourhood swept through the desecrated rooms, and chaffered for precious relics. Fortunately they saved enough out of the wreck to give them a small means of living; 'better than the workhouse, but only just better,' said Mrs. St. John; and indeed two hundred a year to the past owner of the Hall with its park and pleasant crofts, its conservatory and pretty model cottages, its gardens, seductive shrubberies, gay glass houses, and all the other charms of an English country estate, was little short of beggary—a pittance barely lifting them above actual starvation, as it seemed to them. So this was where Georgie's motto had landed her; and out of 'Faithful and True' was spelled the fall of one of the most ancient families in or about Brough Bridge. But though grieved and cast down, and sometimes a little bewildered, Georgie had never wavered, and never felt the sacrifice ill bestowed. 'He will surely come back to me,' she used to say to herself. 'God will preserve his life for me, and I know that he will keep his faith untouched!'

This change of fortune brought with it other changes in the family; for Mr. and Mrs. St. John, no longer finding their account in home housekeeping, went off into the world to try what fortune would come to them through a woman's sh ewishness and a man's openness; and Georgie and her old father were left alone. Which was just the best thing that could have happened to them: it brought them nearer together when love was their only consolation; and, strange as it seemed, the old man was happier now than he had ever been in his life before. For Georgie, doing what she could to repair the mischief she had caused, devoted herself to him with all the intensity of her nature, careful only that his last days should be calm and blessed, and full of the truest dignity and sweetest solace.

The Brough Bridge people stood bravely by their deposed princes. True, they were toadies, as are all who are poor and worldly both; but they were also aristocratic, and loyal to their leaders even when in exile. Like devotees to whom the mutilated torso is still the god, they recognized the glory of the Fenton past in the respect which they paid to the Fenton present. The carriages that used to come sweeping up that bold curve before the Hall windows now drew meekly by the little gate which led into the small cottage-garden; and it became a point of honour with them all to include 'little George' in every matter of gaiety set on foot. The same people looked smilingly on Mr. and Mrs. Hunter, of course; no one thought of making the Fenton's a party question—not even Charley Dunn, who had felt it as keenly as if it had happened to own sister; but though they looked an ingly, and calculated the dances and suppers and the good dinners and the archery meetings, and all the other pleasures emanating from the new inmates of the Hall, as worth the sacrifice of a little puritanical sincerity, yet the retired iron merchant lost more real popularity by his conduct to the Fentons than he would ever regain if he stayed for generations at Borough Bridge. And he knew this, too, and so did Miss Le Jeune and Mrs. Hunter. A country Place is one huge Dionysius' ear, and even whishers are carried on the heads of the waving corn, or on the breath of the evening wind; and that Midas has asses's is known to all the gossips for miles around—as to Midas himself—if only told to the eglantine in the hedges, or to the clouds in the sky. For when reason he hated (or thought he hated, which answered the same purpose) little Georgie and her father with increased intensity, and never let slip an opportunity when he might hurt her, and so turn the arrow in his own wound dextriously. But she, comforted in her patient duties, secure in her love, and not ill at ease in her conscience, bore everything with unruffled equanimity, and did not envy Annie Turnbull either her husband or her grand home, knowing as surely what greater grace would be hers in the days to come—knowing the reward of constancy and the triumph of faith that would justify her to the world, as she had been already justified to her own soul.

Months passed. The seasons blossomed, and ripened, and waned; winter came again and after the winter the spring, and then the autumn time and winter once more. Little Georgie's girlhood like the spring time, came up to its lovelies culmination, and then passed into the summer of mature womanhood; but still no lover came over the seas to make her his wife, and still she was fed on hope alone. People said she would be an old maid—oh! she was certain to be one, unless she would marry Charley Dunn at last, as a reward for his many years of devotion; but as for any one else—then there was an expressive shrug—poor Georgie Fenton! her day was gone by, and such a sweet pretty creature as she was once, too! Charley Dunn, however, 'didn't do,' somehow; and Georgie remained single at the little cottage, devoted to her father, and wearing the same sweet look of inward content which had become habitual to her since their fall.—Strange, was it not, that she should be so happy under their ruin?

The old father at last began to droop, and Georgie was soon to be alone. It was in the autumn time, when the days were short and gloomy, and the nights were long and dull, and when loneliness is as bad as actual suffering. Yet this trial, too, little Georgie had to undergo. Her father died just as the winter set in; and henceforth her hearth was unshared and her house was empty. She suffered, too, in income; for the old man, true to his habitual indolence, made a will—would make none—and the two sisters shared the property between them, each having about a hundred a year, the one for her private pocket money, and the other for her maintenance. And then it was that Georgie had her second eligible offer, in the person of the newly appointed vicar of the parish, a young and very estimable man, whom she refused for the sake of that shadowy love of hers over the seas among the barbarians, whose faith she believed in as in the sunshine of to-morrow, and whose love was dearer to her than her life. 'Faithful and True,'—so she would never forget Roger Lewin's motto!

Georgie's hundred a-year was, of course, at her own absolute disposal. It was little enough to live on, but with care and good management it did pretty well; better in the country where she was known, than in a town among strangers, where she should be judged according to her means only.—The capital was in the funds, yielding the standard three and a half per cent.; and more than one adviser counselled her to sell out and invest in something more lucrative; not a few advised her to speculate boldly—not wildly, but with judgment and insight; advising her as if she had been a stock-broker herself, and knew all the mysteries of set ling-day, and time-bargains, and bills of exchange, and Capel Court stags, and all the rest of it, instead of being a little ignorant country goose, who never could be made to comprehend even the art and science of banking. For a long time she turned a deaf ear to everything proposed; but, not being obstinate save on one point, she finally yielded, and gave a power of attorney to Mr. St. John for the sale of her three thousand pounds, he having promised her in a memorable letter always rising up in judgment against him, that it should be invested in a mortgage he had handy, giving her, at five per cent., one hundred and fifty pounds a-year, instead of a hundred and five. Georgie thought the odd forty-five would be very welcome; and she knew that mortgages were as safe as consols; so she thanked her brother-in-law for his kindness, sold out her store, and sat down to her lonely dinner, quite rich in anticipation.

Mr. St. John took her money; and did not invest it in the mortgage. With the best intentions in the world, he bought some shares in a foreign mine which was to make every one's fortune, really thinking that he had thereby secured Georgie a handsome independence for life. Stephen St. John was one of those feather-headed men who never learn caution from experience, and who are forever twisting Atlantic cables out of sea-sand.

The consequences so fatally sure to ensue to all women who speculate at first hand or second, came to Georgie. The foreign mines, after raising an enormous sum from English speculators, suddenly collapsed; and Georgie, and Mr. St. John himself, and all others who had trusted in them, woke up one morning to irreparable disaster. It was as if the dykes had broken loose in the night; or Solway Moss had again suddenly marched forth, pouring stones and mud and ruin over their whole estates. So now surely the cup was full, and 'Faithful and True' was the asp round its edge—a mere will-o'-the-wisp, leading her by false likeness of warmth and light through nothing but swamps and quagmires!

She was ruined: more hopelessly than even when Mr. Hunter sent off his angry letter of instructions to Mr. Pike—than even when the old Hall was put up for sale to the highest bidder, and knocked down to her rejected lover at two-thirds its real value. For a moment she felt stunned and a little sick, when she read Mr. St. John's letter. The world looked so large, and blank, and dark to her!—and yet she had to go out into it, and make her way through its desolation as she best could. Earnestly she desired to remain at Brough Bridge; but by what magic process to get her living out of the inhabitants of this poorly-dowried place? The attempt seemed very hopeless; and yet it must be made; for she must live by work if she would not starve in idleness. She had but one resource: few women have more, or other—she could teach. At least she ought to be able to do so, for she had been well taught herself; and there were a few young creatures about whose minds wanted training such as she perhaps could supply as well as another: and specially there were Mr. Hunter's two children at the Hall—the one a girl of seven, and the other a boy of five—who would come under her hand very well. So Georgie had some circulars printed, in which it was set forth that Miss Fenton would engage herself as instructress in all manner of arts and sciences to all requiring her services, at so much a week: by no means too high terms, poor Georgie! These circulars she sent to all the people round about; and, among others, to 'Mrs. Samuel Harmer Hunter' (the lady liked all her names to be used). 'The Hall.'

'I heard she was ruined,' said Mr. Hunter, morosely. He was seldom anything but morose, especially to his wife.

'And I suppose that is why you have been in such a dreadful temper these last few day,' retorted his wife, whose soul had never shaken off its jealousy, nor her eyes cleared themselves of their sea-green.

'I did not know that I had been particularly disagreeable,' said Mr. Hunter with a sneer. 'I know too well by this time that I am always disagreeable to you, Mrs. Hunter, whatever mood I may be in.'

'Upon my word, you are not a bad guesser,' said Mrs. Hunter with an unpleasant laugh. 'You are becoming quite brilliant in your old age!'

Then she went to her 'davenport,' and without more word, or anything like consultation with her husband, wrote off to Miss Fenton a cold offer of an engagement for three days in the week only, to teach her two children all they ought to know.

Georgie quivered a little when she received this note. She had never been on visiting terms with the Hunters since their marriage; and of late scarcely on bowing terms. As time wore on, Mr. Hunter had become more and more severe against her; her every trial seeming not to soften, but to anger and inflame him—thinking, with as much bitterness as wounded self-love, of the fine position she had thrown away for a disgraceful fancy, and of the insult she had offered him in her rejection and most shameful preference. Which showed that at least the hurt of love remained, if of a soured and heated kind, not even skinned over with pity or forgiveness. But painful as it was to her to go to the Hall under any circumstances—doubly painful under the present—it would not do to let sentiment and feeling interfere with her life, thought Georgie; so she buckled on her armour, and answered Mrs. Hunter in her own form, accepting the engagement proffered, and proposing to begin next Monday. It was now Friday.

'I have engaged that Miss Fenton,' said Mrs. Hunter, contemptuously tossing Georgie's note to her husband. He took it with almost a start; but so easily suppressed that Mrs. Hunter saw only a certain quickness of movement, which might have been mere rudeness or gaucherie of manner—'snatching like a monkey,' as she phrased it. 'I suppose she is capable of teaching them the rudiments,' she added, even more offensively.

'I should say better than their mother,' retorted Mr. Hunter, who had passed into the phase of utter disbelief in any virtue, quality or acquirement of his wife's.

'Of course you think so!' said Mrs. Hunter, with her unpleasant laugh. 'What a pity it was she did not reciprocate your high esteem!'

And then they betook themselves to their daily occupation of jangling, which they followed with as much zeal as if their bread depended on its continuance for a given time unchecked.

The day of trial came; and Georgie went to the Hall, for the first time since she left it with her old father, a ruined man through her. There was the old place, the conservatory, where she and Roger had so often had their brief stolen meetings; the large bay-windows, where she used to steal a few precious moments more, when lynx-eyed sister Carry was out of sight and hearing; shrubbery where she played as a child; the fields behind the house, where the red cow once ran at her (she could just see the green through the trees, and the old thorn standing in the midst); the way to the back door; and the very kitchen-window-sill askew, where old Jane, the cook, had so often given her 'sugar-bread,' through the bars—all the old memories of the past crowding on her so as to flood as she went slowly up the walk, scenting the flowers, and recognizing every bush and plot, till she stood on the broad low step, and knocked at the door.

In the hall stood Mr. Hunter, cold, stony, and insolent with that insolence of despair which knows there is nothing to be had from love. But Georgie had nerved herself, so did not shrink. She went to her work with something of the desperate courage of a man going up to the cannon's mouth, and resolved to undergo what might be appointed. She bowed to the master as she passed, and he coldly to her; yet the sight of her face in her own hall moved him, and he thought of the time he saw her last there, she in all the bloom of girlhood, and he in the flush and confidence of love. She was but just twenty then; now she was eight and twenty, and her youth had gone, and years of care and sorrow had dimmed her beauty, and traced on her face the tracks and courses of the future deepened lines—not so far off now. But still the countenance was sweet and tranquil, and pure and loving as always. And when he thought of what it was that shone upon it, and of his own humiliation, his heart turned into stone again, and he drew back the hand he had more than half extended to welcome her.

And so she passed him without a word of greeting, and followed the servant into the drawing-room, where sat Miss Annie Turnbull translated, in her usual aristocratic and transcendant insolence.

Mrs. Hunter bowed as her guest entered; but she did not rise from her place, and she did not offer her hand. 'I presume, Miss Fenton, you are capable of the charge you assume, and of the trust reposed in you?' she said at once, without further preamble, tranquilly continuing her occupation.

'Your children are not very far advanced, I suppose?' answered Georgie quietly. 'I do not feel afraid to undertake their education. Would you like to put me through a preliminary examination?'

Mrs. Hunter looked up sharply. Was Georgie Fenton really a fool, as she had so often called her, or was there a subtle secret sarcasm in this, almost beyond her own powers of penetration? She read nothing in the quiet face looking full into hers, but she got uncomfortable herself, and with her discomfort somewhat more insolent.

'I scarcely think there is any necessity for that,' she said, as if half-doubtful on the point. 'You were educated as a gentlewoman, and I have no doubt have retained sufficient traces and reminiscences of that time to be an efficient trainer of a lady's nursery. But of course, both Mr. Hunter and myself are particular—very particular, indeed—as to the person we place about the children, and you must forgive me for being explicit.'

'You are quite right to be particular, and explicit too,' answered Georgie; 'and I will give you all the information respecting myself that you like to ask. Would you like to know the school I went to when I was young? and about poor dear mamma's family?'

Again Mrs. Hunter was startled; but not liking to undertake a duel where her adversary kept her weapon masked, she prudently retreated. 'What nonsense you are talking, Miss Fenton!' she said tartly; 'as if I did not know all about you well enough by this time!'

'Then I do not see the good of prolonging this conversation,' said Georgie firmly. She had gained her point. 'You know all about me, you say, and have agreed to my terms; had I not then better begin at once with the children, instead of taking up your valuable time longer? If you agree to my teaching them at all,' she continued a little hastily, 'it is really a waste of time to enter into the question of my capacity, or whether I am fitted by education and habits to be one the governess of two little children of five and seven!'

'You have not conquered your old excitability, I see,' said Mrs. Hunter coldly, ringing the bell. 'Show Miss Fenton into the school-room,' she said, as the servant entered. 'Good morning, Miss Fenton; I hope I shall have reason to be satisfied with you in every respect,' she added, as Georgie, bowing to her more haughtily than he seemed a poor governess quitting the presence of her patroness, walked away to enter on her first day's duties as governess to the Harmer Hunter children at the old Hall.

When she went home that night, she cried herself to sleep like a baby. But she did not give in; the path appointed for her walking was rough, and lonely, and stony enough, and her heart failed her for fear of its terrible ways and the pitfalls besetting it: but she knew that she ought to go through with it to the end, letting neither temper nor sentiment move her; and she did so.

This was the beginning of Georgie Fenton's teaching the undeveloped young at Brough Bridge; and soon she had quite a sufficient clientele to make her easy about the butcher and baker, and such grim ogres of destiny waiting at the back of all unprotected females, self-helping, whose own hands are their only safeguards against destruction. She gained, too, in respect, if that were possible; for the Brough Bridge people liked her much as a fashion to them, and loved to contrast it with the flighty recklessness of the present day, when girls are never satisfied unless they are upsetting all over the world,' as the old Admiral said, puckering up his little shrivelled monkey face curiously. Even old Lady Scratchly, who had never been a profound admirer of the Fentons in their palmy days, offered Miss Georgie free bed and board, and twenty pounds a year 'compliment,' (she was an euphemistic old lady, that!) if she choose to go to Laburnum Cottage as a nominal guest, but in reality as companion; which was a great deal to unmask from beneath that wonderful be-flowered wig, seeing that, as it was, the old Lady could hardly get both tattered ends to meet, and calculated months and leases as if she were calculating diamonds and their settings.—

THE VISIT.

On Wednesday the members of the corporation of the city of Rochester made a flying visit to this town, accompanied by the members of the corporation of Port Hope, and also a few of the citizens of both places.—They were accompanied by a brass band from Rochester, also one from Port Hope. The circumstances that led to the visit were as nearly as possible these. The town of Port Hope had invited the members of the corporation of the city of Rochester to pay them a visit. Mr. Fowler, of the P. H. L. and B. Railway, then offered to place a special train at their service, and thus bring them to this place. As soon as it was known that they were surely coming, the members of the Council set to work to give them as courteous and cordial a welcome as the time to prepare would permit, there being only a few hours from the knowledge of the certainty of their coming. At a meeting of the Council called for considering the best manner of receiving these visitors it was thought best to form a Committee of the Council in conjunction with others to carry out necessary arrangements. The committee chosen consisted of Colonel Haultain, who was chosen chairman, Sheriff Hall, R. Dennistoun, Esq., Hon. Sidney Smith, and about 40 others, but from want of space at this late hour we cannot give their names.

Col. Haultain, R. Dennistoun, Esq., and E. Burnham, Esq., were then appointed a committee to draft an address.

Messrs. Hall, Stevenson and Ormond to make necessary preparations in the way of edibles.

Messrs. Toole, Helm, Ewing, Romaine and Millar to provide carriages to convey the party to the principle places around the town. All of which was done in good order.

The number that came was about 45, Aldermen, representatives of the Press, &c., from Rochester; and about 30, Councillors and representatives of the Press, from Port Hope.

THE RECEPTION AT THE STATION.

The train arrived at 10 o'clock, half an hour earlier than expected, having come in one hour. Immediately on landing on the platform, Mayor Quinlan, of Port Hope, introduced the Mayor of Rochester to Col. Haultain, M.P.P., and said that for the time being he would deliver him and the remainder of the visitors into the care of the Colonel and the members of the corporation of Peterborough.

Just then Colonel Haultain read the following short and very appropriate address:

To the Mayor and Members of the Corporation of the City of Rochester.

GENTLEMEN:

We, members of the Town Council of the Town of Peterborough, and the inhabitants generally, having heard of your intended visit to their neighborhood, gladly avail themselves of the occasion to bid you a cordial welcome.

If, as a young community, they have not many works of a prominent public character to which they can invite your attention, they can point to the noble river that flows past their doors, containing elements of power and prosperity, which, they believe, only wait the development of the vast mineral and other resources of the surrounding country, to be more generally utilized.

They thank you for this visit, and trust that these national courtesies and kindnesses may be encouraged and continued, and that they may tend to awaken and deepen those sentiments of respect and good will, that should ever mutually exist between nations so nearly allied—claiming as they do a common origin, speaking the same language and enjoying the inestimable privileges of civil and religious liberty.

FRED. W. HAULTAIN,
Member for County of Peterborough.

To which the Mayor of Rochester, D. D. T. Moore, Esq., replied extempore.

Mr. Mayor of Peterborough and Gentlemen:

Most cordially and sincerely do I, in behalf of the members of the corporation of the city of Rochester, return you thanks for the very cordial and generous invitation and welcome thus so unexpectedly and warmly extended to them. We had been to visit Port Hope, and had been well entertained; treated in the most friendly and generous manner.—Nevertheless on receiving an invitation to visit a rural section of the country we gladly availed ourselves of the opportunity, in order that we might see the people and the country both. He found that there was not much difference between Canadians and Americans. They looked a good deal alike; and he hoped that the visit to Peterborough would strengthen the commercial union that at present did exist, and would be the means of doing a little to bring the two people closer together, and concluded by saying that most sincerely, therefore, did he, for those with him, return thanks for the cordial welcome thus extended to them.

Carriages were in readiness to convey the party to the hotel, or to other places at the choice of each. About 100 persons from Rochester and Port Hope, and a number of the citizens of Peterborough, proceeded to see the "sights." First driving past the Union School and Court House, they proceeded to Nassau Mills, of which they took a good view, all expressing themselves astonished at the quantity of lumber these mills are capable of turning out daily, declaring they had not seen anything like it before.—They then returned down the Douro side, through Ashburnham, by which means they had a splendid view of the town. In passing through, many of them declared that few towns or cities, on this side of here, showed such signs of progress and energy. The neat streets, fine buildings and large establishments were subjects of wonder, in such a young place.

THE LUNCH.

After all this sight-seeing they were taken to Calnes's Hotel, where a sumptuous lunch was ready, to which about 100 sat down—the large dining-room of this commodious hotel being crowded. Suffice it to say, that from what we saw, both our Canuck and Canadienne did ample justice to the good things, giving evident proof of good appetites.

Then came the toasts, of which we can only give the order:—1st, Col. Haultain, in a few well-placed remarks, said that he would propose the health of one, whom as a Royal personage, as a parent, and as an individual every one delighted to honor, her character in all these respects standing pre-eminent. He would, therefore, without saying more, propose the health of Queen Victoria, which was responded to heartily. The Colonel then said that in respect for the present ruler of the United States, and sympathy for the past, he would now give a toast that he felt sure would be received with genuine good will. He, therefore, proposed the President of the United States, which was received with deafening cheers. Then the Governor General of British North America was received with equal warmth.

Colonel Haultain next proposed "Our Guests," remarking that America was large enough for both; hoped that the visit would be the means of cementing more closely in friendly attachment the two people who had sprung from one parent stem and were of one blood.

The Mayor of Rochester responded, saying that although not an orator, he could not refrain from gratefully acknowledging the kindness thus shown; said he was delighted with this visit to Peterborough, and especially to see that "big thing"—the Mills—which he knew they could not show anything to compare with. He had come over in that splendid steamer the Corinthian, a "British bottom," and said that nothing yet on Ontario could compare with her.—They were prepared to patronise her, just as if their own. He remarked that they had received good treatment at Port Hope; yet thought that Peterboro' showed stronger signs of a Yankee go-ahead town than Port Hope or any he had yet seen. He referred to our agricultural advantages, saying send us your lumber, your wheat, we will buy and use them. He thought the evident mixture of British blood with Yankee would have a good effect, if the mixture of British firmness with Yankee go-aheadativeness would keep us moderate and save us from a great break. He would be happy to see us in Rochester, and hoped that Port Hope and Peterborough would unite and yet go as one people to see them in Rochester, when they would be kindly received and shown something, although they could not show them a big mill equal to the one seen to-day. He then proposed "Our Hosts;" to which Sheriff Hall and R. Dennistoun, Esq., responded.

Mr. Dennistoun proposed at the conclusion "Members of the Corporation of Port Hope, and the Lessees of the P. H., L. and B. Railway."

The other speakers were Mr. Fowler; Mayor Quinlan; Mayor of Batavia; Mr. Brown, of steamer Corinthian; Alderman Fish, Rochester; and Mr. Draper, President of the Council of Rochester. Time being cried up, all had to leave. Three cheers being given for "our guest," and three for "our hosts."

The whole affair passed off in fine style. The visitors appear to be men of the right stamp for interchange of courtesies, and for arousing and perpetuating kindly feelings and good will. We hope the present visit will have the effect of uniting us more closely in a commercial point of view; anything else we do not yet desire, and we trust that no other union will be sought by either until "both do desire it," as was expressed by Alderman Fish.

PROVINCIAL EXHIBITION.

From all sources we learn that the Provincial Exhibition held this year at London has been equal to any of the preceding ones in the number of entries, and also in the number of visitors. Entries nearly 7000. The London people did not, however, fully come up to their promises in preparations, and acted very selfishly in the entertainment of the delegates from the Lower Provinces. Great taciturnity with the London authorities is found in President's (of the Society) speech. The next annual exhibition will be held in Toronto. The Mayor gives ample promises of preparing and finding accomodations. There appears also to be some dissatisfaction in reference to the appointments to office. The farming part thinking that they are rejected from office in some degree; also from competing in certain classes of thorough breeds. Considerable dissatisfaction was felt concerning the decisions of the Judges, especially in the matter of ploughing; yet the decisions were maintained in every case. This must of necessity be the case, or the appeals would be endless.

It was a subject of discussion whether it would be advisable to have foreign judges. This, if carried into effect, will have a very bad influence, and will destroy the interest of those who cannot compete in certain things. Judges from a distance would almost invariably be men who are noted in some branch of breeding and agriculture; these would favour the exhibitors in those branches here: not that they would do it through fear or favour, but because of the natural bias men have to those things in which they are themselves engaged. It is doubtful, however, whether the thorough breeds are as advantageous to the interests of agriculture as other stock. Experience has invariably shewn that the man who deals most in common grades is more successful as far as gaining wealth is concerned than the man who indulges in the choicest breeds. Some of our best farmers tells us that they can purchase good cattle or sheep easier than raise them. If so, the advisibility of making so much ado about raising thorough breeds is matter for consideration. It is evident that those branches of agriculture that prove most profitable is what suit a new country best, and should receive the greatest encouragement. As the country grows in years and wealth the other things may be attended to.

A FIRE.

On Monday night, or rather Tuesday morning, about 3 o'clock, a brick house in North Monaghan between the Rev. Mr. Gilmour's and James Edwards', Esq., was consumed by fire, evidently the work of an incendiary. The house was lately occupied by M. Millar, Esq. Mr. Millar had just removed the last of his furniture the evening before. Those who arrived first at the fire say that it was fired in three places at once: in the building below, also above, and in the kitchen, as if determined that it should be destroyed.—The buildings was insured for $1,600, and was owned by Mrs. Blackstock. It is a pity that the guilty parties be found out and punished.

THE PIC-NICS.

The liberal donations of the Hon. Billa Flint to the Schools of the Municipalities of this Division, has enabled those different Municipalities to offer very nice rewards, in the way of books, to those pupils who in any way deserved them. In this way some $1200 worth of books has been scattered among the little readers, and as the matter is generally both instructive and moral in its tendency, we trust that the seed thus sown will bear good fruit.

We learn that Mr. Flint contemplates the continuance of the reward system, and desires information on the plans and results of the examinations and festive seasons just concluded. His object is to gain such information as may be of use hereafter, should the scheme be thought worthy of continuance.

ASHBURNHAM.

We can speak very satisfactorily of the result in Ashburnham. The Trustees were enabled, through the liberality of the Council to distribute a large number of prizes in every class. There being but one School, there were prizes for all who deserved one. The Pic-Nic was a very pleasant affair; and as all the examinations were conducted in the School-room, there was nothing but fun and frolic during the day, which the children very much enjoyed.

TOWN.

The prizes for the Town will be distributed at the Christmas examination.

SMITH.

In the Township of Smith, we learn that in the different Schools prizes were awarded according to merit. Then, on the day of the Pic-nic, which was held at Pic-nic Hill, and at which a large number of children and people were present, there was a public examination, conducted by the Superintendent of Smith, assisted by Teachers from other Townships; and special prizes were given to those who proved most successful.

MONAGHAN.

The same plan was carried out in Monaghan as in Smith; and in both these Townships the scheme seems to be pretty popular, if we may judge from what we hear. We regret much that we did not get witnessing the proceedings, so as to give our own views of the result.

OTONABEE.

We have spoken to several Teachers from Otonabee, but can learn very little from any of them. Some of them say they did not hear of it all. This we cannot understand, but would be glad to hear from some of our friends on the matter. Otonabee cannot be behind in this matter surely.

OTHER MUNICIPALITIES.

Will some kind friend send us particulars? It is best to enquire freely as to the results of the present, as a guide to future action.

THE RESULT.

Will all be pleased? Will every one think alike concerning the examinations, examiners, prizes and pic nics? To expect that they would be of one mind—all satisfied—would be too much indeed. Over what are all satisfied or agreed? The successful pupil and his teacher feel all right. They are satisfied enough. With them the whole came off well. But then where are the unsuccessful ones? There will be foul play cries among them. Their children were just as smart; their answering just as good—better, indeed, in some things—and yet, strange fate, were unsuccessful: foul play! foul play! All this may be expected, and more too. Perhaps there will be some gossip and tattle in a few instances: yet this should not discourage. If a stimulus is given—if energy is induced—if progress is effected—if education is advanced by these means, go on. No good need be expected without a little opposition, and perhaps some grievances.

Great praise is due to the worthy donor for what he has already done; and as he contemplates witnessing the whole next year a better time may be expected. Teachers have a whole year to prepare: the best means to success in drill, drill, drill.

New Publication—Farmer's Guide.

Mr. McEvoy, of the firm of Mitchell and Co., is now in town taking subscriptions to the above work, and advertisements to be inserted therein. He has shown us a copy of a similar work for the county of Carlton. The book will be neatly got up, containing about 200 pages, and will contain the names of all the farmers in the counties of Peterborough and Victoria, giving the concession and lot of each, and whether freeholder or householder. It will be an invaluable guide for merchants as it will furnish information for them which they cannot easily obtain from any other source. The enterprize will cost considerable, and deserves to be freely patronized. The cost of the work, bound in muslin, 8vo., will be $1.50; Farmer's copy, $1: Advertisements, etc., $10 a page; half page, $6; quarter page, $4: book included in each case.

New Map of Peterboro' & Ashburnham

Messrs. Fitzgerald & Bolger, of this town, are publishing a new map of the town, and of the village of Ashburnham. It will be about 4½ by 3½ feet, and will contain all the divisions according to the original surveys, and every subdivision of those lots as far as known. The houses will be represented in colours, red for brick, dark for wood, etc. The whole has been got up with care, and by actual survey of each division and subdivision, and will form a very neat reference map of the town and village, and may be relied on as correct. Wards also will be specified, and the names of owners, as far as possible, given. The park lots also, with the present divisions of any of them, will be given. The whole, we learn, will be ready for the lithographer in a few days.

The Saturday Reader.

We regret very much that the second number of this periodical is not as good as the first. It contains an article on Sabbath breaking which ought not to have been permitted to be inserted in the Reader. The third number, however, is a very good one, and we trust that the publisher will not again allow such articles to appear, as they would assuredly destroy its usefulness, and in the end limit its circulation to a few indifferent readers.

Godey's Lady's Book.

The October number of this magazine has come to hand, and is a very good one. The plates are equal to any previous number. The literary matter consists of—Fred Harley's Passenger; A Woman in a Book; The Little Coffin; Boy Love; A Suggestion; Love in a Tramway; Passion and Principle; Lessons in Drawing; A General Smash; Poetry; besides several interesting scraps on various subjects, novelties for the month, and recipes. The Lady's Book for October will be found attractive.

Insurance.

R. Hamilton is now receiving his stock of Hardware, which he purchased when in Europe; he advertises that he will sell at low rates. Purchasers would do well to give him a call.

STEAMER ROCHESTER.—It is reported that the Steamer Rochester is to run for the remainder of the season between Kingston and Cape Vincent.

TORCH LIGHT PROCESSION.

Saturday evening last the city was startled out of its quietude by the ringing of the fire-bells; and the signal bell before each panel, recalled like chimes that the conflagration was in St. George's Ward. Your correspondent immediately hurried down the city to see what was to be seen: crowds thronged every street, and the question passed from mouth to mouth, "Where is the fire?" but no fire was to be seen. In my hurry I met a friend who kindly allayed my fears, by informing me that there was going to be a "grand reception" of the delegates from the Maratime Provinces, who were to arrive by a "special" on the Great Western from Hamilton. My excitement very much abated and I wended my way home to my quarters, to report progress and wait the coming event. At about eight o'clock, the bells rung out a second time, and this time we all moved off in the direction indicated by the fire signal, St. George's Ward; and there at the Union Station the fire became plainly manifest, in the shape of a great Torch Light Procession, under the able management of Mr. Ashfield, Chief Engineer of the Fire Departments.—When the train arrived, the delegates were met by Mr. Mayor Metcalf, and a host of the City Fathers. An address was presented by the Mayor, giving them a hearty welcome to Toronto, which being replied to as became the occasion, the procession started, headed by the band of the Queen's Own Rifles, and it was truly a very pretty affair. The torches and fire-works were good—almost as good as I have seen in Peterborough. A long line of carriages bore the dignified visitors along Front Street to Yonge, up Yonge Street to King, and along King Street to the Rossin House, and then down York Street to the Queen's Hotel, where quarters had been provided for the visitors. The gentlemen on alighting, repaired to an upper room and out of a door on the balcony, where the speaking was entered upon, as the wind up of the out of door performance. The gentlemen all seemed to like their trip very much; and after visiting the Provincial Fair at London, and seeing so much of Upper Canada, they are more earnest than ever in their advocacy of a Union of the Provinces. The delegates remained over until yesterday, and were shown the sights of the capital of Upper Canada.

MILITARY SCHOOL.

This Institution is getting along in its usual orderly way. An examination took place on Saturday and yesterday, and ten Cadets passed for second class certificates, and two for first-class; one of the latter is Thomas Benson, Esq., Port Hope. There was a large number expected to have entered to-day, but I do not know how many. The candidates for military glory are getting fewer in number; and if the government carry out the last "order" from Quebec, few they will be much fewer than they are even now. On Thursday last, the "orders" came from the Adjutant General's Department, giving notice to all Cadets from that time that candidates for first-class certificates would receive no gratuity for that class; this has thrown quite a damper on the aspirations of the Cadets, as the fifty dollars given with the second-class certificate will merely pay the expenses of board, &c., while attending the School, and the time devoted by the Cadets goes for nothing. This is the way of the world. The men at the head of affairs take care of their own relatives; but if a shaving can be taken off those below them, it will be done, to shew the people how mighty saving they have become. It will be likely to work very much against the efficiency of the Military Schools, as no person, with a grain of common sense, will enter one of them to undergo a course of severe drill and study, for a length of time almost in all cases up to thirteen weeks, merely for what will pay his board bill, without etcetras which many of them require. The government must think that the Canadians are extremely patriotic, when they, for love of their country, will do all this, and in time of peace devote their time thus to attain a knowledge of "military tactics," which may become useful not only to themselves but to their country in time of war. It is the old story over again, of a few men like the Canadian Volunteers, devoting not only their time but their own hard earned money to support the credit of our country, and then get nothing but hard words and small pay for their name. It is no wonder that the Volunteers are weary of such a system, as many of them here openly declare they are. If they have continued from year to year to drill and keep up their companies in an efficient state, it was not for the beggarly pittance they received in the way of pay which kept them together; it was their love of country, and the hope that their little knowledge of drill would become useful before all was over; but there is a bound to almost all things, and I am of opinion that this last arrangement will give a death-blow to the efficiency of the Schools—and all the Cadets I have seen in this city agree as to this fact. I hope none of the Peterboro' Volunteers will give up their drill on account of what I have said; for I know that, in the words of an old Poet:

> "Their loyalty is still the same,
> Whether they lose or win the game;
> True as the dial to the sun,
> Although it be not shone upon."

WILLIE.

Monaghan, September 25th, 1865.

Pursuant to notice a public meeting was held at the Town Hall to-day, at two o'clock, for the purpose of taking into consideration the propriety of having stone monuments placed on the governing lines of the several concessions of the township.

John W. Gilmour, Esq., Reeve, occupied the chair, and addressed the meeting at considerable length; entered minutely into the origin of the proceedings; showed the benefits likely to ensue therefrom; cited the opinion of Messrs. McDougall and Stewart, P.L.S., in support of his views; stated the probable expense incident thereto—a thing not usually considered secondary in such matters—which it appeared would be about one twentieth of a cent on this years valuation, thus leaving a person rated at $1000 to pay 50 cents; read several extracts from the Consolidated Statutes to show how the survey would be conducted; and favourably impressed those present with necessity which existed for carrying the object of the meeting into effect.

Messrs. John, George and Robert Tully, George Young, John Whitfield and William Rowson severally addressed the meeting.

Mr. William Tully expressed himself strongly in favour of having monuments, as being the only reliable means of amicably settling disputes both now and hereafter; met all the opposition to the contrary, and evidently succeeded in sustaining his position and gaining many to his opinion who formerly thought otherwise.

After some further explanations were given by the Chairman the following motion was put and carried.

Moved by Mr. William Tully, and seconded by Mr. George Young.—That stone monuments be placed on the western governing boundary of the several concessions of the township of North Monaghan, and that the Municipal Council be requested to take immediate action thereon.

Mr. Collins was called to the second chair and an unanimous vote of thanks tendered to Mr. Gilmour for the manner in which he had conducted the business of the meeting. In reply he said that he was glad of another opportunity of getting amongst them, and jocularly remarked that the more he was with them the better he liked them.—Com.

To the Editor of the Peterborough Examiner.

SIR,—Knowing that you are a zealous friend of education, and of everything that tends to its advancement, I trust you will permit me space in your ably conducted journal for a few lines in reference to one of the most interesting meetings that has ever taken place in this locality namely, a general convocation of the pupils of all the schools in the township, to compete for and receive prizes which were purchased with the munificent donation of the Hon. Billa Flint. The situation being high and pleasant was admirably suited to the occasion. During the former part of the day different kinds of vehicles, laden with persons and edibles, were wending their way to the place of rendezvous—for the edible was as once a grand pic-nic and an examination. From lofty monarchs of the forest swings were erected to furnish athletic amusements for the youth who had time to gratify their sportive proclivities. When all were "mustered up" there was formed one of the most diversified assemblages that can be well conceived of. There were teachers, pupils, and parents, young, middle-aged and old men, young and merry damsels of nineteen, and grim-visaged ladies of riper years, chubby lads and nimble lasses, learned persons and unlettered peasants, the grave and the gay mingled miscellaneously among the hoi polloi. The meeting was constituted by the appointment of Mr. J. W. Gilmour, Reeve of North Monaghan, to preside over the business of the day. Whereupon the Rev. Mr. Roberts, Local Superintendent, commenced proceedings by examining a class in mental arithmetic. He was assisted by Messrs Hill and Crook, teachers from Smith. After this the audience was entertained with some excellent singing by Miss Dowling's pupils. Next came the ever welcome call to tea, which was responded to by a half hour's effort. This over, the meeting was again favoured with quite a variety of pleasing airs by the same pupils as before, which were highly appreciated by the audience. The next part of the proceedings was the examination in English grammar.—The pupils generally did pretty well in this branch, considering their age. Next a class in spelling was examined and cross-examined. There being scarcely any words in the ordinary class-books sufficiently difficult to puzzle some of the pupils, one of the examiners gave a few "jaw-breakers," such as pharmacopœea, &c., which made short work with the juvenile heroes and heroines of orthography. The last class examined was one in reading, which showed very fair proficiency in this commonly deficient branch of common school education.

Though the pupils of Section No. 3 (Mr Wood's) carried off a majority of the prizes, nevertheless the scholars of the other schools acquitted themselves creditably, shewing that the teachers had spared no time or pains in their preparation. It is here simply due to Miss Dowling, teacher of Section No. 4, to state that through some mistake or oversight she had no intimation of the examination until the day previous to it, thus placing her on an unequal footing with the other teachers. However her pupils maintained her reputation very well by taking an honourable place among the schools of the township.

On the whole the affair was a great success, and reflected great credit on all connected with it. Success in the management of the examination was chiefly due to the alertness and tact of the Rev. Mr. Roberts, Local Superintendent (who, by the way, is the right man in the right place). An able essay on "The Teacher's Difficulties" was composed and read by Mr. C. S. Dunbar, teacher of Section No. 1, which elicited the well merited plaudits of the audience. After numerous votes of thanks were passed freely around, the singing of the national anthem gave the signal for separation, when all departed apparently pleased and entertained, hoping that that might only be a prelude to a numerous list of such social, physical and intellectual festivities.

CIVIS.

North Monaghan, Sept. 20, 1865.

A STRANGE BUT TRUE STORY.

An incident is just now being discussed in military circles so extraordinary that were not its truth capable of being vouched for by official authority, the narration would certainly be deemed absolutely incredible. Our officers quartered at the Cape between fifteen and twenty years ago must remember a certain Doctor Berry attached to the medical staff there, and enjoying a reputation for considerable skill in his profession, especially for firmness, decision, and rapidity in difficult operations. This gentleman had entered the army in 1814, had passed, of course, through the grades of assistant surgeon and surgeon in various regiments, and had served as such in various quarters of the globe. His professional acquirements had procured for him his promotion to the staff at the Cape—he was clever and agreeable, save for the drawback of a most quarrelsome temper, and an inordinate addiction to argument, which perpetually brought the former peculiarity into play. He was excessively plain, of feeble proportions, and laboured under the imperfection of a ludicrously squeaking voice. Any natural "chaffing" with regard to these, however, especially roused his ire, but was at length discontinued on his "calling out" a persevering offender, and shooting him through the lungs. About 1840 he became promoted to be medical inspector, and was transferred to Malta. There he was equally distinguished by his skill and by his pugnacious propensities—the latter becoming so inconveniently developed upon the slightest difference of opinion with him, that at last no notice was allowed to be taken of his fits of temper. He proceeded from Malta to Corfu, where he was quartered for many years, still conspicuous for the same peculiarities. When our Government ceded the Ionian Islands to Greece, and our troops, of course, quitted the territory, Dr Barry elected to leave the army and take up his residence for the rest of his days at Corfu. He died there about a month ago, and upon his death was discovered to be a woman! Very probably this discovery was elicited during the natural preparations for interment, but there seems to be an idea prevalent that other verbally, during the last illness, or by some writing, perused immediately after his (for we must still use the masculine) death, he had request it to be buried without a post-mortem examination of any sort. This, most likely, only aroused the curiosity of the two nurses who attended him, for it was to them, it appears, that the disclosure of this mystery is owing. Under the circumstances, the fact was deemed so important that medical testimony was called in to report upon and record its truth. By this investigation not only was the assertion placed beyond a doubt, but it was equally beyond a doubt brought to light that the individual in question had at some time or another been a mother! This is all that is yet known of this extraordinary story. The motives that occasioned and the time when commenced this singular deception are both shrouded in mystery. But thus it stands an indubitable fact that a woman was forty years an officer in the British service, had fought a duel and had sought many more, had pursued a legitimate medical education, had received a regular diploma, and had acquired almost a celebrity for skill as a surgical operator! There is no doubt whatever about the fact, but we doubt whether even Miss Braddon herself would have ventured to make use of it in fiction.—Irish Paper.

A FAMOUS LADY.—G. A. Sala, in Temple Bar, speaks thus of the reputated American wife of Joseph Bonaparte. There was living a year ago, and there may be living still, in the fair city of Baltimore, an old lady ordinarily designated the 'madam,' her age prodigious, her form beat double, her attire curiously antiquated in fashion, yet still retaining in her faded features something of the sparkle of bygone comeliness, still in her tottering gait a trace of the elasticity of youth. This was once the beautiful Miss Patterson, the fair American who became the bride of the heartless, worthless and dissolute scamp, Jerome Bonaparte, sometime King of Westphalia; and who, but for the selfish poltroonery of her husband, and the ruthless ambition of her imperial brother-in-law, might have been at this day mistress of the Palais Royal. Enveloped in a black silk calash, put together by some mantua-maker of the year one, and lean rag on a crutch-stick, the old lady might be seen any day in the streets of the Monumental City; and people would make their way for her and doff their hats, as though around that decrepit form there still hung some perfume of the imperial purple to which she had been transiterie allied."

Bad Case of Bank Defalcation in New York.

Another of the frequent instances of defalcation, in connection with the temptation resulting from what is known as "fast life," has occurred in New York. In this case it is the more shocking since one of the accomplices has come to a tragic end by committing suicide while in prison.

Henry B Jenkins, late paying teller of the Phœnix National Bank, has been arrested for an alleged defalcation of a quarter of a million of dollars, a fact which caused no small excitement in Wall Street, and among many of the down-town bank officers and directors.

After his commitment he stated that five or six other persons were co-partners in his guilt. Several arrests were therefore made, and there has been in consequence laid open one of the boldest and most infamous cases of blackmailing and crime.

Jenkins, it seems, so far from possessing the good character attributed to him, has been in the habit of visiting the lowest dens of infamy in the city, known as "concert-saloons," and at last became the pliant dupe of one of the "pretty waiter-girls," supporting both her and her paramour in richly furnished apartments in Bleecker street.

But the tragic end to which we have alluded was the act of one James H. Earle, who cut his throat in the Station-house after his arrest on suspicion of being one of the accomplices of Jenkins. The instrument he used was a pen-knife, but how he had secreted it remains a mystery. He admitted that he had received $100,000 of stolen bonds from Jenkins, which he had invested and lost in stocks. A certificate for 150 shares of oil stock in the Empire City Oil Company, was found upon the body, as were also a number of receipts for large sums of money.

It is said that Jenkins formed the acquaintance of the waiter-girl a long time ago in a concert-saloon and that she afterwards gained such an ascendancy over him as to compel him to comply with all her demands, frequently obtaining from him sums as high as $1,000 at a time. She then with furnished apartments in Bleecker street, where she lived in extravagant style along with "her man," one Davis, but at the expense of Jenkins.

This case, like a recent one in Montreal, certainly presents a terrible warning to young men who are placed in situations of trust to beware of evil company, and the first temptation to use the funds of their employers in this case, which has already committed one person to a suicide's grave, and will most likely consign others to condign punishment and life-long ignominy, the parties implicated seem at first to have been tempted merely to use the money of the Bank in the hope of making something for themselves and returning it without discovery. But, as usual, such hopes were fallacious. They lost where they expected to gain, and the result has been their shame and ruin.—Witness.

TWO RAILWAY ACCIDENTS.

TROY, Sept. 23.—A railroad accident occurred on the Rensselaer and Saratoga commuters long bridge crossing the Hudson river at this place about seven o'clock this evening. A train was backing towards the city for the purpose of starting out at eight o'clock. The engine was running tender foremost followed by two passenger cars and a baggage car. The swing draw was open at the time and the usual lights were displayed, but the engineer misunderstood them, and did not notice the open draw until close upon it. The locomotive Jay Gould plunged forty feet into the deep water of the channel and was followed by one of the passenger cars, which was nearly submerged. The other passenger car was suspended over the abutment. Our citizens were startled by the escaping steam from the engine, and the light of the wood-work which caught fire. Ladders were soon procured to reach the wreck. A raft had lodged against it, and the men upon it and the steamboat towing it (for which the draw was opened,) had a narrow escape. Fortunately the only passengers in the car were three persons who were riding over to the city, one being the master mechanic of the road. They made their escape from the submerged car. The engineer, Mr. Boughton, and the firemen, J. Meeker, had jumped and clung to the bridge; they were not much hurt. It is most miraculous that no one of the dozen or more men on the train was not seriously injured. As the burning locomotive threatened to set fire to the bridge, the firemen carried hose over the wreck and across the channel. Means were at once taken to relieve the over-hanging car, and repair the draw. The bridge is used both by the Saratoga and Central railroads. This is the first accident of the kind that has ever happened there.

CHICAGO, Sept. 23rd.—A locomotive on the North-western railroad exploded its boiler in this city this forenoon, killing the engineer and a woman named Mrs. Dye, and injuring several others, two fatally.

NOVEL ATHLETIC FEAT.—The Capitoline grounds at Brooklyn were the scene, on Tuesday, of a somewhat novel and extraordinary feat performed by Mr John Sheffield, an athlete recently arrived in this country from England. The bill announcing the performance contained the following programme, which it stated the athlete would surely execute: First walk half a mile; second, trundle a carriage wheel half a mile; third, walk backward half a mile; forth, run half a mile; fifth pick up twenty stones placed in a straight line one yard apart, and return each one singly to the starting point; sixth, hop fifty yards; seventh, leap over ten hurdles placed ten yards apart; eighth pick up fifteen eggs with his mouth placed in a straight line one yard apart, and bring each one singly back to the basket without using his hand; ninth, throw forty half hundred wheights over his head; the entire feat to be accomplished in thirty minutes. A considerable assemblage was drawn together by the announcement, and at half-past five o'clock, time was called by Mr Harry Hill, of East Houston street, who was selected as judge, and the athlete began his work. In exactly twenty-nine minutes and fifty-seven seconds he had concluded. He appeared a good deal exhausted by his labor, but recovered himself in a few minutes and walked off the ground apparently as firm as when he came on. Sheffield is a man of medium size and we gha about one hundred and fifty pounds. Considerable money changed hands on the result—the betting generally being against him. Quite a number of ladies were present, and good order prevailed throughout.

GREAT PETROLEUM OPERATION.—When the Hon George Brown sold his property at Bothwell to the Scotch Company, headed by Mr. *McEwen and of which Mr. Walker is the man*ager, better known as the "Bothwell Land and Petroleum Company," most people were astonished at the price given, which was understood to be $470,000. Since that time, only six months ago, views respecting petroleum in Canada West have undergone a change, and now fabulous amounts change hands for property which a little time ago was thought of little worth. So high is the opinion of American operators of the property at Bothwell, owned by the Company referred to, that, as we have reason to believe, on Saturday it changed hands at the price of over a million of dollars, the purchasers being Clinton Furbush, of Chicago, in connection with Mr. Benjamin of this city. The transaction was conducted by Mr. Burton, of Hamilton, on the part of the Company, Mr. H. C. R. Becher having prepared the necessary documents.—London Free Press.

SHOCKING INFANTICIDE.—Infanticide is not an Irish offence, yet it has been reserved for an Irish woman to surpass all English women who have committed it, and rise as a bound to the wretched supremacy of crime. Mary Darby left the Donaghmore Workhouse with an illegitimate child of a year old, and took service in a farmer's house. The baby was a weariness to her, and she devised a plan of disposing of it, which, in its slow, deliberate atrocity, surpassed anything ever committed by slave traders. Through a period of three weeks she continued breaking the baby's bones one by one, till, when it died, the surgeon found eight broken ribs, a broken shoulder, a fracture of each bone of the left fore arm, another of the thigh bone, another of one leg below the knee, another of the upper and lower bones of the right arm, and another of the jaw bone. The only external appearance was a black lump over each fracture, and the woman had calculated that she could explain the death as caused by these swellings. It is difficult for ordinary men to believe such acts performed by reasonable beings, but a suggestion of insanity, for the sake of human nature, we trust may be established.—London Spectator.

THE PERSIAN BROTHERHOOD.—Ladies of this city have just had a magnificent flag manufactured for presentation to the Society of the Fenian Brotherhood of Washington. The flag is made of emerald green banner silk, six feet wide, eleven feet long, without a seam. On one side is the Irish harp and the coat of arms of Ireland, with the motto "Erin go Bragh," and "Ireland shall be Free," in golden letters. On the reverse is a representation of the "Maid of Erin," weeping over her country, while from behind a heavy cloud is the sun, just about to break forth, emblematical of the future of the "Emerald Isle." The trimmings and mountains are in keeping with the rich material of the flag and the artistic execution of the designs.—New York World.

LIVING IN NEW YORK.—Discarding all fancy, the facts of the case, the expense of a single day's living for a small family is simply frightful, as the following list, which probably is a fair estimate of the average prices paid by housekeepers, fully attests:—

Butter, per lb	44 cts.
Steaks, per lb	30 cts.
Lamb, per lb	25 to 27 cts.
Corned beef, per lb	22 cts.
Ham, per lb	30 to 32 cts.
Mess fish,	13 to 14 cts.
Codfish, per lb	12 cts.
Ham, per lb	30 cts.
Halibut, per lb	22 cts.
Tomatoes, per half peck	40 cts.
Potatoes, per bushel	$2.00
Cabbage, per head	12 to 18 cts.
Whortleberries, per quart	25 cts.
Huckleberries, per quart	50 cts.
Green beans, per half peck	50 cts.
Green apples, per half peck	50 cts.

and other things in proportion. Now, upon these data, it is easy to estimate the cost of a single day's living for a small family—say four persons—and from this estimate to deduce the cost per week. Any one accustomed to marketing may make the calculation at leisure.—New York Daily News.

THE UNITED STATES WHEAT CROP OF 1865.—Mr. Newton, of the Agricultural Department, reports a deficit of over twenty-six million bushels of wheat in the crop of the present as compared with last year's, namely:

	Bushels.
Crop of 1864,	160,695,823
Estimated crop for 1865,	134,454,125
Decrease,	26,241,698

The loss is as follows:

New England and Middle States,	857,383
Maryland and Delaware,	1,719,571
Western and N. W. States,	23,864,741
Total,	26,241,698

All other crops, particularly potatoes and corn are most promising, except tobacco, of which considerably less has been planted. The oat crop is very large, and the hay crop in the West has been much injured by wet weather, but is still abundant.—Weekly Ohio Farmer.

THE MAMMOTH CHEESE.—The "Queen" cheese, manufactured by Smith & Sons, of Norwich, Oxford county, C. W., in July last, is now on exhibition at London. She was exhibited at Utica, New York, at the State Fair some time since, and obtained a diploma. She is 5 feet 4 inches in diameter, 16 feet in circumference, and weighs 4,000 lbs. Messrs. Smith were offered $550 for her in the cheese house, which they refused.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 23rd.—The United States consul-general at Constantinople, under date of August 23, reports to the state department a sensible abatement in the cholera since his last despatch. The number of deaths on the 21st was 143, while heretofore it exceeded 300 in a single day.

2. 3. That said debentures shall be made payable in 20 years at the furthest from the day hereinafter mentioned for this By-law to take effect, at the office of the Treasurer of the said Municipality, and shall have attached to them coupons for the payment of interest.

4. That the said debentures shall bear interest at and after the rate of six per centum per annum from the date thereof, which interest shall be payable half-yearly, on the first day of April and the first day of October in each year, at the Office of the Treasurer of the said Municipality.

5. That for the purpose of forming a sinking fund for the payment of the said debentures and the interest at the rate above fixed to become due thereon, an equal special rate of one mill in the dollar shall, in addition to all other rates, be raised, levied and collected in each year upon all the rateable property in the said Municipality during the continuance of the said debentures or any of them.

6. This By-law shall take effect and come into operation upon the 5th day of October, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-five.

But Georgie preferred the cold independence of her governessing; and now—after the first shock was over, and she had settled into her new niche in the Hall—where, to do them justice, the Hunters never disturbed her—liked better to teach the little ones their 'two and two make four,' than to read Balzac and the Times alternately to my lady, varied with episodes of scandal such as only aristocratic old ladies, despising the commoner sort, can indulge in. In which she was wise—the driest and hardest independence being better than fetters worn under eiderdown and pranked round with silk velvet, let them be ever so slight and ever so richly covered.

How everybody was getting married at Brough Bridge! everybody but Georgie Fenton, who 'hung on hand in a manner marvellous to all men. Even Charley Dunn, forsaking the colors he had worn on his sleeve for more than twelve years, now took upon himself to reward Miss Louisa's rollicking constancy, and to put their two stuntings a year into one common purse, with the rather wild design of making something out of the conglomerate. Maggie Wood and the old Admiral were married last spring; and pretty Mary Dowthwait had hooked and landed young Mr. Whiting Fox, the diplomatist, from London; Miss had found her official assignee the year of the Fentons' downfall and Miss Annie's elevation; and one of the Miss Hawtreys had perched on a twig of foreign growth, and sung her little French romances and Italian canzonets under a roof-tree of her own. But none of the Miss Gibbs had gone off yet, though Louisa had been long talked of with Charley Dunn, and half of Brough Bridge said they had been engaged these dozen years or more; which was premature and an extension of the fact; they only 'made it up last week,' said Charley, 'and you are the first we have told it to, after mamma and the girls, Miss Georgie.'

'And I am sure I am very glad!' said little Georgie cordially. 'You are quite formed for each other, and I do not think you could have made a better choice, either of you.'

Charley winked his eyes; a habit of his when he was rather at a loss what to say; and Miss Louisa laughed one of her loud explosive laughs, like a hilarious ten-pounder going off.

'Only one!' she said, or rather shouted. 'Charley would have had no objection to another choice, if she would have had him, Miss Fenton!'

And then they all laughed; and Georgie blushed for a variation. 'You were always a madcap,' she said to Louisa, 'and will never be better.'

'Never above confessing the truth and sticking to it,' said Miss Louisa.

'Well never mind, this is the truth now!' cried Charley giving her a great hug as they turned homeward through the lane.

'O! the saints be praised I'm not jealous, Miss Georgie!' called out Louisa at the top of her voice. And at that moment the Hunters' carriage, with Mr. and Mrs. Hunter in state together, dashed past Georgie standing by her little garden-gate, and heard what Miss Louisa said, which made them wince, though from different causes.

Georgie Fenton, though of a pure constitution, was not strong; and the incessant exposure to all weathers tried her, especially in the winter. She struggled manfully against the feeling of weakness and weariness creeping over her, but she could not overcome it; and it was often almost more than she could do to walk the mile and a half which lay between her cottage and the Hall. Then she caught cold, and had a hollow cough, and a pain in her side, which she in her innocence and bravery called a 'stitch;' and so began to be seriously ill, as every one who looked at her could see. Even Mrs. Hunter, who at first called it affectation, and nonsense, and sundry other things of the same moral standard, even she was forced to allow of the excuse which came one day, 'I too ill to leave my bed, but hope to be better soon,' while Mr. Hunter almost groaned, as he said between his teeth, 'I wish she would die! it would be the best thing that could happen to her.

And so poor Georgie broke down at last, and the wolf that had been so long kept at bay from the frail door, now put his black paws into the gap which her failing health had made; and soon it seemed that not only his paws but his whole gaunt body would come through. The people were very kind—very kind, indeed, at first.—They sent her wine and jelly and good things which she could not eat; and on some days she overloaded, and on others almost starving. But however kind people may be, this desultory manner of nursing an invalid is not very satisfactory; besides, even the most generous get tired of doing kindness to the same person after a little, unless, indeed, they can establish a sort of individual right of patronage, and then they will go on swimmingly for as long as the world knows—and all more or less believe in fairy godmothers, who supply good gifts as seen in the gracious secrecy of the night. All these, and more phases than these, the Brough Bridge people went through during Georgie's illness; but she bore up through it all with her own sweet patience, and never once felt that 'Faithful and True,' which had brought her to this, was ought but a talisman and a blessing.

'And even if he is dead,' said Georgie weeping, 'I would rather live as I do now, true to his memory and to be his wife in heaven, than have any amount of riches from any other man.' At which Charley Dunn, to whom she said this, wept too, and taking her hand kissed it as if he had been a Catholic kissing a relic, saying earnestly, 'God bless you! you are the best and dearest little woman in this world!'

Before the spring came round again, Georgie Fenton was justified in her faith. In the cold winter night came a hurried knock at her little door, and a stranger, snow-clad, and with the frost-rime hanging round his beard and hair, entered her small room where she lay on a couch beside the fire, as white as the snowdrifts outside. She started and cried out as the tall, rough-looking stranger dashed aside the little servant at the door and strode in as one with authority; but she cried out no more when he took her up in his arms from off the couch, and held her to his heart, whispering her name. It was Roger—now her Roger, her own, for life and death for time and eternity—come back as he had promised, and as she had believed and lived for, 'Faithful and True' both of them had been; and now their day of recompense had come: such as ever comes to truth and fidelity, to courage and to constancy, to honour and to love!

"What's that?" asked Mrs. Partington looking up the column of the Place Vendome, during her visit to Paris. "The Pillar of Napoleon." "Well, I never did," she exclaimed "and that's his pillow! He was a great man to use that; but it's more like a bolster. And it is iron I do believe. Ah, Jube, see what it is to be great! How hard his head must have rested on that metical pillow."

AMERICAN

Button-hole, Cording, Braiding and Embroidering

SEWING MACHINE COMPANY,

627 BROADWAY, NEW-YORK.

THE BUTTON HOLE made by this entirely simple and novel machine, are not only equal to the best hand-made in the pearl or right side, but greatly surpassing them in beauty on the wrong side, which is formed by a beautiful braid stitch, made by an extra stitch, which no hand made button-hole possesses; thereby imparting to the same a much greater strength, which renders cording or barring altogether unnecessary.

One Needle and Two Threads are only Used.

Unlike other Sewing Machines it manufactures its own Braid and Cord.

The best Merchant Tailors freely admit that its beauty, finish and strength cannot be attained by the most skilful hand.

Simplicity is one of its great merits, therefore not liable to get out of order, and it can be worked with ease by any young lady, who will, after a few days' experience, make from 1,000 to 1,200 perfect button-holes in one day.

This is the only machine produced that will throw a stitch over the edge, so as to bind and cover it in a manner indispensible for Button-holes, Cording and Braiding, each of which can be done with colored, shaded or chine silks, and produce a fabrique of varied colors unexcelled for beauty and taste.

To Ladies at home, Dress, Mantilla and Cloak makers, Shoemakers, Tailors, Hatters, Bookbinders, Saddlers, &c., &c., it is indispensable; it is also admitted to be of great value, to other branches as it Braids, Embroiders, and Cords plain and fancy on all kinds of Cloths, Cassimers, Linen, Velvet Leather, &c., &c.

Instructions and Needles accompany each Machine.

Every Machine is Warranted for Twelve Months.

Machines can be seen in full operation at our spacious Store, 627 Broadway, near Bleaker, where instruction Rooms are reserved for Ladies.

Three Gardens Crops in One Year.

A correspondent of the St. Catharines Constitutional communicates the following for the purpose of showing the great results which may be obtained from a small piece of land, by timely and judicious management:—"Early in spring, immediately after the frost had thawed out of the ground I dug up the driest part of my garden, without applying any manure, and on the 20th of March I sowed Early Dilenton and Daniel O'Rourke Peas. At that date the snow still lay under the fences, and some of my neighbours laughed to see me planting anything so early. Well, the peas all grew nicely; were not at all injured by late fronts and occasional showers of snow, and produced a most abundant crop of delicious green peas, which were ready for the table very soon after other people had commenced planting their first crop. By the middle of June the peas were all cleared off. The ground was then heavily manured and dug up, without delay. Just then I had a lot of good, strong Early Paris Cauliflower plants, which had been previously transplanted or "picked out" from the seed bed. These I planted on the pea ground, in rows 30 inches apart, watering the plants three or four times afterwards. In about three weeks, when they were growing rapidly, I raised the earth around them by making a deep furrow between every two rows of cauliflowers; this greatly stimulated their growth. Finally, in the latter part of July, I planted celery in the furrows between the cauliflowers. The celery plants grew even without watering, being partly shaded by the cauliflower leaves. And now, as I write many of the cauliflowers are fit for use and are being daily removed—just in time to leave the celery in full possession of the ground. As fast as the cauliflowers are cut out, the earth is turned back on the celery, which process will be repeated at intervals until the celery is full grown and the blanching completed. If a crop of cabbage is preferred to cauliflowers, the same results can be obtained, with even greater ease, by planting an early variety—such as the Little Pixie, Ox Heart or Winningstadt—immediately after the first crop of peas is cleared off. Here, then, are three of the very best crops that can be grown in a garden, successfully raised on the same piece of land in one short Canadian season; and that, too, without any extra cultivation or manuring, and no greater degree of scientific skill than every intelligent man can readily understand and practice for himself."

Don't Run the Cows.

Now, boys, we have a word to say to you. When we were of your age we always had to drive the cows to pasture, and go and bring them, too. Sometimes we got a little late, or were anxious to get off to play, or a cow found a bit of good, sweet grass, better than she had found all day in the pasture, and would stop to take a bit and fall behind the rest. That was provoking, and we were apt to give her a pretty severe lesson. In fact, we were guilty of hurrying up on many occasions. It was all wrong, but we little knew how much injury we were inflicting on ourselves, as well as on the cows.

Now it is perfectly well known that overdriving causes the milk to be heated and feverish, especially in hot weather, and this milk is not a healthful article of food, either as milk or when made into butter or cheese. Cows that are abused, kicked, or roughly treated, cannot give good milk, and no process of manufacture can make it into so good an article of diet as milk that is not injured by such treatment.

Never let the dogs chase the cows. A worriment of this kind not only lessens the quantity, but injures the quality of milk, and it should be carefully avoided. Dogs are generally a curse among a herd of cattle, and particularly so among milch cows, unless they are trained to drive and tend them, as few of our dogs are.—Mass Ploughman.

CORN PANCAKES.—Boil eight or ten ears of corn—pass a sharp knife down each row, and with the back of the knife or a spoon scrape off all the corn, but be particular to leave the hull on the cob. One gill new milk, two teaspoonfuls salt, two eggs well beaten, and as much flour as will make a batter as thick as griddle-cakes.—Then add the corn. Have the lard boiling hot, and drop a tablespoonful at a time. When brown, serve hot for dinner.

TO PRESERVE TOMATOES.—Professor Mapes says:—"If tomatoes are slightly scalded and skinned, and put into bottles, and those set in boiling water for a few minutes, and corked and sealed, the fruit will keep as long as desired, and if eaten when first opened will have the same taste as when just picked from the vines."—Probably a better way is to peel the tomatoes and boil slightly so as to expel the air, then put in heated bottles and cork at once. All depends on the exclusion of the air. The more perfectly this is done the longer fruit may be preserved.

TO STEW PEARS.—To every pound of pears when pealed put half a pound of loaf sugar. Put the fruit into a stew-pan, cover it with cold water, and shut the lid quite close. Stew the fruit gently till tender, then add a few lumps of sugar After stewing the pears two or three hours, put in the cloves—twenty cloves to six or eight pounds of fruit—and the peal of two lemons. Keep adding the sugar by degrees. If the syrup is much wasted add a little more hot water. They require stewing about two hours, very gently. When they are nearly done, add the juice of both lemons—it will add to their flavour and brighten the syrup. Rural New Yorker.

WATER-PROOF SOLES.—If hot tar is applied to boot soles it will make them water-proof. Let it be as hot as the leather will bear without injuring it, applying it with a swab, and drying it in by the fire. The operation may be repeated two or three times during the winter, if necessary. It makes the surface of the leather quite hard, so that it wears longer, as well as keeps out the water. Oil or grease softens the sole, and does not do much in keeping the water out. It is a good plan to provide boots for winter during summer, and prepare the soles by tarring, as they will then become, before they are wanted to wear, almost as firm as horn, and will wear twice as long as those unprepared.

Save the seeds. Look well to this subject. Select the best of every variety as they ripen—cure properly, label, and store away for further use.

Good Bread Pudding, without eggs, may be made by stirring into it good, tart apples (pared and quartered, or sliced), when ready for the oven.

DOUBLE HEELING A STOCKING.—Knit the first stitch, slip off the next without knitting, knitting every alternate stitch on the right side of heel, and every stitch when knitting on the wrong side. This makes the heel very thick.

See what the most popular and widely circulated periodicals say of our Establishment:

From the "Dispatch" of February 25, 1865.

We take pleasure in calling the attention of our readers to the announcement of Messrs. Devaugh & Co.'s Great Sale of Jewelry, Silver Ware, and Fancy Goods, in our advertising columns. We are personally acquainted with the members of this firm and know them to be gentlemen of sterling worth and integrity. Their stock of goods, for variety and extent, we have scarcely seen paralleled.

From the "Mirror of Fashion," March 1, 1865.

Messrs. Devaugh & Co.'s Great Sale of Jewelry, etc., opened on the 15th ult., and we venture to say that no finer display of goods was ever exhibited by any establishment in this city. The ladies thronged their bazaar almost to suffocation, although the streets were rendered nearly impassable by the melted snow and slush. We predict for them a wonderful success.

From the "Ledger," February 28, 1865.

Our lady friends should visit the extensive establishment of Messrs. Devaugh & Co., No. 15 Maiden Lane, if they wish to indulge themselves with a sight which they will long remember. Such a profusion of elegant Watches, Chains, Rings, Earrings, and, in short, of Jewelry of every name, kind and description, we never before witnessed. Their silver and plated ware is superb and almost casts into the shade the other splendid establishments which have long been the boast of our city. It is estimated that their stock is worth not less than one million of dollars.

PIANO-FORTES

DRIGGS' NEW PATENT.

ARE THE ONLY INSTRUMETS constructed on a truly scientific principle. That have greater strength, and will remain longer in TUNE than any other Piano. The construction is simple and natural, all the extraneous lumber in the body of the instrumen is dispensed with; the sound boards are merely two arched planks of thin wood, like the front and back of a violin; the strings are attached to a strong iron frame, which is separate and entirely independent of the case, thereby dispensing with the old harp form of stringing' by substituting straight bridges, preserving at the same time The Over Strung Bass, of which Mr DRIGGS is the inventor. By these improvements we gain much more vibratory power, at the same time preserving all its purity and richness of tone.

They have received the highest testimonials from the Press, and all the principal artists in the country, among which are:

Harry Sanderson,	L. M. Gottschalk,
Max Maretzek,	S. Thalberg,
Theodore Risfield,	Wm Mason,
Herman Wollenhaupt,	A. Barili,
Francis H. Brown,	M. Strackosch,
Wm. Henry Fry	Charles Fradel

Mr. EGESMUND THALBERG, the great pianist, says:—I have examined your new Piano-fortes and I cordially approve of its system of construction. Its principle by which great increase of vibratory power is obtained, being very simple and perfectly philosophical. The tone is grand and noble; it has great capacity for sustaining the sound or singing, and its volume of tone or power I have never heard excelled in depth, purity and sympathetic sweetness.

Wm. HENRY FRY, late musical critic of the N. Y. Tribune says:—I have examined your newly invented Piano-Fortes They merit all the praise given to them by Messrs. Thalberg, Gottschalk, Strackosch, Mason and others. As regards the structure, they are original and philosophical; in purity, volume, and continuity of tone; in vocal verisimilitude, that crowning excellence which enables the pianists to "sing" on the instrument. Your Pianos deserve the highest rank. Your invention, in my opinion, is destined to work radical changes in the manufacture of Pianos throughout the world.

From the N. Y. Herald, Sept. 5—Upon a careful examination of Driggs Piano-Forte, we find the results obtained are a very fine singing tone, great purity and brilancy throughout the entire instrument, not often found in Pianos constructed upon the old plan.

The N. Y. Times, July 12, says:—We have now an instrument without an equal. It can sing with a smoothe delicacy, perfectly unattainable on any other instrument; an ordinary player obtains with no exertion, the fullness of a Grand Piano Forte and they must speedily supersede the old styles.

GENTLEMEN:—Having thoroughly examined and tested the Piano-Fortes invented and patented by Mr. S. S. Driggs, I am of the opinion that the tone resulting from his improvements, as exhibited in the instruments under examination, in point of richness, depth and brilliancy, equals that of the best Grand Piano-Fortes, and excells them in pure, musical and actual tone, power thus approximating closer to what I consider perfection in the instrument than has yet been achieved by any other system of manufacture.

Yours respectfully,
L. M. GOTTSCHALK.

NEVER MORE NIGHT THAN DAY.

Ah! don't be sorrowful, darling,
And don't be sorrowful, pray,
Taking the year together, my dear,
There isn't more night than day.

'Tis rainy weather, my darling,
Time's waves they heavily run;
But taking the year together, my dear,
There isn't more cloud than sun.

We are old folks now, my darling,
Our heads are growing grey;
But taking the year all round, my dear,
You will always find a May.

We have had our May, my darling,
And our roses, long ago;
And the time of the year is coming, my dear,
For the silent night of snow.

And God is God, my darling,
Of night as well as day;
And we feel and know that we can go
Wherever He leads the way.

God of the night, my darling,
Of the night of death so grim;
The gate that leads to life good wife,
Is the gate that leads to Him.

Literature.

The Quaker and the Robber.

BY ALFRED QUADELET.

The most honest of all Quakers, Jonathan Simpson, inhabited in London a small but pretty house, with his daughter, a young girl of scarcely eighteen years of age.—Mary was a beautiful blonde, with large blue eyes, as wise as she was beautiful. She was constantly surrounded by a host of admirers, anxious to win her heart, but their efforts were in vain. Mary was by no means a coquette, and far from enjoying the effect produced by her charms, she was often annoyed by it. Edward Weresford, a young artist, intimate in the family, was the only person whose society she really enjoyed.

A very simple occurrence had been the cause of this intimacy. A sudden and unexpected death had carried away the Quaker's wife, still young and beautiful, and anxious to preserve the image of one so dear to him, he had called the young artist to her death bed. It was there that Edward had seen, for the first time, the young and disconsolate girl, and where their attachment first sprang into life, amidst the tears of one and the heartfelt sympathy of the other. A year had scarcely elapsed when the young artist made known to the father of Mary his desires and hopes.

The good Jonathan saw no reason to oppose the mutual inclination of the young lovers. Without being rich, Edward, with the aid of his pencil, was amply able to support a family. His father, Mr. Weresford, one of the oldest merchants of the city, had retired from business with a large fortune; his was a very rare instance of rapid success in speculation, so rapid, indeed, that few had been able to follow his progress. Weresford, whose manners were rather rough and uncouth, lived alone in the outskirts of London, without troubling himself at all about his son; he was one of those peculiar men who trouble nobody in order not to be troubled themselves, and was tolerably good-natured if no favours were required of him.

Edward, being sure that his father would readily consent to his marriage with the pretty Quakeress, was anxiously awaiting the day that should seal their union.

Jonathan, who owned large farms in the neighborhood of London, started one fine morning to collect a large sum of money, which he designed for the expenses of the wedding. He was absent only through the day, and as he was returning after dark on horseback, he perceived at a short distance, a man standing in the middle of the road, evidently for no good purpose. He stopped, hesitating whether to go on or turn back. In the meantime the man was advancing towards him, and flight seemed impossible; he therefore determined to make the most of it and go on slowly. As he approached nearer, he perceived that the man was masked. The unknown man drew out a pistol, and pointing it towards him, demanded his purse. The Quaker lacked courage, but naturally calm and inoffensive, and unable to resist an armed man, he took from his pocket a purse containing 12 guineas, and gave it to the thief, who, counting the money, allowed the poor man to pass. But the robber, seeing the little resistance that had been made, and in the hope of a second spoil, soon overtook the honest Jonathan, placed himself across the road, and pointing his pistol in the the same direction,

'Your watch!' said he.

The Quaker was surprised, but not frightened, however. He coolly pulled his watch from his pocket, looked at the time, and then handed it to the robber.

'Now,' said he, allow me to go home, I pray thee, 'my daughter will feel anxious at my absence."

'One minute,' replied the thief, more and more emboldened by the coolness, 'now swear that you have no other money with you.'

'I never swear,' said the Quaker.

'Well, affirm that you have with you no other money, and upon my word, as I am incapable of using violence towards a man who yields with so much grace, I will let you go on your way.'

Jonathon thought a moment and shook his head.

'Whoever thou art,' replied he, gravely, 'thou hast guessed that I am a Quaker, and that not even for my life would I forsake the truth. Now, I must tell the that I have underneath my saddle two hundred pounds sterling.'

'Two hundred pounds!' exclaimed the robber, whose eyes flashed from under his mask.

'But if thou art good, if thou art human,' continued the Quaker, 'thou wilt leave me this money; my daughter is going to be married, and I will not be able again to dispose of such a sum for a long time. The dear girl loves her betrothed, it would be cruel to cut off their union; thou hast a heart, thou hast loved perhaps, and thou canst not commit such a wicked action.'

'What the d——l do I care for your daughter, her lover, or their marriage? I want the money and must have it at once.'

Jonathan, with a sad heart, lifted the saddle, took a heavy bag from underneath it, gave it the thief, and started off on a gallop.

'Stop a minute, my friend," cried he, 'as you arrive, you will go straight to denounce me to the magistrates; that is right enough, and I have nothing to say to it; but it is important, you know, that I should go ahead of you. My horse is tired, and almost worn out; yours, on the contrary seems strong and vigorous, and much more able to carry this heavy bag of gold; alight then, I pray thee, and let me get on thy horse, and you may take mine afterwards if you choose.'

It was too late to offer any resistance, so Jonathan quietly dismounted, saying to himself with resignation, 'if I had known it before, how easily I might have escaped from the rascal, for with such a horse he could never have overtaken me.'

In the meantime, the masked man thanking him ironically for his kindness, started at full gallop and disappeared.

Before reaching London the unhappy man had time to think of his misfortune, and of the poor lovers so fond of each other, and whose happiness must unavoidably be postponed. The money of which he had been robbed was forever lost to him for he had no means of identifying the robber, should he ever happen to come across him. A sudden idea struck him, however, and he stopped.

'Yes, he exclaimed, 'I may yet succeed. If the rascal stops in London, I may yet discover him. How could he be so very impudent?'

His spirits thus raised by some secret hope of success, Jonathan reached his home and whispered not a word of his adventure. He did not go to the magistrate, but kissed his daughter, who suspected nothing, and went to bed and slept soundly till morning, trusting in Providence for the rest. Next morning, however, he thought he might perhaps help Providence, and began to make enquiries. He took the horse out of the stable where it had remained all night, and threw the bridle loose upon its neck, in the hopes that it would naturally go straight to its master's house. He allowed the poor animal, which had nothing to, to wander through the streets of London, and he followed after. But soon poor Jonathan gave up all hopes of success, and made up his mind that the robber had never inhabited London. 'What a fool I was,' thought he to himself, 'not to have complained to the magistrate, instead of trusting to the instinct of this stupid animal.'

He was interrupted in his reflections by the cries of some children who had nearly been run over by the horse. The animal was just starting off at full speed.

'Stop him! stop him!' was heard on all sides.

'Do not stop him—let him go!' said the Quaker, and following on the tracks, he saw him enter the gate of a mansion in the outskirts of the city.

'He must be here,' thought Jonathan, who lifted his eyes toward heaven to thank Providence. He passed the house and perceived a servant in the yard, patting the horse's neck and leading him to the stable. He then enquired of a neighbor the name of the owner of the house.

'That house belongs to the rich merchant, Weresford,' was the reply.

The Quaker stood amazed.

'Weresford,' continued the man, who thought he had not been understood. 'Mr. Weresford, you must have heard of him—the man who made such an immense and rapid fortune.'

'Thank thee, my friend, thank thee,' replied Jonathan.

He was stunned with astonishment. 'Mr. Weresford! Edward's father!' A man so generally respected, a thief—a robber!'

He thought he was dreaming and turned back to go home. However, several instances of men, wealthy and respected, though connected with robbers, came to his mind; then he thought of that immense fortune acquired so unaccountably, and of the horse who seemed to recognize his master's house.

Jonathan resolved at once to unravel the mystery; he boldly knocked at the door and inquired for the merchant.

Mr. Weresford was not up, although the clock had just struck twelve. This confirmed the Quaker's belief. He insisted upon being admitted, and soon found himself in the bedroom of the wealthy merchant, who, scarcely awakened, rubbed his eyes and inquired in a rough tone, 'Who are you sir, and what do you want?'

His voice at once roused the recollection of Jonathan, and established his suspicions. He quickly took a chair, and seated himself by the bedside.

'You keep your hat on,' exclaimed the merchant.

'I am a Quaker,' replied Jonathan, calmly, 'and thou knowest that such is our custom.'

At the word Quaker, Weresford raised up in bed started at the visitor. He knew him, without doubt; for he turned pale

'Well,' demanded he, scarcely able to speak, 'what may—be—if you please—the—the—errand?'

'I beg thy pardon for being in such a hurry,' replied Jonathan, 'but among intimate friends ceremony is not necessary, and I came to ask thee for the watch which thou didst borrow of me yesterday.'

'The—watch?'

'I care a great deal for; it once belonged to my beloved wife, and I cannot part with it. My brother-in-law, the alderman, would never forgive me if he knew that I parted with it even for a single day.'

The name of alderman seemed to make a quick impression on Weresford. Without waiting for a reply, Jonathan continued:

'Thou wilt oblige me, also, by returning the twelve guineas which I lent thee at the same time. However, if thou dost need all of them for a few days, thou mayest keep them, but thou must give me a receipt.'

The coolness of the Quaker abashed the merchant so that he dared not deny the possession of the stolen property, but still unwilling to own it, he hesitated how to reply, when Jonathan continued:

'I have came, also, to inform you of the marriage of my daughter Mary. I had reserved a sum of two thousand pounds sterling for the expenses of the occasion, but a sad accident happened to me yesterday upon the road to London. I was completely stripped, so that I must ask thee to give thy son a portion, which had it not been for this, I should never have asked of thee.'

'My son?'

'Why, yes. Does thou not know that he is in love with Mary, and that he is to marry her?'

'Edward?' exclaimed the merchant, now jumping out of bed.

'Edward Weresford,' quietly replied the Quaker taking a pinch of snuff. 'Come, thou must do something for him. I wish I could keep away from him all that occurred last night, but if thou refusest me the sum which I had promised, I will be compelled to tell him I lost it.'

Weresford advanced towards a closet, took a box, doubly locked, opened it, and handed successively to Jonathan his watch, purse and bag of money.

'Very well, said the Quaker, 'I see that I was right to rely upon thee.'

'Is it all that you want?' Inquired the merchant.

'No, I expect something more of thy friendship.'

'Speak.'

'Thou wilt disinherit thy son.'

'What?'

'Thou wilt disinherit him; I do not wish to have it said that I speculated upon thy fortune;' and, saying these words, Jonathan Simpson went out of the room.

'No,' whispered he, when he found himself alone, 'no, children are not responsible for the faults of their parents. Mary shall marry the son of this man, but touch his money, never!'

In passing through the yard he perceived Weresford at one of the windows, and exclaimed:

'Hallo! my friend, I brought back thy horse; return me mine, if thou please.'

A few minutes after, Jonathan Simpson well mounted, carrying behind him his bag of money, his purse and watch in his pocket, was trotting slowly home.

'I have just came from making a wedding call on thy father' said he to Edward whom he found at his house; 'I think he will agree.'

Two hours after, the merchant arrived at the house of Jonathan, and taking him to one side, said:

'Honest Quaker, your conduct has touched my very soul. It was in your power to dishonor me, to dishonor my son, to ruin me in his estimation and to refuse him your daughter. You have acted nobly. I am humbled before you. Take these papers; adieu, you will never see me again.' Speaking thus he departed.

The Quaker being left alone, opened the papers and found among them drafts of considerable value against the first banking houses in London. It contained, also, a list of names, with sums of different value affixed to each, and ending with these lines:

'These names are those people who have been robbed, together with the amount that is to be returned to them; draw the money and return it accordingly to the right owners. Whatever may be left is my legitimate property, and your daughter may one day accept without blushing my inheritance.'

The next day Weresford had left London, and never was heard of afterwards.

On the day of Edward's and Mary's marriage, the Quaker invited a large number of merry friends among whom were many of those who had been robbed, and were loud in their praise of the honesty of the robber, who had returned to them what they supposed was certainly lost.

Family Scene.

At a farm house in the country of Wayne, a precocious and inquisitive juvenile who had been at the Post Office, rushed into the house with a Lyons Republican in his hand; when the following dialogue ensued:—

Juvenile—Pa, what do these figures mean, stuck on the edge of the Republican with a little strip of yellow paper?

Pa—Why that's the name by which it is directed to me.

Juvenile—Yes, I know about the name, but here it says 8 June '16. What does that mean?

Pa, a little fidgety—Why that, my son, is some mark the printers have—they understand it.

Juvenile—Don't you know what it means?

Pa—Never mind, don't be to inquisitive.

Juvenile—Well, anyhow, Old Toby, who was in the Post Office, said it meant you hadn't paid for your paper in more than four years, and you had better sock up, and was as able as any man in the township, and printers couldn't live without money any better than other men.

Mother—There, John, I've told you a hundred times it was a shame that you didn't pay for your paper. I declare, I blush for shame every time I take up the paper and think how faithfully it comes and supplies us with news, and how you keep the printers out of their dues. I hope now that drunken old Toby and your own children talk about it, you'll be ashamed of yourself and pay up. You ought to make the Editor a present of a turkey to pay interest,

John slipped out of the house and was gone an hour. When he returned he looked ten years younger as he informed his wife he had asked the Postmaster to frank a letter and had enclosed eight dollars—paying up old scores and a year in advance. John slept soundly that night, without the nightmare, (in which he always fancied himself ridden through the air by a printer's devil.) He has never been troubled with it since.

The Civil War in the United States.

A DIVINE JUDGMENT AND A BEACON OF WARNING TO THE NATIONS.

From the Scottish Original Secession Mag.

The war which has been waged in the United States with all its horrors during the last four years is the great event of the present time. It has been arresting the attention of the whole civilized world; but it has not received the degree of solemn consideration to which it is entitled, either from nations or individuals—either from the actors in the bloody drama or from the spectators. The space which the wars that have been carried on from age to age occupy in history renders us familiar with those scenes of blood, and our familiarity with them lessens the horror which such a spectacle is calculated to produce. The desolation and havoc which war has produced on some of the fairest portions of our globe are amply attested in the records of the past, and in the present aspect and condition of the countries that have been subjected to their ravages. But there is no instance in the annals of our fallen world in which such numerous armies have been mustered in one nation for mutual slaughter, and so many battles fought in so brief a period of time, and in which such tremendous instruments of death have been employed, as in that by which the soil of the American States has been drenched with blood. There was some expectation that if the the wars waged in these of weapons of such terrible power as those which modern art and science have furnished would be very destructive they would necessarily be of short duration. But this expectation has been balked by the experience of the war in the U. S. It has been found that if the most formidable instruments of destruction are powerful means of success in waging offensive warfare, they are no less effective means of defense. Hence it is that after four years of dreadful carnage, we cannot be sure that we may not, after a few years, again have a revival of the same horrid work; if not in America in some other part of our sin polluted world. But what improvement ought we and others to make of this awful calamity.

Sin is the cause of all; and it is a fact to every reader of the Bible that God punishes individuals and nations for sin. Numerous as are the appliances at work for the spiritual good of the nations; as numerous on the other hand are the agencies for evil.—Temperance societies are at work for to reform man from the vice of intemperance, and the good they have done cannot properly be estimated; but on the other hand we have the distillery and the tavern in full operation, and sustained too by "Christian" capital, and which every year is sending its thousands and tens of thousands to fill a drunkard's grave. The Bible is now printed in all languages, and along with the religious tract and massive and tiny volume, is doing good in cottage and hall all over our world; but in order to counteract that, infidel books and tracts, magazines and weekly periodicals are in circulation (and their name is legion), whose mission is to corrupt and demoralize. In short, while the agencies for good are numerous, sin and evil of all kinds is on the increase also. Sabbath breaking and profane swearing abounds, and professed Christian men and women, and Christian churches too, seem not at all alive to the evils around them; they seem more intent on the pleasures of the world, in "adding field to field" and money making, than in doing the work which the Master imposes on all his disciples—the conversion of their fellows. It is generally admitted that while the final retribution of individuals is reserved for the future state, nations and communities are arranged before the tribunal of the Judge of all the earth, and visited with condign punishment for their iniquities in this world. Again, while God marks all the iniquities of a sinning people, and often renders recompense for all kinds of iniquity, it is often by one peculiarly heinous kind of sin that their provocations reach the climax by which their day of wrath becomes inevitable. This is clearly declared in the Prophecy of Amos, of which we quote only the words which have reference to the ten tribes:—"Thus saith the Lord, for three transgressions of Israel, and for four, I will not turn away the punishment thereof, because they sold the righteous for silver, and the poor for a pair of shoes: that pant after the dust of the earth on the head of the poor, and turn aside the way of the meek; and a man and his father will go in unto the same maid, to profane my holy name." (Amos 2: 6, 7.) And while God has many causes of controvery with the United States, there is reason to think that it has been by the abomination of slavery, with its deeply demoralizing concomitants, that their cup of iniquity has been speedily so filled up that judgment could be no longer delayed. The evils of this system of iniquity, root and branch, leaves and fruit, exceed conception. In the persevering maintenance of slavery an amount of guilt has been accumulated by countless deeds of wrong which none but God can comprehend; the demerit of which none but He can estimate.

War is one of the worst judgments with which God visits a guilty people. And there can be no doubt that it is a dispensation of divine vengeance at the present time to both North and South. God claims this as his special prerogative: "Vengeance is mine, I will repay saith the Lord."—(Rom. 12: 19.) But neither the mighty people on whom this vial of divine wrath has been poured, nor the nations that were spectators of its direful effects, are solemnized as they ought to be by the fact that God, as supreme Judge, has by this war avenged wrongs of appaling criminality, in rendering retribution to the guilty commonwealth which has been persevering in its perpetration for so many generations. The North is looking to the South and the South to the North as the blameable cause of the streams of human blood which has flowed as water on their battle-fields, and of the countless scenes of woe with which the land has been overspread. But there is a deeper and a higher cause of all this misery than the passions, aspirations, and influencing motives of either of the contending parties.

Registers, though imperfect, have been kept by men of those who have fallen in battle or have perished through other causes in connection with this war. But no human register contains a list of those who have perished through the cruelties and fiendish deeds of wickedness inseparable from slavery and the slave-trade. A perfect register of all, however, has been written in heaven. All these merciless deeds of wrong have been committed under the eye of the supreme Judge and Avenger, and one standing law of his administration is to render to every man according to his works. Though the wrongs done can never be numbered by man, they have all been not only numbered but also thoroughly weighed in heaven; and if the nations who have sanctioned these crimes, and have been enriched by their results, continue impenitent, may not the righteous Judge of all the earth demand, as an atonement of its kind, stripe for stripe, and life for life? Men themselves being judges, this would be unspeakably more equitable than the horrid deed of retribution perpetrated on Virginian soil, the record of which is on high, and will not soon be forgotten on earth, when some six individuals were put to death in retaliation for the slaughter of one officer by an unknown agent—a deed which they had no power to prevent, and of which they might be, and most likely were in all respects, as innocent as the man of power at whose arbitrary order they were mercilessly executed. Revenge appears here to have been the ruling principle. Heathens have been known to be merciful, a principle which many Christian nations (so called) are sadly deficient in.

A REMEDY FOR CHOLERA.

A correspondent writing to the Times, says: "Permit one who has had considerable experience of the horrors of this disease in India to describe a simple and, in eight cases out of ten, effectual remedy, possibly of equal value in this temperate climate, as it certainly is in the tropical. The specific was introduced with the assistance of Government by a Dr. Honinburgher in Calcutta, during a period [1857 and 1858] when the ravages of cholera were really awful. At the time above quoted I had an interest in an indigo concern forty-two miles from Calcutta; many entire families of the ryots were swept away by the disease, and I had a quantity of indigo seed lying in their huts, which they were unable, or, from a fatalist feeling of terror, were unwilling to put into the ground. Government at this time had provided Dr. Honinburgher with a building for a cholera hospital, to test the merits of his treatment, a weekly list of cases being published. I went to Calcutta, introduced myself to the Dr. saw his practice at the hospital, and returned to the factory with a pair of lancets and a bottle of tincture of quassia, with which I at once inoculated three natives, all of whom appeared in a hopeless state. Two recovered, as usual, very rapidly, but the third sank, being too far gone before I arrived. The native doctor, or hakim, was astonished, and pronounced it to be like 'jadu,' (witchcraft), and entreated me to instruct him in the mystery, which I gladly did, and he practised it with astonishing success. At other parts of the country in the North-west Provinces my efforts with the quassia were the means of saving several lives, one a servant whom I much valued. The inoculation may be done by any person with sense enough to avoid making an incision in one of the principal veins, the quassia is dropped into the wound, the body should be shampooned, and nothing given to the patient but cool water in small quantities. Cramps rapidly cease, and fair circulation of the blood is restored, the invariable exclamation of the invalid on recovering consciousness being 'Hum garm hota hai, (I am getting warm), with a great sigh of relief; a relapse during the first few hours may be feared, in such a case a second inoculation in two or more places must be performed."

Which is the easiest to spell—fiddle-de-dee or fiddle-de-dum? The former, because it is spelled with more o's.

A Yarmouth master hired an Irishman, "a green hand," to assist him in loading his sloop. Just as the vessel was about to set sail, the Irishman, who was jingling the price of his days work in his pocket, cried out from the quay—"Captain! I lost your shovel overboard; but I cut a big notch on the rail fence round the starn, right over the spot where it went down; so you'll find it when you come back.

MAN AND WOMAN.—Man is strong—Woman is beautiful. Man is daring and confident—Woman is diffident and unassuming. Man shines abroad—woman at home. Man talks to convince—woman to persuade and please. Man has a rugged heart—woman a soft and tender one. Man prevents misery—woman relieves it. Man has science—woman taste. Man has judgment—woman sensibility. Man is a being of justice—woman of mercy.

A young fellow was taking a sleigh-ride with a pretty girl when he met a methodist minister who was somewhat celebrated for tying the knot matrimonial at short notice. He stopped him, and asked hurriedly—

"Can you tie a knot for me?"

"Yes," said brother B——, "I guess so, when do you want it done?"

"Well, right away," was the reply; "is it lawful, though, here in the highway?" asked the way.

'Oh, yes: this is as good a place as any—as safe as the church itself."

"Well, then, I want a knot tied in my horse's tail, to keep it out of the snow!"—shouted the wicked wag, as he drove rapidly away, fearing lest the minister, in his profane wrath, should fall from grace.

Parliamentary Reforms Needed Yet.

We have heard the end of the session of Provincial Parliament, and have been favored with a list of Bills that have become Acts. Some of these will no doubt prove of advantage to the country, and, we trust, remove some of the evils of which complaint has been made. One cry, however, is yet unheeded,—nothing done to remove the burden of complaint, and the evil will continue to exist for a season longer: that is the subject of settling our wild lands, and providing homes for those who have grown up among us or who may come to our Province with the intention of settling here. Every periodical of the country tells of the numbers who have gone or are going to the United States, to seek for employment or a home. We are asked why it is that our young men and others leave this country to seek farms, millions of acres of our lands being yet unsettled. If the past and present is to be continued, they will remain unsettled for generations to come. We answer that there are two reasons for their doing so.

First. Our lands are kept at prices too high for early settlers, and thus those that would retire back for land at cheaper rates. Turn these to the Western States, where they can purchase land on very favorable terms, and on terms very easy, they are, as compared with ours.

The second evil is the system of stripping the land, before it is sold, of all the timber. This, in many cases, is all the settler has to depend on for his season's living; and when the intending purchaser goes and sees the timber gone, the best slashed and wasted, and the rest lying rotting, he turns about and leaves as fast as he can. This system of stripping the land for almost nothing, and that to no great detriment of the country, is injurious in the extreme. The same timber sold by the settler would bring far more. But the great evil is the quantity left to rot, which benefits neither the government nor the people.

A cursory glance at the management of our public lands for several years back and under several governments, must at once strike the beholder with astonishment. It would almost seem as if the few who have hitherto controlled these matters cared for neither the country nor the people—their only object being to get money, even at a dreadful sacrifice. Common sense must tell us that the object of a government ought to be for the public good, for the welfare of the people; and when that is not the case, the government will become the reproach of the people and a curse to the country. We are glad to be able to say, to the honor of the present government, that this subject is about to receive some consideration at the hands of its members. Our worthy member, who is the tried friend of the new settlers, has just returned from Quebec, and he informs us that he obtained a promise that the government would give the subject due consideration during the recess. It is time that something was done.

The City Fathers to visit the City of Rochester on Tuesday next.

From the Minutes of the Town Council it will be seen that it is the intention of our City Fathers to visit the City of Rochester, as the representatives of this thriving Town. During the flying visit of the Rochester Council last week, they cordially and generously extended an invitation to the members of this Council to visit their city. Mr. Brown, agent for the steamer Corinthian, also offered the use of this splendid steamer for the purpose. It appears that upon a formal invitation being offered, the members of the Council agreed to visit our neighbors. We hope that this return of civilities will be the means of cementing the two places more closely and warmly together, and also the means of acquainting those across the Lakes of the immense stores of lumber, timber, minerals, &c., which we possess, and which only require an outlet and market to produce an effect on our general trade and status that very few are able now to even dream of. Let our Council go about this in the right way—go well represented, and take an interest in the affair, so as to effect something good, if possible, and also so as to leave a favorable impression of our Town, our County, and Canadians, but especially of the sound judgment of the people in the choice of their representatives. Let Peterborough be neither last nor least in the matter.

Our Fathers! where are they!

Rather an amusing instance of the way in which the wise men of the town do business was exhibited on Monday evening. A stranger would have been delighted with the whole proceedings. Disorder triumphed over order, and an indescribable scene followed. If a few from the corners were gathered to transact important business we might expect something of an exciting nature—once firm. But when our Conscript Fathers so far forget themselves as to enact scenes that even outdo "the ranting actor on the stage," the sooner "legislative halls" are emptied of them the better. Surely the calm discussion of nice points is preferable to uproarious, unseemly spoiling.

The Warden, R. D. Rogers, Esq., has begun to work with his accustomed energy, and has got the bridge re-planked.

Lakefield Agricultural Show will be on the 10th inst., Norwood Show on the same day, and the County Show on the 12th.

OIL FLOWING.

Yesterday the report spread abroad that oil was actually flowing from the well now being sunk. We had some misgivings, but thought we would go and see for ourselves. Accordingly we repaired to the spot, where we found crowds of anxious faces all enquiring the truth of the rumour. We, in company with several others, collected some of the water that had been pumped from the well, and found the most unmistakable evidences of the oily fluid. The stones lying in the channel where the water flows had the strongest smell of oil, and the water was covered with some substance which all present declared to be the desired fluid. The smell of the well itself is very strong, and the water has a strange taste. When the machinery is not working, the well can be heard boiling; but as there is a channel under the framework where any of the fluid can get away, we could not see what the stuff was like.

Mr. Craigie, who has superintended the work from the first, declares that the well has all the indications in regard to quantity of from ten to twenty barrels a day, and infers us that there are better indications than could be perceived in wells that were yielding that quantity in the West. And as far as Mr. Craigie is concerned we have perfect faith in what he tells. Every one now anxiously awaits the result of to-day's pumping, to see the result of the matter.

The Messrs. Craigie and Stephenson have held on to the enterprise with an uncommon tenacity and are now confident of success.—If so, to them is the whole honor due. They originated the idea of boring; they subscribed largely for their means, and have left nothing undone they could do to bring the matter to a successful issue. To them the whole praise is due, and should it prove a failure we believe they are just as worthy of praise. The mere trial is worth something.

The well is now 60 feet below the surface of the earth, and 50 feet below the surface of the rock. The strata penetrated are, first, 10 feet earth, 9 feet solid rock, 6 feet shale, then 35 feet rock, and now about two feet shale again; and the cost to this date is but trifling for the work done.

The machinery is of the simplest construction, costing but very little, and is so worked that no break can be made. It can be driven by gearing or by belts, at the option of the workmen. The whole shows there is genius amongst us if not capital.

It is needless to say that stock has rapidly risen in the last few hours.

Since writing the above, a closer test has been made, and there is now no doubt of the existence of oil.

BUCKHORN PIC-NIC.

We had the pleasure of being present at a Pic-Nic on Saturday last, held at Oak Orchard by the inhabitants of Buckhorn. Mr. N. Shaw, of Peterborough, having got through cutting and shipping lumber for the season, of which he has shipped 5,000,000 feet, placed the steamer Victoria at the disposal of his employees and friends for the day. Invitations were sent to Peterborough to a few friends who availed themselves of the opportunity to be present. About ten o'clock a. m., the steamer left the wharf, with a large number on board, who enjoyed themselves in various ways, there being a string band engaged for the occasion the liveliest merriment was kept up until the steamer was laid up at Oak Orchard. Three tables were erected in pic-nic style and the refreshments furnished were creditable to the parties who had the management of them. Amusements of all kinds were indulged in, such as dancing and swinging, but the most amusing of all was the Bear's race, for which Mr. Shaver carried off the palm. About sundown the boat started on her homeward trip; Buckhorn was reached about 7 o'clock, when the boat was made fast to the wharf, three cheers were given for the "Queen," three for Mr. Rose, Captain of the steamer, and three for N. Shaw, Esq., when the party separated happy to meet, sorry to part, but happy to meet again.

THE NEW ROAD.

We had the pleasure of visiting the Buckhorn Road, the construction of which is now going on, and were much pained over the new route by T. F. Nicholl and John Hall, Esqs. We were well pleased with the specification, which may be looked upon as almost an entire level. The road is being constructed in the best and most substantial manner, far surpassing any of the colonization roads. We were much struck with the amount of work done in so short a space of time with an average of ten men for the month. We also had the Gibson location pointed out to us, which appeared almost impassable and almost impracticable for travel, the two routes bearing no comparison; the new one does credit to our County Engineer. We observed the men at work, and must say that they exhibit every sign of energy and skill to perform what they are instructed to do.

PRESENTATION.

On Tuesday last, the pupils of the Peterborough Union School assembled together and presented to J. S. Peter, Esq., a Gold Watch Chain, accompanied by an address, to which Mr. Peter made a suitable reply. The following is the address:

Mr. Peter,

Dear Sir,—It is with feelings of deep regret that we are now assembled together to bid you farewell, on the occasion of your resignation; and to present you with this token of our esteem and kind regard. We can look back with feelings of the most pleasing kind when we consider the many happy hours we have spent together, and in future will always strive to remember the instructions you have so faithfully laboured to instil into our youthful minds. If at any time we have grieved you, think of it only as a childish freak, which, if thought of, would never have been committed. Be assured, sir, that the many kind acts you have done, and the deep interest you have always manifested in our studies, will ever be gratefully remembered; and though no longer our instructor, you may rely upon our good wishes for your future success; and our prayer for you is that the Fatherly Hand which has provided for you thus far, may still continue its protecting power, and bring you safely at last to that land where parting is unknown.

(Signed by the Committee in behalf of the Pupils.)

Walter Weir,	Benj. Armstrong,
Robert Heyman,	Robert Brown,
Samuel McKee,	James Benson.

Homœopathist.

We learn that Dr. J. Adams, Toronto, who is physician to some of the first families in Toronto, and a very skillful and experienced practitioner, will probably in a short time visit Peterborough for a few days, and during his stay deliver one or two public lectures on the science of health.

School Board on Tuesday Evening.

We learn that there was no quorum of the Board, although important business was to be transacted. Two Divisions are now vacant, and we understand that those who receive the appointments were notified to be ready for duty on yesterday morning; yet, to all intents and purposes, they are not yet engaged, consequently, unless the Chairman will take the responsibility of setting them to work, these Divisions will have to be dismissed until a meeting can be convened and a quorum obtained.

Since writing the above we understand that the Chairman did set the new teachers to work.

Fires.

On Monday night the Ashery belonging to Mr. Boswell took fire from fresh lime being in it. We did not learn whether the affair was insured or not.

Also, on Tuesday night, a house on Simcoe street, owned by Mr. McCombe, and which was partly occupied and partly unoccupied, caught fire. The firemen, by their timely arrival and efforts, confined the flames to a part of the roof, three feet of the building not suffering much. We heard that this building was insured in the Royal.

Donations for September.

Mr. Kennedy papered the large room and supplied the bordering; a bag of apples from Mrs. Gilmour; 2 lbs. yarn from Mrs. Clark, Ashburnham; Mrs. F. Hanlan, a large bundle of wearing apparel; Mrs. Tate, a bundle of children's clothing; Mrs. James Millar, Otonabee, 1½ bushels of potatoes.

The Committee of the Home feel assured that they have only to remind their friends, the farmers, who have just reaped such an abundant harvest, of the approaching day of thanksgiving, as a suitable opportunity for shewing their gratitude to Almighty God for His mercies bestowed on them, by sending to the poor of the Home a share of these thank offerings.

Court of Chancery, Peterborough.

This Court is now in sitting: His hon. V. C. Mowat presiding.

Pearson vs. McConkey. This first case on the cause list was tried yesterday. Jas. McLennan, Esq., and E. Burnham, Esq., for Plaintiff, Edward Blake, Q. C., and W. H. Scott, Esq., for Defendant.

McPherson vs. Bradburn. The other case will be tried to-day.

Battle of the Boyne.

Educational Picnics and Examinations

To the Editor of the Peterborough Examiner.

Sir,—Knowing you to be friendly to the proper education of the young, and to everything that has a tendency to elevate man morally, socially and intellectually; and knowing too, sir, that you have borne the burden and heat of the day in the school-room, I hope a few observations from my note-book, taken during a late visit to Smith and Monaghan, where I attended the pic-nics in said townships in connection with the schools of the same, will not, I hope, be unacceptable. I here venture to send them to you, either to print in your paper, or throw them aside in your basket of dishonoured manuscripts, one or other, just as you think proper.

The gatherings both as respects Monaghan and Smith, were well attended. The roads were crowded with carriages and waggons containing loads of living lumber, matron and maid, men and their wives, with smart lads and blushing lasses, and humble pedestrians of all conditions in life, intermixed with lots of young men, rather fantastically dressed, I must say. Surely I must be mistaken in supposing them natives; for as they were importations from fashionable Paris or New York city. Fantastically dressed they were; their boots, pants and coats of the latest cut, and all of them toiling models, doing the same thing in the air wild that the plate of fashions does in the magazine intended for tailors and dress-makers. The species is an odd one; being thought without preparation, and profound without reflection: for they learn without study and know without learning, and if you want to know them, Mr. Editor, I here describe them. They are known by their reserved air, excessive sensitiveness, and utter indolence; by fashionable cut hair, and shirt collars of the most aristocratic model, very conceited and very affected, very disagreeable and very useless.—I hope none of them were either the teachers of Smith or Monaghan. But even in this supposition I may err, for fops are found now a days among all professions and in all classes. Of one thing I am aware, that both Otonabee, Smith and Monaghan contains not a few good teachers, and among them I may mention Messrs Douglas, Wood and Dunbar. Mr Wood is know as energetic and talented, almost turned grey in the work. Of Mr. Douglas I have no acquaintance, but a gentleman near the town Hall on the day of the pic-nic to Monaghan told me (I use his words), "he is a workman that needs not to be ashamed, and from observation I can say that the singing of his scholars at the opening of the affair was done in quite an artistic manner. I do not know Mr Dunbar personally, but this I will say, that his scholars that day did honour to themselves and their teacher. In our county (Mr. D.) was considered a good teacher, and on many subjects not connected with school studies he possesses more than a smattering, obtained by extensive reading and reflection, having at all times access to a well furnished library of his own. He, like Mr. Douglas, is rather retiring and bashful, and all of them, with Mr. McDongald of Smith, to be appreciated require only to be known.

Mr. Roberts appears interested in his work, and able to do it, too, but I suggest that in future examinations some classification be adopted, classes in reading, geography, &c., being put together, viz., the readers in the 1st, 2nd, 3rd, &c., books in all the schools reading in the same class, children of the 3rd class being not found in a ring composed of the 4th and 5th, and junior heads to grammar being kept separate from others more advanced, without doing something like this some will carry off what they have no right to, while humble merit will go away unnoticed and unrewarded.

These suggestions are given not in an unfriendly or fault-finding spirit, no, but rather the reverse: it was apparent to all observers that a proper classification was not among the arrangements of the day, either in Smith or Monaghan, and this being the case, let what was a wanting in 1865 be supplied in 1866, should it so happen that Mr. Flint and the different councils of townships should do then what they have done in 1865.

Messrs. John and William Wood did their work well in Smith as examiners. As regards Monaghan, altho generally speaking the examiners did their work pretty well, yet on a few occasions the questions given the children were far from being appropriate.

Mr. Douglass had from his school about 35; Mr. Dunbar 20; Miss Dowlings less, while Mr Woods nearly out numbered them all, and of course had the lion's share of the prizes.

Although confessedly the schools in Peterboro county are behind the schools of Northumberland, yet it is hoped a better day is about to dawn upon them, of which the gatherings I have commented on are a good indication.—Yet something else is wanted. Teachers' association in each township, and last not least a County superintendent. Let association be set once put in operation and good no doubt will result from them. The destiny of teachers as a class are in their own hands. If they are to rise they must be push themselves let them do so and they will not go unrewarded.

I am, Mr Editor,

Yours truly,

A VOICE FROM NORTH MIDDLESEX.

Cobourg, Sept. 27th, 1865.

ON THE DIGNITY OF LABOUR

To the Editor of the Examiner.

Mr. Editor,—It is becoming fashionable, both in and out of the Canadian Parliament among snobs, shoddy, and other exquisites, to look down with truly aristocratic scorn upon the mechanic, farmer, and artizan, &c., and say sneeringly, "He is only a carpenter, or a smith." Let me ask these worthies, Mr. Editor, who talk so contemptuously of their brethern, by whose agency was it that the Netherlands were later lly captured from the sea, and for centuries has bidden defiance to the ancient monarch, who every moment thunders forth his wrath against the victors, and threaten to bury them beneath his waves? Who erected the Pyramids rising in all their majesty and almost mocking the corrosive tooth of time? Who put up St. Pauls, Trojan's Pillar, &c., &c.? the "gentleman" or the labourer? Methinks I hear another say, "He is only a scavenger." Only a scavenger, indeed!! And who, pray, has done most to banish miasmata, fevers, plagues, and pests of every kind? the physician or the labourer? Lords and ladies do not feed the hungry, or clothe the naked: they may, and often have contributed of their abundance to the needy; but then the hands that supplied them with alms were those of the labourer.—Kings, princes and capitalists have not drained morasses, levelled mountains, elevated plains, tunnelled the rock, or spanned rivers and glens with bridges and viaducts. You tell us they furnished the wealth which paid for this toil, but we deny your position, gentlemen. They never made a cent, they only furnished what had been put into their hands by the working man. We mean no reproach to people of rank, title or wealth. The reservoir that collects and disposes the living streams which minister to the wants of a city, or fertilize the thirsty plain, is a most important agency for the benefit of man: but then we cannot allow the lake or river to boast against the tributary rivulets that have supplied it with all the power or glory of which it seems to prond. We may say to the Ganges, or the Mississippi "What! but that that thou hast not received." Our motto shall be "Honour to whom honour is due" The world owes all its comforts, wealth, civilization, and refinement to labour; and, therefore, in tracing pedigrees, or heraldic monuments, we can find nothing so noble or honourable as labour.

One of the greatest scourges that can befal society, Mr. Editor, is to imprint a stigma upon labour; idleness, an aristocratic name, sycophancy, and the thousands of physical and moral evils that effect society, are the results. Strange that an one born of a woman could look upon our world, on a human body, or feel within himself a human soul, and yet come to the conclusion that man were made to be idle, or that having nothing to do, and doing nothing, were in the highest degree honourable!—constituting what the "shoddy" family call a gentleman. The first time the Deity is introduced to our notice in the Bible, it is in the character of a labourer: "In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth." And when we call Him 'Our Maker,' we mention one of His most honourable names. What a divine communion was given to industry, when our Saviour said "My Father worketh hitherto and I work," and the most distinguished men and women of patriarchal days, were accustomed to toil. Princes are engrandized flocks, feed the dumb and store the shuttle. "The sweet singer of Israel" was a shepherd, Peter and John were fishermen, and the "great Apostle of the Gentiles" was a tent-maker; and Milton in his Sketches from Ancient History tells us that even "the fabled Gods and Goddesses of antiquity were working divinities." Volcan was a blacksmith, and Diana of Ephesus did the work of our present factory girls. And the contributors at the present day, in Britain, to the cheap periodicals are many of them working men "Liberty, Equality, Fraternity," which which the French have so briefly and glowingly enunciated and written on the walls of their Houses of Assembly, their public offices, courts of justice, &c., must soon be the watchwords of the world. No confusion can arise from their adoption, and all revolutions have originated from the neglect of these great truths. God has created all men equal; and the mechanic, artisan, farmer, &c., should view themselves as the brethren and benefactors of mankind, and as human beings standing on a perfect level with the rest of his species.

Otonabee, Sept. 26th, 1865.

SERIOUS ACCIDENT TO A RAILWAY CONDUCTOR.—Mr. Chet Hamilton, conductor on the Grand Trunk Railway, met with a serious accident on Saturday night, as his train—the 12:30 Express was entering the trestle bridge, after leaving the Brockville Depot. It seems as the train started he stepped upon the rear platform of the last car, and unheedingly moved his head beyond the body of the car as the train got upon the bridge. The back of his head came in terrible collision with the timbers and stunned him. He was dragged the whole length of the bridge, and at the end, finally dropped upon the spikes, a distance of about eight feet below. He was picked up soon afterwards in a senseless condition and taken to the Courier House, where his wounds were dressed. His head was badly cut, his face was lacerated in an ugly manner, and he received severe injuries in the small of the back from the fall. His wounds are serious although not fatal, and it is probable he will be confined to his room for several weeks. The proximity of the cars to the side of the bridge, as they pass over it, is simply dangerous, and passengers and others should avoid projecting their heads beyond the line of the car. It is thought that Mr. Hamilton's attention was suddenly called by some noise, and that for the moment he forgot himself, hence the accident which may cause him his life.—Ex.

Mr. Hamilton is son-in-law to Mr. T. Beatty of this town.

The Fenian Excitement in Ireland.

THE IRISH AMERICAN SOLDIERS AT HOME.

The English and Irish papers are largely occupied with the Fenian question, which excites increasing alarm. If half the stories are true, matters are evidently reaching a crisis. Nearly every Irish paper contains some fact or rumor on the subject, which is eagerly caught into the English papers and commented upon. From these statements we select the following as illustrating the excitement:

A Waterford correspondent writes:

At every corner there is to be found the regular street ballad singer bawling forth "The Bold Fenian Boy." In every corner one is met with some sensational story of 100, 50, 10 or 1,000 men seeking other employment—workers of the narrator—England who were drilling the previous night at Killarney Bog, or some other waste. No case of drilling has yet, to my satisfaction, been shown to have taken place near the city.

A letter from Cork states:

Since the termination of the American war every steamship which arrives off Cork Harbor on her homeward voyage from New York or Boston, lands on these shores large numbers of young men who all served in the Republican army, who carry rather pistols, rifled guns, daggers, and other swords which they openly use in their persons all on through the city of Cork. These arrivals are ever ready to instigate their lawless dispositions with every opportunity, but the preparations making in America by the Fenian brotherhood for the invasion of Ireland.

Last week, two of these gentry entered a railway carriage, some few miles from Cork, in which were seated two ladies and two gentlemen. No sooner had the train started than one of them announced that they were officers in the Federal army during the war, but now that they had conquered the rebels they had come over to Ireland to prepare for its invasion. They spoke without any reserve, announcing that ships are at present preparing to bring over 50,000 well-disciplined Feinians, fully armed, who would be met here by 20,000 well drilled men, who would drive the British army into the sea.

This brought a smile on the faces of the listeners, until one of the fellows, to the horror of the ladies, produced from a belt or sash he wore a five-chambered revolver, and he, also leaving aside the skirt of his coat, drew out a short sword dangling at his side. After declaiming the efficiency of the weapon, that they assured the soldiers that thousands of similar words and revolvers were distributed among the brethren throughout Ireland, having been sent to them by their American friends.

The Limerick Chronicle says:

Within the past fortnight several letters have been received by farmers and others in the County Tipperary, from their relatives in America, containing really startling intelligence, of which belief, exclusive of the line of action about to be pursued by the Feinians in that country. One young man writes to his father, inclosing an order for £10 and informs him that it will cause his leave reached him before this (the writer's) arrival in Ireland, in concert with a large number of the deliverers of the "old country."

Another young man, named Macnamara, who emigrated to the United States a few years since from Newport, County Tipperary, sent passage warrants to his mother and brother last week. In a letter which accompanied them he entreats his mother to hasten away with all possible speed, "if she had the slightest wish to see his face, as there will soon be hot times in Ireland, before one month the ports would be blockaded, and her emigration was then beyond all hope." We understand communications of similar import have been received by persons of note in the counties of Limerick, near Clare.

Similar statements could be given to a great length, but sufficient evidence has been adduced to show that there exists in Great Britain a real apprehension, not to say panic, respecting the aims and organization of the mysterious Fenians.

A Harris Case in Richmond—Another Female Shooter.

About twelve o'clock on Friday night, R. H. Mead, of Manchester, was shot by Mr. Ould, proprietor of a bar-room and restaurant on Franklin street, between Thurteenth and Fourteenth. The affair occurred on Franklin street, nearly opposite the Eureka saloon. The pair were heard in altercation—the woman saying pleadingly, "don't leave me; don't leave me!" Mead started down the street, followed by the woman, who, finding that he would not stop, drew a pistol and shot him, the ball entering the body to the left of the spinal column and ranging forward remained in the body. It caused the man a few moments before thrown bricks at her to drive her away and then attempted to leave.

Almost immediately after the shooting occurred the woman was taken into custody by a policeman. She begged to be allowed to see Mead, and was taken to where he was. Her face was badly swollen, as if from a severe blow. As soon as she saw him she exclaimed, "Bob, Bob, how are you? Can you forgive me? I begged you to save me from ruin, and you would not." "Well," he said, "you have returned to me, and now you have to attend to business: you have no money." "No," said she, "I did not want your money," and one drew from her pocket a roll of bills and a watch and chain, and gave them to him.

When told by bystanders that she had better keep some of it, she replied no, that she went to the deed before her world. Mead said he would forgive her, and there was a general weeping and wailing.

She was taken before Coroner McElree who refused bail, and consigned her to Castle Thunderer to await her examination. The wounded Mead, when he said to be in a very danger us one, was dressed by Dr. White.

It appears that Mead had been living on terms of intimacy with Mrs. Ould for about three years, and one states that he was upon the Point that he would make her his wife. On the night in question, however, he informed her that he intended to live with her no longer, and, according to his statement, supper and they were separated good friends, when he was unexpectedly shot.

EXTRAVAGANCE.—The Hamilton Spectator has a paragraph on the extravagance of Parliamentarians:—"As I have said, the Legislature presents a fine field for the talents of the economist. The gross anomalies that exist are simply disgraceful to all who support their continuance; and that is especially so in the messenger department. Every page, except a few, is overloaded with these people, who contribute exceptional efficiency to appear to be drawn their monthly allowance. Men who see position represent the chaos of education, who are simply charges with little or nothing else to do, receive from $800 to $900 a year! Were many of the clerks, who require at any rate to be educated men, receive $600 a year, messengers, men who would, probably, if not employed in the House, be sawing cordwood at two shillings a cord, receive a nice round per diem allowance of $2.50, and so on through the entire service.

SIR ALBAN'S RAID.—One of the party interviewed, has written a letter to the New York Herald, stating that it was a mistake to suppose the Canadian Government had paid bacs to the St. Albans Bank all the money taken by the raiders. He states that only $50,000 was refunded out of $150,000 taken. The writer also states that recently, some time since, a demand for the balance, upon the English Government, and from Lord of the Canadian Ministry. This is in keeping with American honesty. It was not enough to satisfy them, we should pay out of the Treasury of the Province the full amount lost through the acts of Lamotte, but we are now to be asked to pay the full amount taken by their own rebels from their own Banks, of money our office als never saw or handled. The great thing we may expect to hear is, that Engl nd has been asked to pay their war debt. There would be just as much reason in the one as the other.

INCREASE OF TRAFFIC ON THE GREAT WESTERN.—The traffic on the Great Western Railway for the present week exceed the enormous figure of $84,341 72. The corresponding week of last year was the time of the Provincial Exhibition in this city, but yet the receipts from ordinary traffic the present year are in excess of the extraordinary receipt of the Exhibition week the full margin of $2,956.47. The fact gives ample evidence of the constantly increasing prosperity of this important interest.

The Military School in Hamilton is closed. The School has been a failure.

The Crops in Ireland.

CAVAN.—We regret to say that their is no longer any doubt as to the existence and spread of the potato blight in this locality, and we greatly fear from the reports that have reached us, that the crop is likely to suffer to a certain extent from its ravages. Potatoes sown in rich retentive soils are suffering the most, but the entire crop is more or less affected. A week of fine, fair stable harvest weather has enabled farmers to dig a portion of the crop, but in some places considerable injury has been done by the heavy and incessant rain which fell every week after reaping had commenced.—Cavan Sentinel.

SLIGO.—We regret to announce, from enquiries which we have made, that the potato blight is rapidly spreading in this county. Its appearance was somewhat a sudden and has taken many by surprise. The yield however, is so much above the average that even if the portion affected by the disease be not taken into account the crop will still be much better than it has been for some years; and considering the advanced period of the season at which the blight made its appearance, it is hoped that it may not prove so bad as some seem to anticipate. Up to within the last month the tubers exhibited none of the signs which invariably accompany the disease, and it was the sanguine expectation that our potatoes excellent would eventually recover its pristine soundness.—Sligo Independent.

DOWN.—Harvest operations are far advanced here. Wheat is all cut, and a large proportion of it in the stack-yard. A few days of fine weather will enable the farmer to finish the reaping of barley and oats, so that about the middle of the month all may be expected to be cleared off, and the joyful sound of harvest home to resound over every district.—Downpatrick Recorder.

DERRY.—We regret to state that several correspondents inform us that they have also had the potato blight, but the majority of them add, not to any great extent. While in the district the potato crop this year is expected to be full an average one, but every account of disease has clouded on with alarm and anxiety. It cannot be expected that there will be a total absence of the potato blight, and we think, on the whole from the accounts that have reached us, the farmers have a great reason to complain.

ANTRIM.—VICTIM.—A few weeks a young woman named Mary Scott, about 22 years of age, residing in Scotch Gardens, was going down a field in the Kilcoan, when her foot caught in a rabbit burrow and she was precipitated on the ground and she was precipitated from the top to the bottom of the quarry. She fell on her head and was killed on the spot.

MONTREAL PRODUCE MARKET.

FLOUR.—The receipts of the week have again been very light, and quite inadequate to the demand, and all grades have improved in value. There has been an active demand for the higher grades, mostly for American markets, and gradually advancing prices have been realized. Latest sales have been at $7.27 to $7.50 for Superior Extra, $7.05 to $7.25 for Extra, and about $6.80 for Fancy. Superfine has been much wanted for bakers' use, and all offered have been sold freely, the latter sum being eagerly caught up at very extreme prices, as $7 must go much, while deliveries from country are only some $6.75 to $6.90. Canada Superfine also in fair supply and prompt request at full relative prices. Middling and outlands, though held higher, find few buyers at the advance.

BAG FLOUR.—In short supply, and prices have kept pace with the general improvement, sales comprising some round $3.20 to $3.30, and on Monday $3.10 to $3.20. At the close of the week quotations are mainly regulated by what can be procured, no more than enough can be picked for while the present high prices rule there; but it is to be doubted if a second will afford very little, if any, margin for export to the States; and were supplies more abundant, buyers would no doubt accede to the extreme views of sellers. The same principle of purpose is very reluctantly paid, and stocks are kept at the lowest possible point. Butter steadily declining on a most liquable decline the moment upon the improve, which it is presumed would be the case were the many mills now idle for want of water to resume grinding.

WHEAT comes for sale very unsparingly, and there are few sales to note. U. C. Spring on the spot commands $1.15 to $1.17½, but there is no disposition to operate for forward delivery even at very short dates.

PEAS.—Are quiet, but have to a mea are received one. Last Sale were at 85 to 87½ for forwards afloat.

OATS.—Some sales may be noted, mostly on C. P.

PORK.—With an improved demand and a consequent rise upon the street, holders are now asking their pretension, and sales transacted which go much as high as $21, which is much considered the current rate.

The Great Original Painting

OF THE

BATTLE OF THE BOYNE!

By BEN. WEST, Late Royal Academy.

S. PARKES TOURNE & Co., would respectfully announce that they have now ready for inspection a splendid Engraving on Copper Line and of this magnificent HISTORICAL PAINTING, representing the Battle at the moment of the death of the gallant King, size 30 inches by 22 inches.

The Subscribers finished copy of the great Original will be found unparalleled success in every respect to the public either in this country or Great Britain. It has been executed by the first Artists of the day, and no trouble or expense has been spared to make it worthy of the fully celebrated Painter, and the GREAT HISTORICAL FACT which it represents, and which ought never to be forgotten by those who now enjoy the CIVIL AND RELIGIOUS LIBERTY which this event, more than any other in our history, was the means of establishing and perpetuating.

In times like these, when the principles of our Forefathers are being assailed on every hand, it is necessary needful for each heart and mind from whence springs our Constitutional form of Government; and nothing contributes more to aid us in keeping in remembrance those momentous passages in our history than faithful representations by great Masters. And certainly no historical Subject has been more ably treated than the above event by this celebrated Painter.

In presenting this Picture to the Protestant Community, and especially to those who are more fortunately alive to the vast benefits conferred on us by the ever memorable events of 1690, the Publishers feel every confidence that their efforts will be fully appreciated, and that this Picture will find an honored place in every Protestant home in the British Provinces.

Price of the Picture, $3.

HINTS TO EDITORS.

One reader cries, Your grist's to grave,
Too much morality you have,
Too much about religion;
Give me some witch or wizard tales,
Of ship-shop ghost with flats and scales,
And features like a pigeon.

I love to read, another cries,
Those monstrous fashionable lies—
In other words, those novels.
Composed of kings, and princes, and lords,
Of border wars, and gothic hordes,
That used to live in hovels.

The man of dull scholastic lore
Would like to see a little more
Of first-rate scraps of latin;
The greater fain would know the price
Of tea and sugar, fruit and rice;
The draper, silk and satin.

Another cries, We want more fun,
A witty anecdote or pun,
A rebus or a riddle;
Some wish for parliamentary news;
And some, perhaps, of wiser views,
Would rather hear a fiddle.

Another cries, I want to see
A jumbled-up variety,
Variety in all things—
A miscellaneous hodge-podge print,
Composed (I only give the hint)
Of multifarious small things.

I want some marriage news, says Miss,
It constitutes my highest bliss,
So hear of weddings plenty;
For in the time of general rain
None suffer from a drouth, 'tis plain,
At least not one in twenty.

I want to hear of deaths, says one,
Of people totally undone
By losses, fire, or fever.
Another answers, full as wise,
I'd rather have the fall and rise
Of raccoon skins and beaver.

Some signify a secret wish
For news and then a favorite dish
Of politics to suit them;
But here we rest at perfect ease,
For should they swear the moon was cheese
We never should confute them.

Or grave or humorous, wild or tame,
Lofty or low, 'tis all the same.
Too haughty or too humble;
Sir, brother editors, pursue
The path that seems the best to you,
And let the grumblers grumble.

Artemus Ward's Autobiography.

BY HIMSELF.

New York, near Fifth Avenoo Hotel,
Oct. 31st.

DR. SIR—Urs, into which you ask me to send you some leading incidents in my life so you can write my Bogfry for the papers comes dooly to hand. I hav no doubt that an article onto my life, grammatycally jerked and properly punktoated, would be a addition to the chaois literatoor of the day.

To the yooth of Amerika it would be vallyable, as shoen how high a pinykle of fame a man can reach who commenst his career with a small canvas tent and a pea-geen ox, which he rubbed it off while a-ratchin hisself ajin the center pole, causin in Rahway, N. J., a discriminating mob to say humbugs would not go down in them village. The ox resown'd agricultural pursoots shortly afterwards.

I next tried my hand at given Blind-man concerts, appearin as the poor blind-man myself. But the infamous cuss who I hired to lead me round town in the day time to excite sympathy, drank freely of a spiritoous licker unbeknowns to me one day, & while under them influonce he led me into the canal. I had either to tear the green bandidge from my eyes or be drownded. I tho't I'd restore my eyesight.

In writin about these things, Mr. Editor, kiner smooth 'em over. Speak of 'em as eccentrinsities of gen'es.

My next ventur would har bin success if I hadn't tried to do too much. I got up a series of wax figgers, and among others that of Socrates. I thot that a wax figger of Old Sock would be poplar with eddykated peple, but unfortinitly I put a Brown linen duster and a U. S. army regulation cap upon him, which peple with classical eddykations said it was a farce. This enterprize was unfortinit in other respects. At a certain town I advertised a wax figger of the Hon'ble Amos Perkins, who was a Railroad President and a great person in them parts. But it appeared I had shown the same figger for a Prist named Gibbs in that town the previs season, which created an immense toosmult, & the audience remarked "shame onto me," & other statements of the same similarness. I tried to mollify em. I told them that any family possessin children might have my she tiger to play with half a day, & I wouldn't charge em a cent, but alars! it was of no avail. I was forced to leave, and I infer from an article in the Advertiser of that town, in which the Editur says: "Although time has silvered this man's head with its frosts, he still brazenly wallows in infamy. Still are his snakes round and his wax works unrebukable. We are glad that he has concluded to never rezumt our town, although, incredible as it may appear, the fellow really did contemplate so doing last summer; when, true to the craven instincts of his black heart, he wrote the hirlings knaves at the obscure journal across the street to know what they would charge for four hundred small bills, to be done on yellow paper! We shall recur to this matter again."

I say, I infer from this article that a prejoodice still exists against me in that town.

I will not speak of my once being in straitened circumstances in a certain town, and of my endeavourin' to accumulate wealth by lettin myself to Sabbath School pic-nices, to sing ballads adapted to the understandins of little children, accompanying myself on a clarionett—which I forgot where I was one day, singin instead of "Oh, how pleasant to be a little child,"

Rip snap—set 'em up again,
Right in the middle of a three cent pie,

which mistake, added to the fact that I couldn't play on the clarionett except makin it howl dismal, broke up the pic-nic, and children said in voices ch ked with emotions where was their home and where was their Pa? on I sed be quiet dear children, I am your Pa, when made a young woman with two twins by her side say very angrily, "Good heavens forbid you should ever be the Pa of any of these innocent ones, unless it is much desirable for them to expire ignominously up onto a murderer's gallus!"

I say I will not speak of this. Let it be Berried in Oblivyon.

In your article, Mr. Editur, please tell Mm what sort of a man I am.

If you see fit to kritisize my Show speak your mind freely. I do not object to kritisism. Tell the public, in a candid and graceful article, that my Show abounds in moral and instartlin curiosities, any one of whom is worth double the price of admission.

I have thus far spoken of myself exclooseively as an exhibitor.

I was born in the State of Maine of parents. As an infant I attracted a good deal of attention. The nabors would stand over my cradle for hours and say, "How bright that little face looks! How much it grows!" The young ladies would carry me round in their arms, saying I was mozzer's buzzy darlin' and a sweet 'esty little ting. It was nice, tho' I wasn't old enoff to properly appreshate it. I am a healthy old darlin' now.

I hev allers sustained a moral character. I was never a railroad conductor to my life.

Altho' in early life I did not invariably confine my-elf to truth in my small bills, I hav bin gradooally growin' respectabler and respectabler every year. I hav my children and never mistake another man's wife for my own. I'm not a member of any meetin house, but b'leeve in meetin houses, and shouldn't feel safe to take a dose of laudenum and lay down in the streets of a village that hadn't any with a $1,000 bill in my vest pocket.

My temperament is billous, altho' I don't owe a dollar in the world.

I am an early riser, my wife is a Presbyterian. I may add I'm also bald-headed. I keep two cows.

I liv in Baldinsville, Indiany. My next door nabor is old Steve Billins. I'll tell you a little story about Old Steve that will make you larf. He jined the Church last Spring, and the minister said, "You must go home now, Brother Billins, and erect a family altar in your house," whereupon the egregjis old ass went home and built a reg'lar Pulpit in his sittin' room. He had jiners in his house four days.

I am (56) years of age. Time, with his relentless scythe is ever busy. The Old Sexton gathers them in, he gathers them in. I keep a pig t is year.

I don't think of more, Mr. Editor.

If you should giv my portrait in connection with my Bogfry, please hav me engraved on a languishin attitood, leanin on a marble pillar, leavin my back hair as it is now.

Trooly yours,
ARTEMUS WARD.

FARMING IN CANADA.

You may think it strange, but I question if the best farmers in America are not to be found in Upper Canada. They beat us in raising wheat; their barley is certainly superior to ours in quality, and I think the same is true of oats. In the cultivation of root crops we are nowhere. Don't get angry. We beat them in raising corn, and in all crops which partake rather of a commercial than a strictly agricultural character. We are willing to raise small crops if we can get large profits, while a Canadian farmer, partaking largely of the Scotch and English conservative character, continues on the even tenor of his way. He is not constantly looking for some easier method of earning a living. He is a farmer, and his father was a farmer before him, and he intends to live and die a farmer. If the midge destroys his wheat he does not, as we did in this section, propose to turn the whole country into a grand apple and pear orchard. He looks out for some variety that will ripen sufficiently early to escape the ravages of the insect. I have often remarked that where a new kind of wheat wheat has been alluded to in the Genesee Farmer, it attracts more notice, ten times over, in Canada than in this section. A few years ago, I induced some gentlemen to contribute a few hundred dollars to get up a wheat show. We offered large premiums and managed by personal persuasion to induce a few farmers to show their wheat. The affair was essentially a failure. Had it been a big pumpkin show it would have been a grand success. The entries of wheat at the Provincial Show are three times more numerous than at our own State Fair, even when held in the centre of the wheat-growing districts, and the number of people who crowd around the samples, shows the interest which is felt in the matter. The Diehl wheat, advertised in the Farmer last month, attracted at once the notice of the Canada farmers, and one of their agricultural societies sent a delegation to Indiana to inquire into its merits. They were so well pleased with it that they purchased eight hundred bushels for seed. Such enterprize is commendable. No wonder they beat us raising wheat. This Diehl wheat closely resembl s the Scules, and I should not be surprised if it turns out to be this variety. Its chief merit is its earliness, and it is probable that this quality is due to the fact that it has been grown for several years in a more southern latitude. There can be no doubt that, as far as earliness is concerned, we should get our seed wheat from a more southern rather than a northern latitude, and I have no doubt that should this Diehl wheat prove to be the Soules, it will ripen earlier for two or three years than the Soules grown from seed raised raised here.—Genesee Farmer.

According to the Quebec Chronicle, a fatal disease has broken out among the pigs in parishes on both banks of the River St. Lawrence, between that city and Montreal. It is a species of sore throat, and is said to cause almost immediate death. Many farmers are said to have lost their most valuable pigs. The cattle disease in England continues to occupy the savans as well as the agriculturists of Europe. A convention of veterinarians had met at Vienna and pronounced its origin to be from Russia. Very stringent regulations are being enforced in Austria. Cattle are not allowed to be moved from any place or farm without previous inspection. In London, out of sixteen thousand cows kept by milk dealers, upwards of two thousand have died or been killed in consequence of this disease. One cow-keeper had lost eighty to six weeks.—The importation of live animals into the United Kingdom is under strict supervision This importation is extensive, reaching for the seven months of the present year, up to 31st July, a total of 92,116, exclusive of calves, sheep and lambs, swine and hogs which gave in the same time an aggregate of 398,971.

A PREPARATION FOR PRESERVING LEATHER.—We translate from the Gerber Courier a recipe for a preparation which is said to insure great durability to leather, and to make it very pliable and soft. It consists of four articles, tallow, soap, resin and water. These ingredients are prepared as follows: Twenty-one parts of tallow are melted in a vessel, three parts of resin added, and the two when melted mixed well together. In another vessel seven parts of good washing soap are dissolved in seventy parts of pure rain water. After it is dissolved and the mass heated to the boiling point, we add the part prepared before, let it boil once more, gently, and the preparation is ready for use. It is especially adapted to boots, harness leather and belting.—Shoe and Leather Reporter.

An American Journalist says of the Connecticut Legislature:—Either branch of it can out-chatter all the monkeys of a Brazilian forest, and an Albany brewery on tap couldn't furnish half the froth that it is charged with, and ready to uncork at the shortest notice.

See what the most popular and widely circulated periodicals say of our Establishment:

From the "Dispatch" of February 25, 1865.

We take pleasure in calling the attention of our readers to the announcement of Messrs. Devaugh & Co's Great Sale of Jewelry, Silver Ware, and Fancy Goods, in our advertising columns. We are personally acquainted with the members of this firm and know them to be gentlemen of sterling worth and integrity. Their stock of goods, for variety and extent, we have scarcely seen paralleled.

From the "Mirror of Fashion," March 1, 1865.

Messrs. Devaugh & Co's Great Sale of Jewelry, etc., opened on the 15th ult., and we venture to say that no finer display of goods was ever exhibited by any establishment in this city. The ladies thronged their bazaar almost to suffocation, although the streets were rendered nearly impassable by the melted snow and slush We predict for them a wonderful success.

From the "Ledger," February 28, 1865.

Our lady friends should visit the extensive establishment of Messrs. Devaugh & Co., No. 15 Maiden Lane, if they wish to indulge themselves with a sight which they will long remember. Such a profusion of elegant Watches Chains, Rings, Earrings, and, in short, of Jewelry of every name, kind and description, we never before witnessed. Their silver and plated ware is superb and almost casts into the shade the other splendid establishments which have long been the boast of our city. It is estimated that their stock is worth not less than one million of dollars.

How You Can Get a Prize.

Send Twenty-Five Cents to us, and as soon as we receive it we will mail you a Certificate, showing what you are entitled to. If the article or articles please you, send back the Certificate and One Dollar and we will forward you the article, no matter how costly it may be. If the article is not what you wish, state, when you send the Certificate and dollar, what other article of the same value you prefer and we will send it. If you wish more than one Certificate send us $1 and we will send five; for $2, eleven; for $3, thirty; for $10, sixty; for $15, one hundred.

Agents are wanted in the Army and in every place. We have an immense stock of goods to dispose of, and need a large number of Agents. Our terms to Agents are very liberal and some even of our Lady Agents are making from $5 to $20 a day. We give Agents 50 per cent. on all Certificates they sell provided they remit not less than $1 for eight.

PIANO-FORTES

DRIGGS' NEW PATENT.

ARE THE ONLY INSTRUMENTS constructed on a truly scientific principle That have greater strength, and will remain longer in tune than any other Piano The construction is simple and natural, all the extraneous lumber in the body of the instrumen is dispensed with; the sound boards are merely two arched planks of thin wood, like the front and back of a violin: the strings are attached to a strong iron fram, which is separate and entirely independent of the case, thereby dispensing with the old h ppy-fm of stringing by substituting straight bridges, preserving at the same time The Over Strung Bass, of which Mr Damon is the inventor By these improvements we gain much more vibratory power, at the same time preserving all its purity and richness of tone.

They have received the highest testimonials from the Press, and all the principal artists in the country, among which are:

Harry Sanderson,	L. M. Gottschalk,
Mrs. Mareigek,	S. Thalberg,
Theodore Eisfield,	Wm Mason,
Herman Wollenhaupt,	A Barili,
Francis H. Brown,	M. Strackosch,
Wm. Henry Fry	Charle- Fradel

Mr. EGESMUND THALBERG, the great pianist, says:—I have examined your new Piano-fortes and I cordially approve of its system of construction. Its principle, by which great increase of vibratory power is obtained, being very simple and perfectly philosophical. The tone is grand and noble: it has great capacity for sustaining the sound or singing, and its volume of tone or power I have never heard excelled in depth, purity and sympathetic sweetness.

Wm HENRY FRY, late musical critic of the N. Y. Tribune says:—I have examined your newly invented Piano-Fortes They merit all the praise given to them by Messrs. Thalberg, Gottschalk, Strackosch, Mason and others. As regards the structure, they are original and philosophical: in purity, volume, and continuity of tone; in vocal resemblance, and crowning excelence which enables the pianists to "sing" on the instrument. Your Pianos deserve the highest rank Your invention, in my opinion, is destined to work radical changes in the manufacture of Pianos throughout the world.

From the N. Y. Herald, Sept. 5.—Upon a careful examination of Driggs Piano-Forte, we find the results obtained are a very fine singing tone, great purity and brilancy throughout the entire instrument, not often found in Pianos constructed upon the old plan.

The N. Y. Times, July 12, says:—We have now an instrument without an equal. It can sing with a smoothe delicasy, perfectly unattainable on any other instrument; an ordinary player obtains with no exertion, the fullness of a Grand Piano Forte and they must speedily supercede the old styles.

GENTLEMEN:—Having thoroughly examined and tested the Piano-Fortes invented and patented by Mr S. B. Driggs, I am of the opinion that the tone resulting from his improvements, as exhibited in the instruments under examination, in points of richness, depth and brilliancy, equals that of the best Grand Piano-Fortes, and excells them in pure, musical and actual tone, power thus approximating closer to what I consider perfection in the instrument than has yet been achieved by any other system of manufacture.

Yours respectfully,
L. M. GOTTSCHALK.

THE FARMER.

Of all pursuits by men invented,
The farmer is the best contented;
His calling's good and profits high,
And on his labor all rely.

Mechanics all by him are fed,
Of him the merchants seek their bread;
His hands give meat to every thing,
Up from the beggar to the king.

The milk and honey, corn and wheat
Are by his labors made complete:
Our cloths must first from him arise,
To deck the lop and dress the wise.

We then by vote, may justly state
The ploughman ranks among the great;
More independent than they all
That dwell upon this earthly ball.

All hail! ye farmers, young and old,
Push on your plough with courage bold;
Your wealth arises from your clod,
Your Independence from your God.

If, then, the plough supports the nation,
And men of every rank and station,
Let kings to farmers make a bow,
And every man procure a plough.

A TRUE BILL.

Early on the morning of the fifteenth of April, information reached the French police that the Baroness de C. was lying dead in her bed, strangled with a piece of ribbon. She had been married as a widow to Baron de C., and was about twenty-eight years old very pretty, of engaging manners; and both she and her husband were known far and wide for lavish hospitality.

Three weeks before the murder the baron set out for Russia, where it was said that he inherited some property from a relative. During the absence of her husband, the baroness kept very much at home, with Ernestine Lamont, a beautiful girl of the most innocent and simple manners, who had been educated and protected by her. On the night before the murder the baroness went to the Opera. Ernestine, who was not very well, did not accompany her; neither did she sit up for her, as the baroness had a private key, and did not wish the young lady to be disturbed. It was the custom that when the baroness, on awakening in the morning, rang her bell, Earnestine went first to her bedroom. When, on the morning after the murder, no bell was heard to ring, the servants wondered and at last one of them went up to Ernestine's room to ask the cause. It was empty. Thinking she had gone as usual to the baroness' bedroom, the servant went thither. There the shutters were still closed, and the night-lamp burning on a little table by the bedside. On the floor lay the lifeless body of Earnestine. The girl now screamed for help; the other servants hurried up-stairs, and on opening the shutters it was seen that the baroness lay dead, evidently strangled with a piece of ribbon, which was at once recognized as belonging to Earnestine, who was lying in a swoon on the floor.

On coming to herself, it was naturally supposed that she would be able to throw some light on the matter, but, to the surprise at all, she showed a nervous hesitation hardly to be reconciled with innocence.—On further examination, it was found that the secretaire stood wide open, and that a quantity of papers and other articles were lying about in confusion, as if the contents of each drawer had been hastily turned inside out. By this time the police had arrived. With scarcely a moment's hesitation they pronounced that one of the inmates of the house must either have committed the crime, or at least been an accomplice in it. Evidently, also, there had been robbery added to murder; and, therefore, it was thought right to search the boxes of each member of the household. The servants were all willing; but when it came to Earnestine's turn to deliver up her keys, the young lady showed a strange unwillingness to do so. Of course the police persisted, and in a very little time discovered a large sum of money and several jewels belonging to the murdered lady carefully secreted at the bottom of her box.

"How does mademoiselle account for this money?" was the first question put to her.

"I do not know—I—cannot tell—pray—do not ask me," was the hesitating reply.

The suspicions already attached to her were considerably strengthened, and the police only discharged their duty in arresting her. The case was tried and Earnestine Lamont found guilty.

A young lawyer named Bernard, whose knowledge of Earnestine's previous character made it very hard for him to believe her guilty, resolved to see her. After some little difficulty, permission was granted him to visit the condemned in prison. But if he went thither with any faith in her innocence, he left the prison without doubt of her guilt. Her answers to his questions were evasive and unsatisfactory.

On reaching home that evening, he found a note lying on his table. It was from Earnestine, and ran as follows:—

"My dear Friend,—I feel that I owe you at least some explanation for my strange conduct, and will therefore put you in possession of the facts of the case. It is only forestalling my intention. This letter would have been delivered to you after my death.

"You are aware of the circumstances which led me to regard the baroness as a mother. You are aware, too, of her husband's fatal propensity to the gaming table, a passion which in course of time led to an estrangement between them. The baroness was very beautiful, and still young, and failing to find that love and affection which she had hoped her husband would show her, formed an unfortunate intrigue. I was horror-struck when she informed me of this, but it was not for me to blame her. As might be expected, [illegible] result from this attachment. Her lover proved unworthy of her confidence, and succeeded, whether by threats or menaces I know not, in obtaining from her large sums of money. It was but a few days before her death that she confided this to me, and at the same begged me to take care of her jewels and money for her in my box, as she dreaded lest her sordid lover should obtain possession of them. The last time I saw her alive was on the night she went to the Opera. At what hour she returned I know not, for she always had a private key with her. The rest you know.

"Hence, dear friend, you will understand my reluctance to have my boxes searched; and my evasive answers as to the money and jewels found in them.

"Had I told the truth should I have been believed? No! And how could I say anything that would dishonour the good name of one who has been more than a mother to me? Besides, I did not know even the name of her secret lover, and I had never seen him. No; it is better as it is. I am ready to die. My secret, to all save you, shall die with me. That you believe in my innocence is the only comfort I have left me.

"Your unhappy friend,

ERNESTINE."

"Thank God!" murmured the young man, pressing the paper to his lips.—"Henceforth I will devote my life to prove your innocence to the world. God grant it may not yet be too late!"

Late though it was, Bernard at once repaired to the prefect's house, and after some difficulty procured a *l*mission. The prefect fortunately happened to be an old friend of Bernard's father, and it was because of this that the young man was admitted at so late an hour.

"But, my good friend," said the old man, after patiently listening to all he had to say, "believe me it is a useless task; there is no doubt that the young woman is guilty either as principal or as accomplice. Still, as you so earnestly wish it, you shall be permitted to search the apartments of the murdered lady. And now good night," he added with a smile, "and let me hear the result of your investigations."

Early the next morning, Bernard, accompanied by a gendarme, repaired to the baroness' house. Everything lay exactly as it had been left on the fatal morning; for the house had been and was still in the custody of the police. Not a drawer nor a cupboard escaped Bernard's notice.—There was no violence visible on the windows, as if forcible admission had been gained from the outside. Nothing, in fact, presented itself which gave the slightest clue to the mystery.

The search had now occupied several hours, and Bernard felt it was useless to remain there any longer. With a sad and heavy heart, therefore, he proceeded to leave the apartment. But in passing out into the entree, which was quite dark, his foot struck against something, which on taking up he found to be a hat. Thinking it belonged to the baron, he was about to hang it up with the others on the peg from which he supposed it to have fallen.

"That hat, monsieur, if you please; I do not remember to have seen it before. It is strange," remarked the gendarme, as he compared the hat in question with the others that hung up in the entree; "it is larger, and of a different shape to them!"

"Let me have it, my good friend; I will show it to the prisoner. If it should chance to belong to this secret lover of the murdered lady" thought Bernard to himself as he hurriedly drove to the prison.

Earnestine was anxiously expecting to see her friend, for he had promised to visit her that day again; and she wished to learn from his own lips whether he still believed in her innocence.

"Do you know this hat, Ernestine?" said Bernard, as he handed it to him, and [illegible] the paper [illegible] for [illegible] said that Ernestine had an enemy [illegible]

"Her husband!—be the murderer! Yes, it is plain—and we have been accusing an innocent girl!" ejaculated the prefect, carefully examining the hat; "but leave me now; I must think it over. But let me urge secrecy on you, and depend on me."

Early the next morning Bernard was again sent for to the perfect's house.

"I have carefully gone over the whole evidence since I saw you," he said, "and it certainly seems there is very strong suspicion against the baron. I have caused inquiries to be made, and have ascertained that the baron was a confirmed gambler, and that his journey to Petersburg was probably only a ruse to avoid arrest. It is a terrible case, and we must proceed very carefully. The baron stands very high in the public esteem, and it seems incredible that he could committed this horrible crime. Still that hat and the bill of the landlord made out in his own name prove at least that he must have been returned to Paris. Why should he return? What was his motive? However, I have despatched an agent of the secret police to Strasburg, to track his steps from that place. When I hear anything I will send for you."

On arriving at Strasburg the police agent at once repaired to the Maison Rouge.—The landlord perfectly remembered the baron's having stayed at his hotel for about a week, and having then gone, whither he could not say. The porter, however, could remember where his luggage was taken; it was to a house outside the city, on the road to Saverne, where a hired carriage was in readiness. He got into the carriage and drove off. But, as the driver was an old acquaintance of the porter's, it was no difficult matter to find him. He remembered the job perfectly, but averred that the gentleman's name was Thionville. He should not, perhaps, have paid much attention to this fact, had he not had a sister living at Saverne as chamber-maid in the same hotel to which he drove his fare. On enquiring at Saverne, the agent found that Monsieur Thionville had arrived at the hotel as stated and that he had remained there four days, during the greater of which time he had kept in-doors from indisposition.

The description the landlord gave of his person and luggage left no doubt on the agent's mind that he was on the right track. But not one further could be learnt. Still one important circumstance had been proved—namely, that, instead of proceeding on his journey to Russia, he had turned back on the road to Paris, under an assumed name.

The only thing that now remained to be done was to put an advertisement in the French and German papers, inviting the husband of the murdered lady to repair to Paris, in order to claim the property of his deceased wife. For, it was argued, if he had murdered her for the sake of getting possession of her money, it was very probable that he would take the bait now held out. Neither did this surmise prove to be incorrect.

Two months, or thereabouts, had elapsed, and the police were beginning to despair of getting further tidings of the baron, when a gentleman attired in deep mourning, and apparently bowed down with grief, presented himself at the bureau of the police.

"I have," said he, "by chance seen the fearful tidings of his wife's murder, in a St. Petersburg newspaper, and hastened back to Paris as quickly as I could. The shock, however, brought on a severe attack of illness, from which I have only recovered, otherwise I should have returned to Paris some weeks sooner."

Acting in obedience to the orders of his chief, the agent referred the baron to a comptoir, where would be furnished with the register of the death and burial of his wife.

On entering the room, the baron was politely invited to take a seat while the necessary papers were being found.

After the lapse of a quarter of an hour, an official entered the room and requested the baron to accompany him to another comptoir, where, to his dismay, he found himself submitted to a rigorous examination.

"But, Monsieur le Baron, when you left home on the 25th March, whither did you travel?" asked the chief officer.

"I travelled through Germany, en route for St. Petersburg.

"Good! But which was the first town at which you stayed?"

"Strasburg."

"Quite true," said his questioner, referring to some papers. "On what day did you arrive there?"

"On the 28th."

"Yes! and how long did you remain."

"Let me see—yes, it was one night and half of next day," replied the baron, with a little hesitation.

"And where did you proceed to next?" resumed the officer.

After some reflection, the baron said he had gone to Frankfort.

"Indeed!" indeed answered to officer, raising his eyes, and directing a steady glance towards the baron. "To Frankfort! I think you are mistaken. You say you arrived at Strasburg on the 28th, where you remained till the following day. But the landlord of the Maison Rouge says you remained at his house till April 7. How do you account for that, Monsieur le Baron?"

"Was I there a week? Yes, now I think of it, you are quite right, monsieur; for I met several friends there, who persuaded me to lengthen my stay.

"You also state that you next went to Frankfort; but if Monsieur le Baron reflects, he will remember that he went to Saverne in a close carriage."

"Yes, but that was only a day's trip, and had nothing to do with my journey," was the ready answer. "But may I ask, monsieur, why all these questions?"

"Excuse me, Monsieur le Baron; you are here to answer questions—not to ask them. Suffice it to say, it is usual under such circumstances. Now, please to attend. You said just now it was only a day's trip. I think; how was it you came to stay four days at Saverne?"

"I have [illegible] intended to remain one day at [illegible] but was [illegible] getting my [illegible] ready [illegible]

"Was that why Monsieur le Baron changed his name?"

"Changed my name? Monsieur must be in error."

"Not at all. You took the name of Thionville, for some reason best known to yourself. But as you seem to have forgot *this circumstance, will you have the good*ness to tell us where you went on leaving Saverne?"

"I returned to Strasburg."

"Pardon me, Monsieur le Baron, and allow me to refresh your memory. You went, or pretended to go, to a private house in the neighbourhood. But was not Paris the goal of your journey, and did you not arrive here about April 15th?"

"Monsieur!" exclaimed the Baron, "I have submitted to these impertinent questions quite long enough. By what right you presume to interrogate me in the manner you have done, I do not know. Rest you assured I shall represent the matter to the Minister of Police. I wish you a very good morning." And the baron turned himself round to leave the room.

"Not so fast, monsieur; I have not yet done with you," continued the officer, without noticing the interruption. "I repeat that you arrived in Paris about the 15th, and you were in your wife's bed-room on the night of the 15th and 16th."

At this word the baron leaped to his feet, his face distorted with the pangs of fear and passion.

"Calm yourself, Monsieur le Baron, I have not finished with you yet. Will you then explain, if you were not in the bedroom of your wife on the night in question—which you will remember was the night on which she was murdered—how it was that your hat was found in the passage?" And with these words he handed a hat to the baron.

All eyes were now bent upon him. He turned deadly pale, and remained speechless for a considerable time. At last he stammered forth incoherently:

"It is not my hat; I never saw this one before.....I had one like it.....but not this one."

"Not this!" exclaimed the relentless questioner. Monsieur le Baron, you have been followed step by step from that day to thy day you returned If this hat be not yours, then have the goodness to tell me how your bill incurred at the Maison Rouge, Strasburg found its way under the lining? Please to look for yourself."

"Hotel bill!" gasped the baron, as he struck his forehead with his fist.

"Yes, wretched man. By that little bit of paper, Providence has disclosed your crime, and has prevented an innocent girl from dying a felon's death. Confess that you entered your wife's room and committed the diabolical deed, for which you would have allowed another to suffer."

But such a confession was never made.

That night Baron de C. was safely shut up in prison till his trial should take place. All Paris rang with the news that the real murderer had been discovered, and that he was no other than her own husband. But that night the prisoner escaped. On entering the cell on the following morning, he was found lying stretched out on his couch, cold and stiff. It was supposed that, living a lawless life, he had been in the habit of carrying poison about him.

Years have now elapsed since the above events took place. Monsieur Bernard soon became one of the most celebrated ornaments of the French bar, and his wife, nee Ernestine Lamont, noted not only for the brilliancy of her balls and dinners, but for the affability of her manner and the courteousness of her disposition. Of the story of the murder nobody knows more than is here told.

The Tide in the Bay of Fundy.

A broad plain of red mud, stretching to the horizon, was suddenly streaked with silver lines, and then the "bore," a foot high, came rushing up the narrow lanes of water. It came slowly, roaring hoarsely, and the broad tide spread behind it. In half an hour the broad plain was covered by a wide red torrent, whirling like a millsluice, boiling, eddying, and sweeping everything that would float before it. From the water's edge the sea looked like a steep mound of water, a furious rapid, pouring down from the horizon By three p. m. the tide was up to the edge of the wharfs, and the muddy matter had cleared to the centre. Boats came creeping out of odd corners, and the sea was about forty feet deep over the plain of mud. According to the sailing directions, the tides in the Bay of Fundy seem to result from the cramming of the tidal wave into a narrow wedge-like opening. In the Bay of Minas the water sometimes rises 75 feet, while the tide in Gulf of St. Lawrence, beyond the narrow isthmus, 16 miles inside, rises 8 feet. In At Windsor, where the tide has to turn round a point, it rises 40 feet. In the wider part of the bay, it rises only 30 feet. In some parts of the Bay there are dangerous whirlpools, where the stream runs nine knots. The bottom seems to be composed of the debris of soft rocks, and it seems highly probable that the sea will break through and make an island of Nova Scotia, unless the land rises. About high-water mark the shore is strewed with very large boulders of coarse granite and numerous other stones foreign to this district. It is evident that this creek is growing larger by the wearing of its banks. They are undermined at high-water mark. The rock near the bridge is a soft limestone, full of fossils, interstratified with beds of close clay dipping at a high angle.

A carpenter took a holiday and went to Margate. When he returned home his friends asked what he saw. "Why," he replied, "I saw the sea, and now I see the saw."

Modern Means of Information.

It may be worth while to pause a moment and contrast the present means of information with the restrictions that curbed the human mind within the lapse of a comparatively short period. Who will look over the library of some antiquarian, will detect a corpulent compilation of leaves which are fashioned of parchment, and the chirography painfully coursed by the human hand.

During the middle ages, the learning of Europe was almost entirely confined to the denizens of the monasteries. With the arrogance of ignorance, the proud lordlings would superciliously summon the shaven priest to their presence when the necessity arose for the transmission of some written message. A military adventure or the song of some errant minstrel, was the only knowledge of lands beyond their own. Of the great Past, with its trobs of enterprise and glory, men and women knew nothing save from hazy legend. The intellect was torpid; and greed, and revenge, and tyranny, and lust were the controlling passions. It is a matter of wonderment, the topics of conversation in palace or bower in those dark and untutored days. The mental gloom was Cimmerian. Beneath the belted warrior and courtly dame, the great masses were serfs, whose possessions and lives were at the beck of their self-constituted superiors.

We will there has been some change since that gloomy period. To be sure the Arcadian vision of old dreamers has not been realized; for there are poverty, crime and remorse in the most favourable sections. Yet in civilized lands at the present moment there is no attitude or phase of the human family that excludes any character of information. Learning, however abstruse and complicated, is forced upon every comprehension, however reluctant. Say, if you please, there are regions where adults have been unable to secure a knowledge of their written tongue. The interfusion and contact of their intelligent fellows force upon them the accretion of their superiors.—There is not a sane man in the United States who has not pretty accurate knowledge of planetary movements and the laws of tides and seasons. He knows much of the geography of the earth, and the habits, habits, manners and government theories of all nations.

The printed sheet is accessible and preferable as the atmosphere. Very widely diffused is the modern gazette—become as much a necessity to the humblest and forlorn as the morning meal—and how diversified are its teachings. It has literary breathings from the most polished of every land. It gives the reverberation of distant wars, and the quarrels and a nameless of the earth. It engorges us with the past, with its deeds of daring and crime. It reviews the present as it by the unfolding of a scroll. Through its columns the electric wire pulsates, obliterating space, communicating the most distant event the moment of its transpiration.

The press has become to the people of our generation as was Mephistopheles to the German Faust, conveying all manner and variety of wisdom. It not only [illegible] columns with greater rapidity than the ephemeral insects their brood of myriads. So far as the dissemination of learning and fact is concerned, it is no harm to be plunged in the gulf of penny. Information is upon the wings of each breeze. It has no cloister now. Front de Bœuf, had he lived and rioted and oppressed in our day, could have found a "clerk" to pen his assoil. in the first ragged urchin in his pathway.

That is a Boy I Can Trust.

I once visited a large public school. At recess a little fellow came up and spoke to the master. As he turned to go down the platform the master said "That is a boy I can trust; he never fails me." I followed him with my eye, and looked at him when he took his seat after recess. I thought a good deal of the master's remark. What character had the little boy earned! He had already got what would be worth more to him than a fortune. It would be a passport into the best store in the city, and what is better, into confidence and respect of the whole community. I wonder if boys know how soon they are rated by older people. Every boy in the neighbourhood is known, and opinions are formed of him; he has a character either favourable or unfavourable. A boy of whom the master can say, "I can trust him; he never fails," will never want employment. The fidelity, promptness and industry which he shows at school are in demand everywhere. He who is faithful in little will be faithful also in much. Be sure, boys, that you can earn a good reputation at school. Remember, you are just where God has placed you, and your duties are not so much given you by your teacher, or your parents, as by God himself. You must render an account to them, and you will also be called upon to render an account to Him. Be trusty be true."

Causes of Sudden Death

Very few of the sudden deaths which are said to arise from the diseases of the heart, do really arise from that cause. To ascertain the real origin of sudden death, the experiment has been tried in Europe, and reported to a scientific congress held at Strasburg. Sixty-six cases of very sudden death were made the subject of post mortem examination; in these cases, only two had died from disease of the heart. Nine out of sixty-six had died from apoplexy, while there were forty-six cases of congestion of the lungs, that is the lungs were so full of blood that they could not work, there not being room for a sufficient quantity of air to enter to support life. The causes that produce congestion of the lungs are cold feet, tight clothing, coarse boards [illegible] still until chilled after being [illegible]

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 12, 1865.

MORE REFORM NEEDED.

Last week we had the privilege extended to us, in company with several members of the County Council, of visiting the new Jail. The Council are just after getting some new fixings done to the doors, &c., which have amounted to the nice little sum of $350.—True the work is well done, and the workmen received nothing more than his due for the labour and trouble; but what we object to, in common with the whole County Council, is having such repairs to be done at all; and we very reasonably ask, why were these fixings not in the original plans and specifications, when the work could have been done for one half what it now cost on account of the impossibility of removing the doors to the workshop.

We learn that it is the common practice of every new set of Jail Inspectors, every visit they pay to the place, to recommend some new thing, and report accordingly. This must be done, no matter how utterly unfit the person may have been to judge of the necessity for it. The work must be done, for the Inspectors recommend it; while at the same time many of these are as unacquainted with such things as doctors and lawyers and useless old navy officers, who are generally appointed to such offices, are. These matters should be left to the County Council, whose duty it is to supply the needful, and who generally are men of as good common sense as any the Government do appoint.

Another thing requiring reform is the manner of treating prisoners. There are two classes of prisoners that find their way to our common jail: some for debt or for political offences; others for violation of divine and social obligations. The first class may consist of the most respectable and moral of our citizens, or perchance of the citizens of any other country: individuals who may have wanted foresight enough to provide means to be so as to owe no man anything. A political offender, too, who has been cast into prison, may deserve the best treatment at the hands of his fellow-countrymen, and should be treated kindly and properly until his guilt at least would be fully established. After being proved guilty these generally, however, suffer the penalty of their crimes. But there is a class of the outcasts of society, the very rag tag of the human family, those who are a nuisance to others and a curse to themselves, who infest the back yards and lanes of our towns and cities, who rob, and steal, and destroy both individuals and property, who have no home and care for none, who are depraved and filthy, and corrupt everything they come in contact with, who delight to wallow in the lowest places of vice and degradation, and who on conviction of crime are sent to jail for 20 or 30 days. We ask what is done for these. The answer must be, nothing to improve them but everything to the contrary. True the county must have them scrubbed, so to speak, and the doctor must be brought to attend to their diseases. They are committed long enough to get cleansed, when they are again let loose on society to commence anew their work of demoralization, if possible better fitted for it. Thus, at the expense of the law abiding part of society, a race of outcasts and vagabonds are being trained in our towns, and properly educated in our jails, for burglars, robbers, murderers, debauchees and prostitutes; and nothing is done to make them bear a part of the burden, or to improve them. There should be a law compelling such individuals to perform some work during the regular working hours of the day: and when there is no work that would pay, they should be forced to work anyway. This would soon strike terror into them, and they would soon fear to go to Jail, instead of, as now, desiring a few months' board and safe keeping. Not long since we witnessed almost a race between an old offender and the chief constable, as if on trial who would reach the Jail first. If government would provide something for them to do, and make them do it, and, instead of boarding them better than many honest industrious families are, would put them on short allowance, the number that frequent the Jail of the County would be fewer. If this would not be wise,—if it would not be humane—if it would not be merciful,—we ask is it wise, humane or merciful, to convict them, send them to Jail, feed and clothe them, and do nothing to make them better, but everything to make them worse. Surely reform is needed in this matter, come from where it may.

Another complaint we hear is that very few ministers visit the Jail. Is this so? and why? We will leave this enquiry for another time, hoping that we may find that the report is incorrect. But still we think that even here there is reform needed.

Railroad Extension.

From recent surveys made through the Town it would appear that the lessees of the Millbrook branch intend extending their road beyond the Town if possible. They have surveyed a track along the bank of the river past Mr. Dixon's Mills where they intend crossing the river and thus proceed to Lakefield, &c. This appears to be their intention from the direction of survey.

ANOTHER FIRE.

Scarcely a week passes but we have to chronicle one or more fires, which speaks very poorly for us as citizens. Either there is a degree of culpable carelessness on the part of some, or of immorality that deserves loss or punishment. If carelessness is the cause of those fires, the careless parties should be made to suffer the loss, and if immorality, no punishment could be too severe for the guilty ones.

On Saturday evening another fire was added to the list already chronicled. About 9 o'clock in the evening a fire broke out in the store occupied by Mr. Bradfield, and almost in a few minutes the whole corner, consisting of three stores and a dwelling house, was consumed. The fire commenced above the milliner's shop, and continued its course along the roof of the building until stopped by the brick building occupied by Stethem & Co. The most of Mr. Bradfield's stuff was saved. Mr. Baguely saved a good deal of his stuff. Mr. Angus McDonell lost the most of any one. Mr. Trenwith had his stuff hastily removed, but how much he lost we cannot tell. The buildings were owned by Mrs. Dixon, but were insured to the amount of $1600. Mr. Bradfield had an insurance of $3000 on his goods; Mr. Baguely of $150; Mr. McDonell had insured to the amount of $2000. His loss by fire is the heaviest. The others lost in removing things more than can yet be calculated.

We witnessed rather rough usage to some of the things as they were handled out. The motto seemed to be "save from fire;" but no matter what becomes of things afterwards. The firemen laboured hard to save the goods and buildings both, and had to labour alone as far as working the engine is concerned, with difficulty could any one be got to give a hand. There must be something wrong somewhere, either in the lookers-on or the liberality of the Council. It would be well to consider where.

A SOUND POLICY.

It has become a proverb, that it is no use to pass laws for there is no one inclined to enforce them, and we fear it is too true.—There is a law restricting usury, yet the Judge favors the continuance of the violation of law because some person was fool enough to agree to the usury. See Globe of Saturday: Bank of Montreal against Sheriff Reynolds, of Ontario.

There is a law providing for the punishment of persons who sell liquor in Municipalities where such is prohibited; but Judge, Jury and Lawyers, all combine to render the law a nullity, by quashing convictions in every case that we have read of; while some of our best Lawyers tell us that if there was as much opposition to every other law as there is to this one, not one conviction would ever be obtained for any crime.

But, nearer home, we have a law that forbids the sale of intoxicating liquors without license, under the penalty of a fine.—Now when respectable and law-abiding citizens make complaint, and an impartial Magistrate imposes a fine, some Councillor makes a motion to have the fine abated, or perhaps applied to pay the offender's license; and thus what was intended as a check on licentiousness becomes a reward for it, by the Common Council connivig at the breach of the law. And yet these men, perhaps, call themselves law-abidg citizens. Is this a sound policy? Do our Councillors desire to have their names rendered famous for violation of law, and for aiding and abetting those who do violate it? If they do they had better set aside all law and return to the scenes of lawlessness and blood of the dark ages. But let the citizens get warning in time.

Bank Usuary.

Sheriff Reynolds, of Ontario, has allowed his paper to come to suit in the Court of Assize in Whitby, in order to test the legality of the banks charging more than seven per cent. interest, while the law limits them to that amount only. It was shewn on the trial that the rate of interest charged directly and indirectly amounted to over 11 per cent., and therefore it was contended that such charges were illegal. From the Globe report the judge charged the jury rather in favour of the bank, not because of the legality of the rates charged, but because the sheriff had agreed to pay more than 7 when he made arrangements with the agent.—On Saturday another trial came up between the same parties for another of $100, and although the facts were the same, a different jury rendered a verdict for defendant and against the bank. Both cases are likely to be refered to the Superior Courts, and the law on the matter settled.

A Fatal Railway Accident.

At Stratford, on the 6th instant, a dreadful railroad accident occurred on the Grand Trunk Railway. The Express train was over due nearly two hours, and in a thick fog collided with tremendous force with a freight train, smashing both engines, the baggage car, and several freight cars: killing the engine-driver, Edward Deverill, on the spot, badly injuring the fireman, Rip Grams, the baggage master, Henry Donald, and to a greater or less degree hurting several passengers. The engineer and driver of the freight train saw the danger in time and jumped off and thus escaped. An inquest was held, but nothing definite enough to implicate any one with carelessness or blame elicited. Deceased leaves a wife and four children to mourn his death.

Forestalling the Market.

On Saturday we witnessed that some of the butchers sent a boy to the farmers' waggons and bought up the best quarters of lamb: and that just at the time that other citizens were about taking them. These boys manage their work adroitly. They hurry up—look at the whole—pick out what they consider best—at once say "I'll take these: come over and weigh them and get your pay." Upon interrogation of one farmer he told us that a certain butcher took it, weighed it, paid him for it, and hung it up; and we can testify that the boy who carries his meat around purchased it all before 10 o'clock a. m. Should such conduct come under our notice again we will give due notice in the Police Court.

The Locks.

We learn that Mr. Munroe, of the Government Works department, has been viewing the locks south of the town, with a view to their repairs. It would appear that it is the intention of the Government to repair them and the navigation of the river, and thus enable boats to come up to the town. This would prove a step in the right direction.

COURT OF CHANCERY.

PETERBOROUGH SITTINGS, OCT. 4, 1865.

BEFORE THE HON. VICE-CHANCELLOR MOWAT.

There were two causes set down for examination and hearing, viz., Pearson vs. MacConkey, and McPherson vs. Bradtorn.

The first cause was tried, and resulted in the bill being dismissed. The case, being one involving the title to a valuable farm in Smith, and disposing of a dispute of long standing, created much interest, and many Smithtown people were present watching the proceedings. The plaintiff's father, in 1832, entered into an agreement for the purchase of the land in dispute, and afterwards obtained a deed thereof. The plaintiff worked upon the property and did much towards paying for the land and in proving it. Upon the father's death the land descended at law to the eldest, and the defendant, Harriet McConkey, and her husband, asserted title in an action of ejectment and succeeded.—The plaintiff filed his bill to obtain relief in equity, and his Counsel contended that upon the evidence there appeared to have been a contract between the father and the plaintiff which was partly performed, and in consequence of the part performance of which the Court would cause to be carried into effect. Also that there were such representations by the father, upon which the plaintiff had acted, as would afford the plaintiff ground for relief, and that a resulting trust was apparent by reason of the labour and money expended by the plaintiff upon the property, and that the Court would declare the defendants trustees for the plaintiff of the lot.

The Court thought the plaintiff had failed to establish the propositions urged by his Counsel: but, as there appeared to be much hard hip upon the plaintiff, the question of costs was reserved, His Lordship intimating that if the authorities warranted him in so doing the bill would stand dismissed without costs.

For the plaintiff, James McLennan, Esq., and E. Burnham, Esq. For the defendants, E. Blake, Q. C., and W. H. Scott, Esq.

The other case was postponed.

Licenses issued for Peterborough in 1865, and paid.

September 28th, 1865.

Ephraim Dunsuth was charged with being drunk on the street, and being but a few days since he was up before, was fined one dollar and costs, and in default of immediate payment 14 days imprisonment. He was committed for 14 days.

September 30th, 1865.

George Brownlee was charged with erecting a wooden building on lot No. 1, south of Hunter and east of Water streets, contrary to By-law. Defendant not appearing he was fined $10 and costs, in default of payment to be levied by distress.

George Crown was charged by Thomas White, Esq., with selling spirituous liquors without license. Defendant did not appear. Case was postponed to Friday, 6th instant, at 10 o'clock, a. m.

Donation.

Captain McNaughton begs leave to return thanks, on behalf of Protection Fire Company No. 1, to Messrs. George Stethem and Co., for the handsome donation of $20, for services rendered at the fire on Saturday last, and to be appropriated to the Firemen's fund.

Fall Goods.

W. G. Thomson & Co., announce in another column, the arrival of their stock of Fall and Winter Goods. The Millinery and Mantle Department is now ready for inspection, as it is refurnished with all the newest and fashionable styles.

Wholesale Desertion.

From the Kingston Whig we learn that a corporal and four men of No. 8 Royal Canadian Rifles deserted on Monday night last. Each man took his rifle and 40 rounds of ammunition with him. They escaped during the night in a garrison boat. When they arrived at St. Vincent they sold their guns and sent back the boat.

The Cattle Plague in America.

The fatal cattle plague now raging in England and on the continent of Europe, is said to have broken out in Cleveland, Ohio. Quite a number of cattle in that city and in the vicinity have died within a few days; few surviving more than 20 hours after being attacked.

The Sanders Kidnapping Case.

This trial is before the courts. Sanders says he agreed to the whole; and consequently the prisoners are not likely to be punished.

Another Victim to Strong Drink.

Thomas Johnson, chief cook of the steamer Belgian, cut his throat with a razor at Montreal, on the 6th instant, in a state of delirium tremens.

A Terrible Steam-boiler Explosion.

At Black Rock, N. Y., one of the boilers in Pratts rolling mills exploded, killing 3 men and severely injuring 20 others.

W. Foster, Esq., of North Monaghan, has kindly sent us a quantity of grapes grown in his garden. The clusters are large and of a very good quality. For once at least we have been enabled to taste the pure juice of the grape. May his vines flourish long, and bountifully produce him a cup that "cheers not inebriates."

Smith, Harvey, North Douro & North Monaghan Agricultural Show.

The Show of the Agricultural Society of Smith, Harvey, North Douro, and North Monaghan was held on Tuesday last, in the Village of Lakefield, partly in a field admirably adapted to the purpose, lent to the directors, with the use of lumber for pens, &c., with his customary consideration, by Mr. Watt, and partly in the Drill Shed which had been kindly placed at the disposal of the committee by Captain Leigh.

The day, lowering during the early morning, turned out exceedingly fine subsequently, and both the field and the room were crowded, not only by the inhabitants of the village and its immediate neighbourhood, but by numbers from a distance.

The Show was in every respect successful: there were 160 entries of stock, and 239 of grain, vegetables, farm produce, domestic manufactures, ladies' work, fine arts, &c. The various articles exhibited reflected great credit on the above named townships: and the accommodation was equal, if not superior, to any that can be afforded within the limits of the county.

We subjoin the prize list. If there should be any errors or ommissions, as it is feared may be the case, in the list, they will be rectified or supplied in a future impression.

At the termination of the Show the directors and Judges sat down to an excellent dinner at Blakely's Hotel; and, grace having been said by the Rev. V. Clementi, ample justice was done to the viands. The prize list was then read aloud from the balcony of the hotel, by the secretary, Mr. Smyth, and so terminated an exceedingly agreeable and interesting day.

TOWN COUNCIL.

Wednesday Evening, Oct. 9.

The Town Council met—His Worship the Mayor in the chair. Eight present.

The minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved.

Communications from Judge Boucher and Rev. J. Roger, conveying thanks to the Council for the invitation to visit Rochester, and expressing regret at not being able to be present, were read.

A copy of resolutions which were passed at the City Council of Rochester were then read, inviting the Mayor and Corporation of Peterborough to visit Rochester.

The Clerk was directed to correct a discrepency between the Assessment Roll and the assessment of Wm. Logan.

On motion, a dog charged to Mr. R. Adam was ordered to be remitted.

Mr. Toole moved for $50 of the unexpended money belonging to Streets and Bridges, to be expended in gravelling Reid Street leading to the new gravel road in Smith, through Mrs. Dixon's lot. After some discussion it was carried by the Mayor voting for it.

On motion of Mr. Chamberlen it was agreed to accept the invitation of the Corporation of the City of Rochester.

Mr. Lawson enquired why the matter of managing the business of the intended visit had been delegated to private citizens? why the committee had ignored a certain class of citizens in their invitations to friends to accompany the Council? and why certain localities had been neglected in these invitations. He wished further to know if it was common in such cases to delegate the duties of the Council to private citizens.

Mr. Chamberlen made a motion to adjourn which was lost.

Mr. Lawson continued to enquire why the Council had so far forgot itself as to leave out the members of the Council in forming this committee of management, so that the Councillors had it not in their power to invite a friend, no matter how intimate or how influential. He enquired how it was that some of those who were very active in the reception of the Aldermen and Council of Rochester, were neglected to the very last moment, in going to return the civilities. All these things needed explanation.

The Mayor said that he had been appointed, conjointly with Messrs. Sidney Smith, R. Dennistoun, and A. Smith, and he had not invited any one, nor named any one; but he thought no neglect or slight had been intended to any one or any Ward.

Mr. Williams gave notice of a motion intended to be brought forward by Mr. Stevenson, who was unavoidably absent to-night, so as to have some old arrangement of allowing the fines that had been imposed on Mr. Crown, for selling liquor without license, to be placed to his account that the sum would be a part of his license for the year. This, however, was left over till next meeting of Council, when Mr. Stevenson would be present himself.

A Councillor enquired what was the order of the day in regard to the visit.

The Council then adjourned.

MONAGHAN TOWNSHIP COUNCIL.

Monaghan, October 9, 1865.

The Council met at 1 o'clock. Present: Councillors Collins, Dundass, and Lockie.

In the absence of the Reeve, Mr. Lockie was appointed Chairman. The minutes of last meeting were read and confirmed.

A petition signed by John Whitfield and thirteen others, asking the sum of $20 to be expended in gravelling portions of road between Mr. Foster's and Mr. Leary's creek. To remain over to the next meeting of the Council.

A petition from John H. Campbell, for the sum of $5 to be expended on the Quarter Line on the 10th Concession between Lots No. six and seven. Not granted.

Another from same, for the sum of $4 to be expended on the 10th Concession Line at the north end of Lot No. seven. Granted.

Messrs. Joseph Bennett and Thomas Wilson were named by the Collector as his sureties, who were accepted.

The Committee appointed to meet Mr. Wallis, reported that he has agreed to give the required quantity of land for the road at the rate of twenty pounds per acre; to make one of the fences himself, the other to be made by the Council, as well as the necessary surveys, &c. The report was received, and the Council recommended the survey to be made at once, so that a By-law ratifying the purchase might be passed.

The Clerk gave in his account for $3.30 expended by order of the Council for clearing and repairing Town Hall, purchase of glass, stove pipes &c. An order was given on the Treasurer for the amount.

A By-law was read a first time for the opening of Quarter Line between Lots 6 and 7 in the 10th Concession of Monaghan, for statute labour purposes.

The Reeve and Councillor Collins were appointed a Committee to investigate why certain taxes of defaulters have not been collected.

The Council adjourned to Saturday the 28th inst., at one o'clock p. m.—Com.

Life on the Kushogawigamog.

No. 3.

The 26th September of the pre-ent autumn was quite a stirring day at the new village of Haliburton, Dysart. As proposed, the show for agricultural produce and farm stock, with home manufactures, took place, and was a complete success. The people of Dysart, Minden and Snowden turned out nobly, and for a first attempt it did admirably. The array that day at the upper lake of Kushog waters of grain, roots, tubers, and other vegetable productions, shewed well for the productiveness of the land Company's township and neighbourhood; and the manufactures in iron, straw, linen, with dairy work and produce and sugars, told well for the skill of the inhabitants, men and women. I must not forget the bouquets with flowers on root embedded in moss for the occasion, for these added gaiety to the tables.—Horned cattle, sheep and pigs of course were shewn, and five yokes of faithful oxen represented the beasts of burden well. In grains, of wheat there was the greatest variety. Of potatoes the show was surprising for variety, size, and I may say beauty. In corn, the ears shewed evenness, length and plumpness. Oats in the straw was shewn 7 feet in height. Tomatoes also must have puzzled the judges; for variety and good quality and quantity it was astonishing. Gigantic squashes and articles of that family attracted notice. The sugars, for clearness of grain, with bottled syrups of delicious taste, told of maple trees put to good use by the new settlers. Over sixty prizes were distributed, and even then many things had to be passed over, but considering that much less than three years ago not a tree was cut in the township, the enterprise of its people is manifest, and the Agricultural Society's Exhibition of this day predicts a prosperous future.—Providence hasten it.

P. S.—At Minden village the proposed Agricultural Show took place on the Friday following: of it the above description of the Haliburton Show will answer very nearly in every particular. In cattle, horses and sheep the entries exceeded at Minden, but "ditto, ditto," will fairly represent this second attempt at progress, and the farmers of Minden and adjacent townships have cause to say, "We are advancing."

The entire effects of the Department of the Attorney General West have been shipped to Ottawa, and the office is expected to open about the 16th inst.

From Our Toronto Correspondent.

Toronto, Oct. 10th, 1865.

Owing to the want of news I did not write to you last week, and now, although I have the news of two weeks, it will be very little. In the first place I have to tell of railway accidents. One occurred at Stratford on last Friday morning, in which the Express Train going west ran into a Freight Train, which had been allowed to pass the same, there signal, in order to shunt off the main track, though the Express was then due and had the right of way. There was a dense fog, and none of the men on either trains saw the danger until too late to avoid a collision. The men on the Freight Train jumped off just in time to save themselves, but those on the Express could do nothing towards their escape, and the conductor, Mr. E. Deverill, was killed; he was crushed up against the engine, his bowels were torn out of his body, and he was dreadfully burned: his death must have been instantaneous. The fire-man cannot tell how he got off, he does not know whether he jumped or was thrown off, his arm was badly broken. Some of the passenger were hurt, but none of them dangerously. An investigation is still, or rather was going on when last heard from, to see who is to blame in the matter. The switch-man is in custody. The Company, it seems, are determined to sift it to the bottom. It is a great pity that such carelessness as seem allowed in this case, as the man who has been so suddenly called to his account, has left a wife and family behind him, and was very much respected. He was buried in this city on last Sabbath, and had a very large funeral.

ANOTHER RAILWAY ACCIDENT.

On Saturday another young man, a brakesman on the Northern Railway, was killed. He was on the top of the freight cars attending to the brakes coming down a grade, near a place called Aurora, when it is supposed that a bolt broke and threw one of the cars off the track, and with the shock he was thrown down between two of the cars, and when taken up he was nigh dead. He died before they got him to the next station. It is really sad that such dreadful accidents are getting so common.

CAPTAIN PRINCE.

The Chief of Police who has been for some weeks past suspended was restored again yesterday. Recorder Duggan has arrived at home from England, and after investigating the matter, he has been reinstated, to the satisfaction of some and very much to the dissatisfaction of others, for the most of people in this world have their friends as well as their enemies, and the Chief of Police is no exception to the rule.

THE CAMP

At Laprarie has been broken up, and you will see by the accounts from it that the battalion, composed of the Toronto and Hamilton 8 boat Graduates came off first best in everything. I have been in discourse with a number of them who have come back, and they are highly delighted with the manner in which they have done and all acquitted themselves of their duties.

I see by the Examiner that there is good prospects of the Oil Company in Peterborough getting rewarded for their enterprise. I hope it may be the case and that they may make a big strike of it when they do finish their undertaking, as I would like to see the Messrs. Cragie & Stephenson come out well on their own account, if there was nothing else in the case: but when there is so much which will tend to the prosperity of your good Town at stake as well, I wish very much that you may soon have to record the fact that they have made the most fortunate "hole" in Canada. If they do it will please none more than

WILLIE.

Minden.

On Wednesday, 20th September last, a soiree, or farewell tea-meeting, took place at Minden village. Mr. Ferries, Presbyterian student, who has been for some time faithfully and successfully labouring in that locality, being about to remove for the purpose of completing his studies, the congregation thought well to shew respect in the way above named. All denominations united to testify their esteem, and about 100 sat down. As usual the tables were ample and richly supplied. Miss Burt, of Dysart Parsonage, presided at the harmonium and led a choir consisting of Messrs. James Hyde, W. Dawkins, Watts, &c., thus the company were entertained with select music, which met with repeated applause. The Rev. Mr. McWilliams, of Bobcaygeon, was among the speakers, and ministers of the village and neighbourhood took part. A very pleasant time was spent, and all would be happy were Mr. Ferries to settle some day amongst them.—Com.

Postal Arrangements with Canada.

The existing postal arrangements between the United States and Canada may be well enough, but the manner in which mails are made up and exchanged across the borders cannot be fitly characterized by any term at our command. No intelligent citizen who is familiar with the facts will think of communicating by mail if he can find means of transmitting letters otherwise. Rochester is nearer by rail to Washington than to any point in Canada. Though a steamer regularly from our port to the same city, take and make the passage in the hours, it takes as many days to get a letter from Rochester to either of these points to receive one. Yet this same steamer carries a mail and is paid for the service. The bag goes and comes empty. The Postmasters on both sides of the line wholly ignore the rates and send letters and papers by Suspension Bridge or some other circuitous route. This we assert from positive knowledge, having seen the empty bag many times in the past few years on the steamers, and having been compelled to wait one day for letters on this side here. With such mail management between the United States and Canada, it is no use to talk of reciprocal trade, reciprocation or anything else. We cannot have anything but two distinct peoples, and will be apart, so long as the state of things exists. If we advocate annexation, it will be that the Postmasters on both sides of the lake may be made to acquaint themselves with geography, and do patch letters by the most direct routes, instead of by the most indirect as now. Intelligence in post-offices on both sides of the line is wanted, and a disposition to accomodate the public. If complaint is made of delay, the Postmaster on either side has a ready answer by charging the delay to the officials over the border, and that ends the matter as no further inquiry can be made. This is exceedingly aggravating inasmuch as the people are compelled to pay ten cents postage on each Canadian letter thus neglected, while a domestic letter costs but three cents and is dispatched with some degree of promptness. It is not with the least hope of reform that reference is made to this evil. We refer to it that those who impose upon the public may understand that the public are not so verdant as to suppose that it is all right. This is nothing new nor is it peculiar to any administration. It always has been so, and perhaps it will continue to the end of time. —Rochester Union.

We entirely agree with the Union, and recommend Mr. Howland's deputies to make the necessary inquiries. While they are about it, we would like them also to discover why a new-paper goes to New York in twenty-four hours, while a letter is generally forty-eight on the journey. That is a mystery which we have been trying to solve for years and would like to have help from the department. We do not think the error lies on this side of the line, but our officials ought to be able to discover who is in fault.

A WIFE KILLED BY HER HUSBAND THROUGH MISTAKE.—One of the saddest affairs which it has ever been our misfortune to have to report, occured on Saturday night last. Mr John Perkins, a huckster in the market, residing on the corner of Belvidere and Carey streets, in Sidney, Va., instantly killed his wife with a pistol, supposing her to be a robber who had broken into his house. Near midnight, Mr Perkins was awakened by his wife, who told him she thought there were robbers in the house, whereupon he jumped out of bed and proceeded to search his premises; but finding no one he went back to bed and was soon asleep again. Some time afterward Mrs Perkins had occasion to leave her room and while on he way back, dressed in her night clothes, her footsteps aroused her husband, he sprang to the passage, pistol in hand, and seeing his wife approaching took her for a burglar, when he immediately fired, the ball striking her in the breast extinguishing the vital spark almost immediately. Mr Perkins was taken before the Provost Marshal of the First District yesterday morning when, upon the facts of the case being explained, he was immediately discharged.

A Murder at St. Clet, Vaudreuil.

A most wanton case of murder has occurred in Lower Canada. The particulars of which are given in the Globe, and are as follows:

F. Madden, Mayor of St. Marthe, Vaudreuil, went to St. Clet, on the 6th instant, and entered an unlicensed groggery of Madame Laroux, whose husband is in the penitentiary. Here he met one Rochor, a well-off farmer, with whom he had an altercation, when Laroux struck him. On this he left it is said, to attend to his horse. Next morning, a girl saw the body of Madden lying on the gallery of her master's house, ma Laroux's. Rochor and Madame Laroux were arrested. After an official investigation was held, medical testimony showed that the body had wounds on the temple, eye, mouth, chest, and legs: and the teeth were broken. In all there were seven external wounds on the body. There was also a large effusion of blood on the brain and an extensive rupture of the liver: either sufficient to cause death. In Laroux's house was a quantity of blood, and a man's hair found on a bench and a pokes case: and a twelve pound weight which corresponded with the wounds on the face, as if it had been covered over. Her face was washed, when found. The jury could not agree on their verdict. Five were for finding murder, and ten manslaughter. The coroner discharged the jury, and committed the prisoner to the Montreal gaol. Madden was over 60 years of age, wealthy, and well connected.

Birth.

At North Monaghan, on the 29th ult., the wife of Christopher Leary, Esq., of a son.

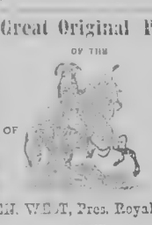
The Great Original Painting

OF THE



BATTLE OF THE BOYNE.

By BEN. WEST, Pres. Royal Academy.

PARKES BOURNE & Co., would respectfully announce that they have now ready for delivery a splendidly got up Colored Lithograph of this magnificent HISTORICAL PAINTING, representing the Battle at the moment of the death of the gallant DUKE SCHOMBERG; and which is published on the finest paper—size 25 by 28 inches.

This Picture—a faithful copy of the great Original—will be found incomparably superior to anything ever offered to the public either in this country or Great Britain. It has been executed by the most Artistical of the day, and no trouble or expense has been spared to make it worthy of the justly celebrated Painter, and the GREAT HISTORICAL FACT which it represents, and which ought never to be forgotten by those who now enjoy the CIVIL AND RELIGIOUS LIBERTY which this event, more than any other in our history, was the means of establishing and perpetuating.

In times like these, when the principles of our Forefathers are being assailed on every hand, it is especially needful for us to bear in mind from whence sprang our Constitutional form of Government, and nothing contributes more to aid us in keeping in remembrance those momentous passages in our history than faithful representations by great Masters. And certainly no historical Subject has been more ably treated than the above event by this celebrated Painter.

In presenting this Picture to the Protestant Community, and especially to those who are more immediately allied to the vast benefits conferred on us by the ever memorable events of 1690, the Publishers feel every confidence that their efforts will be fully appreciated, and that this Picture will find an honored place in every Protestant home in the British Provinces.

Price of the Picture, $2.

Poetry.

NO! WATERFALLS.

She wore a monstrous Waterfall the night
when first we met,
A roll, half horse, half human hair, hung in a beaded net;
It rested on her shoulders, for the first time
put to use,
And she looked like a Digger Squaw when
lugging a pappoose;
Or taking a good rearward squint at hair and head together,
Just like some horse with tail tied up in very muddy weather.
She was bowed beneath the burden she thought so passing fair,
With her foolish head hitched backward and her pert nose in the air:
I saw her but a moment, weak slave to
Fashion's thrall,
Perspiring like a negress beneath that Waterfall.
Ah! when will Fashion give us back the charms I'm told in song,
The web of auburn splendor, soft tresses in thick throng,
Or hair nutbrown that sweeps the brow, in gentle waving furl,
Such as I know gives crowning charms to one as gentle girl.
Oh! when will sense resume its rule and
Folly meet its check,
And our beloved ones cease to swing a pillow round their neck——
A thing composed of horse's tail's, of wool,
of pile, of coral,
A monstrous, mean disfigurement, by every man abhorred,
A load upon their shoulders, in the street,
and at the ball,
A foolish bag, a senseless lump they call a Waterfall.

WOMAN'S RIGHTS.

BY A COLORED WOMAN.

Good ebening, wite folks—good ebening! Wite folks, I appear before you dis ebening to lucidate and splanify and lucidate to you de subjic ob Woman's Rights. It am a subjic dat, to my mind, am jest as clear as de sun in de bottom ob de ribber. It am a subjic dat, for some time past, has been disgusted by de wite folks, who doesn't know nuffin at all about it. Dey neber did. But I'm a goin to pitch into my subjic now, right off, like a hungry nigger into a bowl ob clam soup.

I shall derefore inquire ob you de following questions:—Who am woman? Whar did she come from? Who does she belong to? To wunch way am she goin to? Now, in de fust place, fustly—Whar did she come from? Yah, yah, yah! Did you eber hear such a foolish question? I am sartin dat she am here and nuffin else don't make a dif ob bitterence; an' you men—fond ob reation as you calls yourselves—ought to be mity glad she is here.

In de second place—Who do she belong to? Dere's a question for you to get through your wool! Who does she belong to? I'll tell you who she belongs to. She belongs to herself, or else how could she gib herself away? Wh n a man and a woman gits married, an' dey ain't neider one ob 'em got nuffin, who does de tings belong to? To de woman, ob course.—Dat's so. If you tak de trouble to look back in de fore part ob Lobster's Confectionary, you will see written dar dese wo ds: "What belongs to de man, belongs to de woman, an' what belongs to de woman belongs to herself."

In de next place, nextly—Which way am she goin' to? 'Famt no use our budderin our minds 'bout what she's goin' to. Dis ting am sartin, she ain't agoin to work herself to death. Hasn't we inwented washin' machines dat'll bang de clothes all to pieces in five minutes? An' hasn't we inwented cradles to rock babies to sleep widout any trouble on de moder's mind? Yes, indeed, ob course we hab—an' more too.

Wite folks, let me 'press on your minds dat de wrongs ob woman stand heaped on de top ob her head eber since de beginning ob de world, and preciously from ebery point of de compass. For don't it say dat when Adam an' Ebe was in de garden ob Eating dat Adam did coax Ebe to climb up an ole apple tree, an' she climb up, an' he boosted her, an' she tore her dress on a limb, an' didn't she reach out her han' to get a golden pippin, when two M. P.'s come along an' nab her, and tote her off to de station house, and didn't Adam turn State's evidence, an' hab Ebe, poor gal, sent up a year? Indeed he did.

Wite folks, I'm a goin' to preach on dis subjic, an' I can't be stopped no how—

I'll scratch an' bite,
An' gouge an' fight,
An' tumble in de mud;
An' when at length
I've lost my strength,
I neber will gib in—
But I'll cotch my bref,
An' rest myself,
An' den pitch in agin.

AMERICAN

Button-hole, Cording, Braiding and Embroidering

SEWING MACHINE!

COMPANY,

627 BROADWAY, NEW-YORK.

THE BUTTON HOLE S made by this entirely simple and novel machine are not only equal to the best hand-made in the pearl on right side, but greatly surpassing them in beauty on the wrong side, which is formed by a beautiful braid stitch, made by an extra stitch, which no hand made button-hole possesses; thereby imparting to the same a much greater strength, which renders cording or barring altogether unnecessary.

One Needle and Two Threads are only Used.

Unlike other Sewing Machines it manufactures its own Braid and Cord.

The best Merchant Tailors freely admit that its beauty, finish and strength cannot be attained by the most skilful hand.

Simplicity is one of its great merits, therefore not liable to get out of order, and it can be worked with ease by any young lady, who will, after a few days' experience, make from 1,000 to 1,200 perfect button-holes in one day.

This is the only machine produced that will throw a stitch over the edge, so as to bind and cover it in a manner independible for button-holes, Cording and Braiding, each of which can be done with colored, shaded or chine silks, and produce a fabrique of varied colors unexcelled for beauty and taste.

To ladies at home, Dress, Mantilla and Cloak makers, Shoemakers, Tailors, Hatters, Bookbinders, Saddlers, &c., &c., it is indispensable: it is also admitted to be of great value, to other branches as it Braids, Embroiders, and Cords plain and fancy on all kinds of Cloths, Cassimers, Linen, Velvet Leather, &c. &c.

Instructions and Needles accompany each Machine.

Every Machine is Warranted for Twelve Months.

Machines can be seen in full operation at our spacious Store, 627 Broadway, near Bleaker, where instruction Rooms are reserved for Ladies.

P. S.—A novel patented BUTTON-HOLE Cutter for sale which shall in all cases accompany a Button Hole Machine.

Machine, $125.00; Button-Hole Cutter, $5.00.

The use of Salt for Agricultural Purposes.

Although the use of salt, both as a condiment for cattle and as manure, has long been known to the agriculturists, we are disposed to think that its employment has been greatly neglected by the majority of them, for reasons which reflect no credit upon their reasoning powers, or rather economy. As manure, it is the cheapest auxiliary to the dung heap that can be used, because the proportion to be employed—which, by the by, is well known—is small, and must not be increased. Like in my other minerals, if used properly and carefully, it is highly beneficial; if used in excess of the proper proportion, it is a deadly poison. And here lies the danger in its use by a careless or unskilful person. In the hands of an intelligent agriculturist, salt applied to the land for cereal crops will increase the quantity, and produce heavier and firmer grain and stronger and whiter straw. For root crops its use is equally beneficial; and in rough pastures, mixed with lime, it will destroy the coarse grasses and produce a rich herbage mixed with white clover and other succulent herbs. It is during the growth of the greatest abundance; and we may therefore conclude that in the vegetable economy, it performs in the soil a similar part that it does to the animal, although in a different manner, helping the plant to its necessary food; or, in other words, it enables it to assimilate its food, with which also it takes in a large proportion during the time the plant is in a growing state. Water is one of the most important elementary substances in the formation of plants. Now salt, according to Julius Sachs, is found by experiment to have the action on them of lending the absorption of water by the roots, by which the soil is kept in a moist state, and a supply of water is secured to them. Sachs found that a plant placed in distilled water absorbed 175 parts in three days, whilst another plant, of the same size, placed in water containing on half per cent of salt, absorbed only 56 parts in the same time. This explains why salt applied to cereal crops causes the straw to be shorter and stronger. We see the effect of an unrestrained supply of water to cereal plants in the length and weakness of the straw and the liability of the crop to go down by the first high wind or heavy storm. Salt is well known to be the best dressing to prevent this by shortening and strengthing the straw. It is, however, less our intention beneficial action of salt upon cereal and other agricultural plants than upon the animals of the farm, which in this period of extensive and fatal disease is of the most immediate consequence; for, although its use in warding off or modifying disease of the epidemic kind is well known, its application is still too much neglected. The necessity of using salt in food by animals of all species is shown by the pro o tion of it found in the blood. In that of the human subject the normal proportion of it is found to be nearly one half per cent, and in the ashes of blood 57½ per cent. And whether a person uses salt in his food or not, this proportion never varies. It must, therefore, from the other portions of the body, unless it is given in the food. Now, salt is necessary for the preservation of the living body from disease as it is for the preservation from putrefaction when dead. Why is it that epidemic disease prevails so much more amongst the humble classes of society than amongst the rich? Chiefly because the u e of salt is neglected in the food. By neglecting this, the flesh parts of the system are deprived of their due proportion of salt to supply the blood; and the consequence is, the man is rendered liable to the access of disease. The bile, the mucus, the saliva, the urine, the gastric juice, are in this case all deprived of their due proportion of salt, to furnish that required in the blood, which must have its proportion whatever becomes of the other parts of the body. Now, what applies to the human subject in this case is equ lly applicable to the farm animals. Their blood has its normal proportion of salt, without which the animal could not exist; and unless a quantity of salt is mixed with its food, the same exhaustion of the supply for the other juices of the system will take place, and the animal—whether a bullock, a sheep or a pig,—will be more liable to the attack of disease, or less likely to recover if attacked. We know not whether the veterinary practitioners have directed the attention of the farmers and the cowkeepers to this subject, but it certainly is of great importance at this time, when an unprecedented epidemic disorder is decimating the herds and dairies in a fearful manner. That the use of salt in feeding cattle is an exception in Great Britain, rather than a rule, is well known by the dealers in salt, and especially the proprietors and managers of salt works. We learn from one of these latter that whilst in Germany, France and Austria, the quantity of salt given to cattle, &c., amounts to 100,000 tons, in England only 10,000 tons is so applied. In Prussia and other continental states the use of it is increasing, and in Prussia it is said to have increased three-fold since 1853. Whether the absence of the epidemic from France and Austria is due to the free use of salt for their cattle we have no direct means of ascertaining; but it is a question well worth enquiring into, how far this has been the case, and also whether those of our own farmers and graziers who freely use salt for their cattle have been more exempt from the visitation than their less careless neighbours. That the animals themselves are well aware of the use of salt, both as a condiment with their food and as a preventative of disease, there is every reason to believe. In the Pampas of South America the wild horses, cattle and other graminiferous animals travel for miles to the salt licks, to supply themselves with the necessary proportion to keep them in health. "But," says a prize essay we have before us "with our animals the case is different we keep them in either well inclosed fields or tied up in stalls, and they must take such food as they find there, or is given to them, whether it contains the saline parts so necessary to their well doing or not: and in some measure we increase the evil to it all feeding by drawing out in warm water some of the saline matters of the food.—There is no question that many diseases our horses, cattle, and sheep are liable to would be prevented if the animals had free access to salt; and where it has been given regularly the beneficial effects have soon shown themselves, in the cellular tissues of the body, in which the flesh an fat are found, as well as in the albumen, there is constantly salt present in large quantities, showing its necessity for the production of both lean meat and fat in animals. The salt acts as a digestive by increasing the saliva, and the animals drinking water with it freely (perhaps one third more), this additional water helps very much to dissolve and assimilate those part of the food which would otherwise pass off undigested, and carries off the noxious humours that show themselves in skin diseases.—Mark Lane Express.

See what the most popular and widely circulated periodicals say of our Establishment:

From the "Dispatch" of February 25, 1865.

We take pleasure in calling the attention of our readers to the announcement of Messrs. Devaugh & Co.'s Great Sale of Jewelry, Silver Ware, and Fancy Goods, in our advertising columns. We are personally acquainted with the members of this firm and know them to be gentlemen of sterling worth and integrity. Their stock of goods, for variety and extent, we have scarcely seen paralleled.

From the "Mirror of Fashion," March 1, 1865.

Messrs Devaugh & Co's Great Sale of Jewelry, etc., opened on the 15th ult., and we venture to say that no finer display of goods was ever exhibited by any establishment in this city. The ladies thronged their bazaar almost to suffocation, although the streets were rendered nearly impassable by the melted snow and slush. We predict for them a wonderful success.

From the "Ledger," February 28, 1865.

Our lady friends should visit the extensive establishment of Messrs Devaugh & Co., No. 15 Maiden Lane, if they wish to indulge themselves with a sight which they will long remember. Such a profusion of elegant Watches Chains, Rings, Earrings, and, in short, of Jewelry of every name, kind and description, we never before witnessed. Their silver and plated ware is superb and almost casts into the shade the other splendid establishments which have long been the boast of our city. It is estimated that this stock is worth not less than one million of dollars.

DRIGGS' NEW PATENT.

ARE THE ONLY INSTRUMENTS constructed on a truly scientific principle. That have greater strength, and will remain longer in tune than any other Piano. The construction is simple and natural, and the excessive bowlers in the body of the instrument as dispensed with; the sound boards are merely two arched planks of thin wood, like the front and back of a violin; the strings re ntached to a strong cast iron frame, which is separate and distinct, independent of the case, thereby dispensing with the old h p form of stringing by substituting straight bridges, preserving at the same time The Over String Bass, of which Mr Driggs is the inventor. By these improvements we gain much more vibratory power, at the same time preserving all its purity and richness of tone.

They have received the highest testimonials from the Press, and all the principal artists in the country, among which are:

Harry Sanderson,	L. M. Gottschelk,
Max Maretzek,	S. Thalberg,
Theodore Eisfeld,	Wm Mason,
Herman Wollenhaupt,	A Barili.
Francis H. Brown,	M. Strackosch,
Gu. Henry Fry	Charles Fradel

Mr. SIGESMUND THALBERG, the great pianist, says:—I have examined your new Piano-fortes and I cordially approve of its system of construction. Its principle, by which great increase of vibratory power is obtained, being very simple and perfectly philosophical. The tone is grand and noble: it has great capacity for sustaining the sound or singing, and its volume of tone or power I have never heard excelled in depth, purity and sympathetic sweetness.

Wm HENRY FRY, late musical critic of the N. Y. Tribune says:—I have examined your newly invented Piano-Fortes. They merit all the praise given to them by Messrs. Thalberg, Gottschlk, Strackosch, Mason and others. As regards the structure, they are original and philosophical: in purity, volume, and continuity of tone; in vocal verisimilitude, that crowning excellence which enables the pianists to "sing" on the instrument. Your Pianos deserve the highest rank. Your invention, in my opinion, is destined to work radical changes in the manufacture of Pianos throughout the world.

From the N. Y. Herald, Sept. 5.—Upon a careful examination of Driggs' Piano-Forte, we find the results obtained are a very fine singing tone, great purity and brilliancy throughout the entire instrument, not often found in Pianos constructed upon the old plan.

The N. Y. Times, July 12, says:—We have now an instrument without an equal. It can sing with a smoothe delicacy, perfectly unattainable on any other instrument; an ordinary player obtains with no exertion, the fullness of a Grand Piano-forte and they must speedily supercede the old styles.

GENTLEMEN:—Having thoroughly examined and tested the Piano-Fortes invented and patented by Mr S. B. Driggs, I am of the opinion that the tone resulting from his improvements, as exhibited in the instruments under examination in points of richness, depth and brilliancy, equals that of the best Grand Piano-Fortes, and excells them in pure, musical and actual sonorous power thus approximating closer to what I consider perfection in the instrument than has yet been achieved by any other system of manufacture.

Yours respectfully,
L. M. GOTTSCHALK.

THE TYPO.

His sceptre is his stick!
He guides the mighty van;
And by the type's unceasing click,
Directs the world of man.
The signal flame he lights,
On learning's sacred hill,
That all may reach the rugged heights,
And drink from wisdom's rill.

He holds progression's helm—
Philosophy speeds on—
He roams with science thro' her realm
And bears truth's gonfalon;
Art, through his cunning lives—
Though he embalms, and by
His wizard craft to genius gives
Life, immortality.

He is the tyrant's scourge—
Oppression dreads his powers—
His cracking stick sounds treason's dirge,
And vice before him cowers;
Wrong, with her clanking chains—
Crime, with her hands of gore—
Black falsehood with her thousand stains
He battles evermore.

Then on the Typo's brow
Repose the laurel wreath;
Let all his priceless worth avow—
Let all his praises breathe.
For his sceptre is his stick!
He guides the mighty van;
And by the type's unceasing click,
Directs the world of man.

Miscellaneous.

JAPAN AND ITS PEOPLE.

The most striking fact about Japan is the scantiness of our information on it.—Not only have we no acquaintance with Japanese literature, but we can hardly be said to know whether such a thing exists; indeed, Sir R. Alcock implies that no Englishman is really well acquainted with the language. His first employment, on taking possession of his official residence, was to obtain this necessary knowledge; and he succeeded after nearly two years' labour in compiling a grammar. It must have been a most serious undertaking, as far, at least, as the written language is concerned, for the spoken language is easier. There are three systems of writing; namely, Chinese characters, which have a special meaning in Japanese, and two Japanese alphabets; but there are many different ways of using the Chinese characters, which are used sometimes ideographically and sometimes phonetically; and all the different modes of writing are occasionally jumbled up together in the same document.—The Japanese alphabets are easier. It appears, however, that it is nearly impossible to make much of Japanese without bringing to the study a previous knowledge of Chinese. The language, when learnt, has many peculiarities; the most striking of which is what Sir R. Alcock calls its microscopic character—that is, its tendency to introduce endless and perfectly useless distinctions upon every conceivable subject. Thus, there are as many forms of numerals as there classes of things to be enumerated; and as we talk of a pound of butter, a stone of meat, a rod of wood, and a pocket of hops, they have one word for five fish, another for five birds, hares, or rabbits, another for five ships, and another for five trees, or sticks. Three classes of numerals, we are told, "would fill a volume in themselves."

Upon Japanese literature Sir R. Alcock has next to nothing to say. By dint of great manœuvring he managed to buy or get bought for him a sort of Japanese directory or red-book, from which he got, amongst other things, a list of the different Daimios, with an account of their revenues; but the person who got it for him committed a crime in doing so which might have cost him his life. He also mentions some popular stories of the nature of legends, and he saw one play acted. The play was grossly indecent, and the story turned upon the exploits of certain lonins or outlaws, who, to revenge the death of their master, stormed his enemy's castle, put him to death, duly disembowelled themselves, and were all buried in one cemetery, and held in the highest honour ever after. These, however, are small matters, and, for the present, our knowledge of Japanese thought must be put down as nothing at all. The only bit of anything like literary information which Sir R. Alcock has to give is contained in the popular picture-books, which depict a variety of domestic scenes. His book is filled with engravings taken from this source, some of which are very spirited and vigorous; but they go a very little way towards making us understand the people whom they represent.

Of the religion of the Japanese we have a little, and only a little, more knowledge than of their literature. Like their written language, it appears to have come from China, Both Buddhism and Confucianism have been introduced into the country; Buddhism about the sixth century of our era, and Confucianism in the first. The Sintoo creed was earlier than either, but hardly anything at all is known of it. The surprising resemblance of the Buddhist ceremonies and creed to those of the Roman Catholic Church appear to have struck Sir R. Alcock, as they have struck many other observers; but it would seem from his account of the matter that it is little better than a set of idle ceremonies and puerile superstitions, and that it exercises next to no practical influence on the conduct of the population. This is the character given of Buddhism wherever it prevails. The Chinese Buddhist is merely a little more superstitious than he would be if not a Buddhist; and of the Japanese Sir R. Alcock observes, "They have some but very hazy notions of the immortality of the soul, and a future state of bliss or misery. But so far as I have seen, the educated classes scoff at such doctrines as fit only for the vulgar and the ignorant." The story of the Tycoon who directed Christianity to be tolerated, as it would only raise the number of religions in Japan from thirty-five to thirty-six, looks as if there had been more activity in religious thought three hundred years ago than there is at the present day; but now, at all events, the population appear to have settled down into a sort of contented and narrowly limited formalism, which fits in with their habits of life, and from which it would probably be exceedingly difficult to find any means of rousing them.

Of the moral condition and character of the Japanese, something more definite is known than of their religious belief or their literary attainments. Tried by our standard of morals, there can be no doubt that they are a very wicked people. Their principles and practice in regard to the relation of the sexes are such that Sir R. Alcock declares himself unable to understand how any of the domestic virtues are possible among them. Their language and amusements are also exceedingly indecent. Besides this they are inveterate liars. One of the five commandments of Buddhism is directed against this vice, but it is universally practised amongst them, and that without anything approaching to shame. They all lie, from the highest to the lowest, and when found out begin again unblushingly. They are also altogether indifferent to human life. The country is full of "two sworded men," the retainers of the Daimios, who are ready on any and every provocation to murder any one at their masters' orders. Not only were murders repeatedly committed on foreigners, but it seems to have frequently happened that when a political personage gave offence to any party of men, he was murdered on the first opportunity, the murderers, for the most part, being killed on the spot by the guards of the murdered man, or taking away their own lives by the process of ripping themselves up. This strange practice of committing suicide whenever an event discreditable either to the character, or even to the judgment of an official person, takes place, is most characteristic. It is probably unexampled in any other part of the world. Even in China no evidence is to be found of so great contempt for human life as it appears to indicate.—Review of Sir R. Alcock's book, in Frazer's Magazine.

THE MUTE DETECTIVE.

"No dogs admitted, sir," said the porter to a gay assemblage, as a young man and his dog appeared at the entrance; "you must leave him behind, if you go in." "Very well," said the young man—"stay about here, Prince, till I come back!"—and he joined the crowd within. By-and-by the young man wished to refer to his watch, when, behold! the chain had been snipped in two, and the valuable time-piece was gone. He considered the case a moment, and then a sudden thought flashed into his mind. So, stepping out, he whispered the fact to the porter, and gained permission to take his dog in for a minute or two. "Look here, Prince," said he, "you know dog, my watch is stolen;" and he showed him the empty pocket and the cut chain. "Do you understand, old fellow? In there sir, is the thief. You find it, my good doggie, and I'll get you a famous treat. You understand, do you?" Prince wagged his head and tail, and gave his master a wonderful knowing look, and then the two stole quietly into the place among the people, smelling away at this one's coat and that one's chain, until at last he set his teeth firmly into the coat-skirt of a genteel looking man, and could not be shaken off. The young man quickly made known the case to the bystanders who gathered around him, had the thief's pocket duly searched. Six other watches were found upon him, which he had gathered up in the course of the morning, and which their rightful owners were very glad to get their hands on again. Prince selected out his master's property in a twinkling, as that was all he cared for, and gave it to him joyfully. It would have taken a very keen policeman to do the work so neatly and quickly, and all agreed that he merited as fine a dinner as a dog could have. A good beef-bone and a bowl of milk, however, abundantly satisfied all his wants, and then he was just as ready to do the same favor over again.

WIFE AND SQUAWS.—I heard an anecdote of Kathland to-day, which, though perfectly that I must record it, particularly as my informant vouches for its truth. At an out post far up the country resided an officer and his wife. The latter was warned her husband not to venture alone far from the house; but one day, imprudently going beyond her usual limits, she encountered a wild looking Kaffir, who took her by the hand, and would be moved by no entreaty to suffer her to depart. He made her sit down and untying her bonnet, let down her long, fair hair, at which he expressed great admiration. He next took off her gloves, and appeared enchanted with her white hands; and then proceeded to divest her of her shoes and stockings, and wondered at her little white feet.—The next morning the lady and her husband were awakened at an early hour by a chatting under their window, and on inquiring the cause of the disturbance, the gentleman was accosted by the hero of the previous day, who had been so impressed by the charms of our fair countrywoman, that he had come with twelve squares, to make the liberal offer of exchanging them for the gentleman's wife, and was not a little surprised when his generous terms were refused!—Major Pag's Camp and Cantonment.

A CONTRAST.—In the year 1272 the wages of a labouring man were less than four cents per day, while the price of a bible at the same period was about $180. A common laborer in those days must toil on industriously for fourteen long years if he would possess a copy of the word of God. Now, the earnings of half a day will pay the cost of a beautifully printed copy of the Bible. What a contrast!

The most unpleasant vocation in the world Pro-vocation.

A smart young woman can judge by a kiss of the quality of her lover's liquor.

American Old Men and Women.

The drollest thing is that when the American lady comes to be about fifty years old, she gets over her leanness and her plainness, and suddenly becomes young again. The population of Broadway seems to be composed (apart from the middle-aged ladies, who are, as a rule, heart-rending in appearance) of pretty young ladies of sixteen, and pretty young ladies of sixty. No sir, I have not tripped in my speech; I repeat, young ladies of sixty. A juvenile grandmother is anything but a rarity here; gushing young ladies of threescore are not uncommon; and I have ventured to cast more than one humbly tender glance at a damsel of seventy. You very seldom meet with an old man in society. The men work, fret, smoke, speculate, chew, or drink themselves to death at a comparatively early age. Nor are old men very popular in the States; they are passed by as "played out." I have heard more than one lawgiver and statesman called a "worn out cuss." It was an unfailing topic of sarcasm against the Hon. Edward Everett that he was so very old; and George Bancroft, the illustrious historian of the United States—a writer who combines the accuracy of an Allison with the research of a Prescott, the copiousness of a Grimshaw with vivacity of a Peter Parley—is usually spoken of by the irreverent young men of Gotham as "old Fuss and Feathers."

The truth is that the Americans have but little reverence for age among their own sex. Strong, active, energetic and unscrupulous, noisy, pushing men they admire and almost defy; but age generally brings with it wisdom, experience, calmness, judgment, depreciation of wild enthusiasm, dislike to rash innovation. These qualities are not to the taste of Young America. They are not go-ahead. They do not go far towards making up the beau ideal of transatlantic humanity: "A real live man, sir——!" I have heard of venerable partners in mercantile firms being superseded and pushed off their stools as obsolete and incompetent, by their juniors; and an American—mind, an American—not an English—friend once told me that he saw over a store-front in Jersey City this announcement "Tompkin and Father."

Therein lay a mine of philosophy.—Tompkin the elder was evidently "played out;" he was a "cuss," and of "no account," and "very small potatoes." He was permitted, just for charity's sake, to continue in the business, mind the shop, dust the counter, and see the shutters put up by the black porter; but the real live man in the concern was young Tompkin, who, despising and disparaging his antiquated progenitor, was making rapid strides, no doubt, towards running for Congress, taking the presidency of a petroleum company, and putting himself in nomination for the highest offices of the State—say the secretaryship of the treasury, the postmastership of the Communipaw, or the lighthouse keepership at Cape Knob.

An old American gentleman, when you do meet him, which is but rarely, is generally a most delightful companion—very benignant, very tolerant, very free from prejudice, and usually a strong friend to England.

The old American lady, whom, fortunately, you very often meet, is the most charming person it is possible to conceive. See her in Broadway; handsomely, but warmly and sensibly clad; smiling and nodding and joking; with her wrinkled but rosy little face, in guise something between a waxen peach and a well preserved pippin; with the nicest set of artificial teeth that Dr. Zackary could carve from a rhinoceros' tusk; and her own hair disposed in snowy silvery bunches on either side of her temples.—George Augusta Sala.

THE AMERICAN HOTEL CLERK.

I am aware that in England you know nothing about the hotel-clerk of this country—you can't imagine him unless you have visited Yankeedom. He is nowhere to be found save in the land of the soaring eagle. I hesitate at giving a description. The subject is one requiring powers which surpass my limited capacity. Still, I wish to give some idea of the grand personage in question. He is far more gorgeous, more magnificent than potentates of the East. He has curly hair, a round and very smooth face, wears the most beautiful dress, has a valuable diamond pin in his shirt bosom, has diamond rings and massive gold chains; is haughty to new comers, and affable to the regular guests of the hotel, but never stoops to anything like familiarity with any one short of a member of Congress, or a well-known petroleum or contract Shoddyite. When you first enter covered with dust and travel worn the hotel clerk casts one glance at you, and then picks his teeth with a gold pen, and relapses into thought. You venture at last, though in a subdued manner, to ask for a room. You repeat the question with an approach to impatience, as you obtain no answer to your inquiry. At last the hotel clerk awakens to the fact that an ordinary mortal is before him in quest of shelter. "Have you wrote?" he demands rather haughtily; thus conveying the idea that to obtain entrance into the Paradise over which he presides is a matter of forethought. You did not write! "What, expect to come here and find rooms vacant?" You writhe under his sarcasm. You wish you hadn't left New York. You beg pardon, you will go elsewhere. At that word a smile of contempt, of derision, flits over the countenance of the hotel clerk. "Is there an elsewhere?" You see this question in every lineament of the man's face. Abashed, you pick up your portmanteau, and endeavour to make your retreat. You reach the door. "Stop!" The hotel clerk just recollects that there is one—one room vacant,—and he gives you that. You thank him humbly; you climb up to the roof of the house, are ushered into a closet—so small that you have to stand upon the bed to shut the door—and thenceforth you are a subject of this potentate. He makes you pay five dollars a day for the little attic; and when you have remained a few weeks he condescends to nod to you in the morning.

A GHOST STORY.

We were returning from our spring meeting of Presbytery—one gentleman and two young ladies—in a "rockaway," and the roads none of the best. Night, cold and damp, overtook us eight or ten miles from home, but only a short distance from Judge Blane's. Knowing that we should find out-side the door or the latch string, and inside a warm welcome, a warm fire, a warm supper, besides beds in which we would warm ourselves—we unhesitatingly consigned ourselves to his hospitality. Supper being over, and our persons seated according to our several ways, in a semi-circle before an old fashioned blazing fire, we were just in the mind to enjoy the entertainment of our host's conversational gifts. Among other things he narrated the following unique tale, which we unanimously agreed to print:—

Years ago we had in our house a sweet little child about four years of age, the object, of course, of a very tender affection. But sickness laid its hand upon it. Remedies, promptly resorted to, all proved in vain. Day after day the roses faded from the cheek, and the fire in the eyes burned low, and at length death closed those eyes forever; and we learn by the trying experience, how intense a darkness follows the quenching of one of these little lights of life.

Time, rolling steadily on, brought us at length to the hour appointed for committing our treasure to the grave.

The friends assembled, the customary services were held, the farewell taken, and the little form securely shut beneath the coffin lid, and in due time the grave received its due. We looked on and saw the earth thrown in, the mound raised above, and the plates of sod neatly adjusted into a green sheltering roof, and then wended our way back to our desolated home. Evening came on and wore away. My wife had gone into an adjoining room to give some directions to a servant, and I, unfitted by the sorrows of the day for aught else, had just laid my head upon my pillow, when I heard a shriek, and in a moment more my wife came flying into the room, and springing upon the bed behind me, exclaimed:

"See there! our child! our child!"

Raising my head, my blood froze within me, and the hair upon my head stood up as I saw the little thing in grave clothes, with open, but manifestly sightless eyes, and pale as when we gave it the last kiss, walking slowly towards us.

Had I been alone—had not the extreme terror of my life compelled me to play the man—I should have leaped the window and died without casting a look behind.

But not daring to leave her in such terror I arose, sat down in a chair, and took the little creature between my knees—a cold sweat covering my body—and gazed with feelings unutterable upon the object before me. The eyes were opened in a vacant stare. The flesh was colorless, cold and clammy; nor did the child seem to have the power either of speaking or hearing, as it made no attempt to answer any of our questions. The horror of our minds was the more intense, as we had watched our child through its sickness and death, and had been but a few hours before eye witnesses of its interment.

While gazing upon it, and asking in my thoughts, "What can this extraordinary providence mean? For what can it be sent?" the servant girl, having crept to the door, after a time suggested, "It looks like Mr. R——'s child."

Now, our next neighbor had a child of nearly the same age as ours, and its constant companion. But what could bring it to our house at that hour, and in such a plight? Still, the suggestion had operated as a powerful sedative upon our excited feelings, and rendered us more capable of calm reflection. And after a time we discovered in truth that the grave clothes were night clothes and the corpse a somnabulist! And it became manifest that it was the excitement attending the loss and burial of its playmate, working upon the child's mind in sleep, to which we were indebted for this untimely and startling visit.

Wiping away the perspiration, and taking a few long breaths, I prepared to countermarch the little intruder back to its forsaken bed. Back it went, it keeping by my side, though still asleep. It had walked quite a distance across the damp grass. I found the door of its home ajar, just as the fugitive had left it, and its sleeping parents unconscious of its absence. The door creaked as I pushed it open, and wakened the child, who looked wildly around for a moment and then popped into bed.

Now, had it not been for my wife, as I have said, I should, on the appearance of this apparition, have made a leap of uncommon agility from that window, and after a flight of uncommon velocity for a person of my age and dignity, I should have been ready to take oath in any court that I had seen a ghost.

Vengeance Rather.

"Do you ever go to evening parties?" said an acquaintance to another.

"No," said my friend Tom. "I used to, but I am cured."

"How so?" said I, anxious to learn his experience.

"Why, you see," said Tom, feelingly, "I went to one some few years back, and fell in love with a beautiful girl. I courted like a trump, and I thought I had her sure, when she eloped with a tailor. But I swore vengeance. I patronized the robber of my happiness, and ordered a full suit of clothes, regardless of expense."

"But your vengeance," said I.

"I struck the tailor in his most vital part. I never paid that bill. But those infernal clothes were the cause of all my future misfortunes—that they were."

"How so," said I with a simple of compassion.

"Wearing them I captivated my present wife. She told me so, and I haven't seen a happy day since. But I am bound to be square with that wretched tailor on the long run. I left him a legacy, on condition that he marries my widow."

A DIVINE JUDGMENT AND A BEACON OF WARNING TO THE NATIONS.

From the Scottish Original Secession Mag.

CONTINUED.

It ought, unquestionable, to be contemplated, in the first place, as a signal judgment from God on the United States, on account of sin. It is still a true axiom among Christians that "the hand of God is to be recognized in every event, from the least to the greatest." He appoints and permits, as well as controls, whatever takes place in the universe. "Shall there be evil in a city, and the Lord hath not done it?" It is a true axiom among Christians that God punishes nations for sin. Among us in Britain and Ireland, among the most numerous and wealthy Presbyterians and Independents, error is on the increase. The World and the Church are found in many congregation in a state of happy union. Discipline is thrown overboard first, then doctrine, and in their place laxity in Church discipline, and Arminianism and Baxterianism instead of the wholesome and scriptural doctrines of Westminster confession. It can be no wonder to the true Christian, let him be Presbyterian, Baptist or Independent, that God's judgments are abroad in the earth, lately in America and now in some other parts of the world in the shape of pestilence. For society in America and Britain is corrupt—among all classes, high and low, learned and illiterate, in the Church and out of it, among all classes and professions, lay and clerical—vice, dissipation and extravagance prevail. The World is the principal object sought by thousands; and to obtain it, personal and domestic peace, country, interests of humanity, are alike sacrificed. Infidelity is also spreading among us here and in America; German theology has got into the Churches, establish and dissenting. The plenary inspiration of the scriptures is denied, and reason exalted in the place of revelation. The Sabbath, the day of rest, is dishonored by idleness, social tea-parties, pursuits of pleasure, business, visiting, and acts of legislation, &c. The moral and spiritual culture of children is neglected by parents, or also devolved upon Sabbath School Teachers. Popery, twin sister to infidelity, is exerting amongst us a wide-spread influence, laboring hard for power and position among the nations. For such doings, God has a controversy with us; let it be the prayer of all of us that he may not punish us as we deserve, for our sins national and individual. In America, the hand of a just and holy God, in the infliction of war, is strikingly indicated in some of the particular forms in which it has been meted out to that Republic. Was it an inordinate thirst for gain, for the accumulation of what has been profanely called the "Almighty Dollar," which had a chief influence in instigating to the commission and legal sanction of crimes of the most revolting kind on a scale so gigantic? One effect of this war is to exhaust the financial resources of the Republic in a degree and form of which we have no previous precedent. Never in the past history of the world did a nation contract such an immense amount of debt, threatening actual bankruptcy, in so short a space of time. Never, so far as we know, did the currency of a nation undergo such a depreciation, deranging all branches of trade at home as well as abroad. And may not the prevalence of fraud, to an enormous extent, be also a retribution of the long continuance of legalized robbery of the worst kind, in upholding the slave system? As the Israelites, in obedience to the command of God, spoiled the Egyptians of their ill-gotten wealth, heaped up by the oppression and wrong to which they were subjected; so by this civil war the United States—North and South—are being spoiled, as in a moment, of the riches which have been accumulated by subjecting the unoffending African race, in vast numbers, to the endurance of anguish and pain, by robbing them of their heaven-born birthright, personal liberty, and thus depriving them of what, next to life, is dearest to man, as well as of life itself, to an extent which is known only to Him to whom "all things are naked and open." The Confederate State and Cities, were more generally involved in the sin of Slavery, and were more immediately enriched by the oppression and degredation of the African. But the so-called owners of the slave became possessed of great wealth furnished by the immense and valuable product of slave labour! Had they become, like the men of Tyre of old, merchant princes! So in judgment from God these vast States of "men stealers," have had to drink deeply of the cup of Jehovah's wrath. They oppressed the "poor and needy," and, as a natural consequence of the possession of wealth, they became conceited, proud and haughty, and vainly imagined that there was no God to punish, for the evils they inflict on their fellow creatures, till in the midst of their fancied security He told them "My anger is not turned away," but "My hand is stretched out still." "Like the crackling of thorns under a pot," how soon was the joy of the oppressor of the poor African" turned to mourning.

RULES FOR GROWING OLD.—I am an old man; I have seen nearly a century. Do you want to know how to grow old slowly and happily? Let me tell you. Masticate well; go to your food, to your rest and to your occupations smiling. Keep a good nature and a soft temper everywhere. Never give way to anger. A violent tempest of passion tears down the constitution more than a typhus fever. Cultivate a good memory, and to do this you must be communicative; repeat what you have read, and talk about it. Dr. Johnson's great memory was owing to his communicativeness. Young men who are just leaving college, let me advise you to choose a profession in which you can exercise your talent the best and at the same time be honest. The best profession is the ministry of the gospel. If you have not talents to be a minister, be a lawyer, but be an honest lawyer.

THE INTERNATIONAL VISIT.

Grand Excursion to the City of Rochester by the Corporations and a few private Citizens of Peterborough, Cobourg, Port Hope, Lindsay, Brighton, Colborne, and Township of Hope.

RECEPTION THE MOST FRIENDLY AND CORDIAL.

The Entertainment most Princely!

THE VISIT NOT TO BE FORGOTTEN.

Lately our citizens had the great and unspeakable pleasure of a flying visit to our Town, of the Mayor and municipal authorities of the City of Rochester: and through the kindness and liberality of the owner and agent of that new and beautiful vessel, the Corinthian, also at the invitation of the Mayor and Corporation of Rochester, an invitation was extended to the municipalities of Peterboro', Port Hope, Lindsay, Cobourg, Colborne and Brighton, to pay what he called a return visit to their good cousins on the south shore of Ontario. Accordingly, on the 13th instant, a goodly number of our municipal Fathers, accompanied by a few of our private citizens, made an early start for the south.

AT THE STATION.

Here all, or nearly all, were assembled, and enjoying themselves in social chit-chat, when all at once the train moved. The smartest then obtained a foothold first; but a few were left behind, and some had not yet arrived. All this, it is said, took place before the full time, and without the usual "all aboard;" this, however, had been given by the conductor, but was not heard by the noisy throng. Through the timely intervention of C. Perry, Esq., and the aid of Mr. Bulwer, the engine was reversed to the station again, and the missing ones received on board. Away we start again; but only to meet with another stop to our career, for just as the train crossed the gravel road in the swamp, a "hot bearing" burst, bringing all to a standstill. Then those that could had to amuse themselves as best they could for over three hours. Some looked sullen—some enjoyed themselves—one or two talked of returning, under the impression that the boat could not wait for our delays—and not a few engaged in picking coppers, and other amusements to while away the time. A hawker, however, had been despatched at first to Millbrook, and a locomotive telegraphed for. This caused some delay; but as short a time as possible was occupied in doing this, for the managers of the P. H. & P. R. R. at once dispatched a locomotive to bring down the anxiously looked for train.

Again for a season the sun shone brightly, but only to be lost under a second cloud; for the train, hampered by the useless engine, proved too much for the locomotive, and, in consequence, had to be cut in two, and taken at twice. All, however, arrived safe at Millbrook, and were greeted by a few who had gone before on foot. Notwithstanding all these delays, we arrived at Port Hope at a quarter to twelve o'clock, and were soon on board of that elegant "floating palace," the steamer Corinthian, when the generous and hospitable owner, Mr. C. F. Gildersleeve, applied a sovereign balm to the wounds of those who had thus suffered, in the way of abundance of champaign, &c., &c., &c. A special lunch was also at momentary notice provided, which certainly was very acceptable to all, but especially to those who had happened to indulge too long in the arms of Morpheus, and thus had been forced to leave home on short allowance.

ON BOARD.

The cravings of appetite were no sooner satisfied (at the expense, too, of the owner of the steamer) than parties sought out acquaintances and endeavoured to pass the time in pleasantness. We noticed that "Law and Gospel," "Military and Civil authorities," spiritual and medical advisers, were all fully represented, and each trying to enjoy himself, (shall we say according to his professional predilections) but this would be too much, we will rather say according to his natural instinct. Thus pleasantly and we trust profitably passed the lively moments until the American coast came in view, when many left their sports to gaze on the beautifully lying farms of "Uncle Sam." Whether or not the waters of the Genesee indicate the unsettled state of the United States, we cannot tell; but if they do there must be troubled waters, for at first bite the waters are mixed with a due share of the soil of the empire state.

AT CHARLOTTE.

No sooner was the Corinthian alongside the wharf than she was boarded by Aldermen Fish, Warner, Wagner, and others, besides numbers of the Reception Committee, who had come down to receive the Canadian visitors—not at the point of the bay net, although many bayonets were present—but in amity and friendliness. The coast and houses had their crowds of spectators, who received the visitors with deafening cheers of welcome, and from the verandahs the ladies exhibited their kindly welcome by waving of handkerchiefs. A company of Albany Zouave Cadets, and a company of Rochester Union Blues, on board the steamer Ontario, also greeted the Corinthian, as she entered the river, with hearty cheers, the band on the Ontario at the same time playing some of national airs. The train for the city being unable to wait for the Corinthian, the passengers enjoyed themselves in sight-seeing, and witnessing the evolutions of the military, until another train arrived.

Alderman Fish here informed the party that a part of their programme would have to be dispensed with, because of our delays. It had been arranged to receive the Canadians at the City Hall at four o'clock, and nearly 10,000 citizens, we were informed, were assembled to witness it; but the burst on the Peterborough Road upset their calculations, and in consequence the reception took place at the Bracket House, one of the finest and most commodious of the city hotels.

As the train neared the city and station, the streets were literally crowded. Although after dark and raining at the time, several thousand persons were there to witness the proceedings; but the best order prevailed.

THE RECEPTION.

On landing from the cars, out of the station is the entrance to the Bracket House; and here Mayor Moore and the Reception Committee had a passage made through the dense crowd to this entrance, where he presented the following address:—

To the Mayors and Members of the Corporations of Port Hope, Cobourg, Peterboro, Lindsay, Colborne, and Brighton:—

GENTLEMEN—In behalf of our municipal authorities and citizens, bid you a cordial welcome to Rochester, and extend to you its hospitalities on this, to us, and we trust, to you, also pleasant and auspicious occasion. Though our city is not so old and large as many in these States, we prefer it to all others, as comprising not only the elements and essentials of prosperity, but as possessing thousands of peaceful and happy homes, with attractive surroundings. In return for your present kind and most hearty reception and entertainment of our corporation and others, we shall in true spirit of friendly reciprocity, take pleasure in showing you some of the improvements and evidences of real progress and substantial advancement which belong to our city, and that render us proud of Rochester and Western New York. If not surprised we trust you will be gratified with what you see of our city and its people, and that, on the borders, and near neighbors of yours as we are, you will find us at least average representatives of the intelligence, enterprise and progressiveness of a nation, which, though just recovering from a fearful ordeal, is as strong to-day as ever, and we trust as friendly to your people and government.

For this your first collective and official visit to our city, we thank you sincerely, and trust that it will lead to more fraternal and intimate social and commercial relations between the members of the two powerful nations here represented. Long may their banners wave as now in peace and harmony. These international courtesies between nations nearly allied and speaking the same language, are most beneficial to both, and should be continued, and let us, at least, see that they are perpetuated.

In conclusion, gentlemen, permit us to hope that your visit to our city will in no wise be seen in your eyes, but that your recollections of it in the future (like our own of a recent excursion to some of your towns) will be among your most pleasant remembrances.

Col. Hamilton, in behalf of the Canadian visitors, replied in very happy and appropriate terms; he remarked that the two nations were of one blood, used one language, were, in point of friends, cousins—had almost said brethren; and being thus one in origin and language, and enjoying the same privileges, why should they not be one in heart and sentiment? Then, being one, with the flags of the two great representatives of true liberty everywhere united, the liberties of the world would be safe. He concluded by thanking the people of Rochester for the cordial welcome they had received.

Almost an hour was spent in registering names, &c., when the whole party were led to the large dining hall of the Bracket House.

THE HALL.

Just over the door entering the hall the two flags of Britain and the United States were made to meet above, and the two ends were intertwined; all round the sides were festooned with Star Spangled Banners. The head of the room was graced with portraits of Queen Victoria, her lamented Consort, the Father of the Republic, President Johnson, President Lincoln, and General Grant. Mayor Moore occupied the chief place; on his right Col Hamilton, Mayors Quinlan & Keenan; on his left Dr. Short, Port Hope; Dr. Foote, Rochester; Major Hill, &c. Mayor Scott of Peterboro, Alderman Draper, and others, occupied the Vice chairs.

Rev Dr. Foote, of Rochester, having said grace, the heavily laden tables soon began to be eased of their burden. For almost two hours, however, the unceasing clang—not of arms, but of cups, platters, flying stoppers, &c., &c.—rendered hearing next to impossible, until craving appetites were not only satisfied, but in some cases, we fear, satiated.

COFFEE.

After the demolition of these preparations, Dr. Short, Port Hope, returned thanks, and then commenced the more intellectual feast:

THE TOASTS AND RESPONSES.

Mayor Moore, of Rochester, gave the first sentiment of the evening:—"The self-made man, the Chief of the Republic: the President of the United States." Which was received with three hearty cheers, and then three more Canadians joining with a hearty good will. The band played the Star Spangled Banner.

Mayor Moore, next gave "Queen Victoria, a sovereign whom we all delight to esteem and honor, and who wears not only the crown of sovereignty but also that of virtue." This toast was most heartily received by all. Americans joining with a good will. Band, "God save the Queen." Then three more cheers were given for Victoria. The Orpheus Glee Club of Rochester, singing "God save the Queen."

To this toast the Rev. Dr. Short, of Port Hope responded in his usual happy style. He said he was singularly honored in being called upon to respond to this sentiment; it was one which enlisted every feel of his heart, as well as the higher feelings of every heart having heard of the character of Her Majesty. Canadians had heard of Fenians coming over from the United States, to make a raid on Canada; but he felt assured that they had no such idea. But while he (Dr. Short) admired—yes, gloried in everything British, being British to the "back-bone," yet he was second to none in his feeling of admiration and esteem for his American friends. He remarked that we had been trying to get a confederation of the British Provinces, but that we ought to seek a confederation of the two nations; perhaps not a confederation for political purposes, but a confederation for every good work. The two people were friends—nay, brothers—which their feelings for one another showed. In fact, why were there jealousies between the two? Was it not because they loved one another? as even their jealousy fully showed. Sprung from the same nation—brothers of the same parents—believing the same holy articles of religion—and alike working to send the same Scriptures to the ends of the earth, was it not a shame to be hostile one to the other? Was it not contrary to every feeling of the humane & generous principles of our natures? Instead of these things, let us vie with each other in arts of peace, and in the noble destiny of spreading liberty, truth and virtue throughout the world. He felt the strongest feeling of good will for his American friends, as did every true Canadian, and as the lamentation and mourning on the occasion of the late sad event to their President fully testified. And these feelings were because everything valuable in British Law and British Rule were to be found in the United States; the very same principles animate both. There was no necessity for annexation; the two could agree better as they were. The only annexation desired was annexation of gentlemen and ladies. He referred to the late fearful struggle, but remarked that not one star had been lost, their flag unsullied would float over the homes of the "brave and free," he gloried in this, for he admired the American people; so much so that if he were not a Briton he would be an American. The reverend gentleman sat down amidst prolonged cheers.

The "Governor of the State of New York" was then given, and Commodore Hill, in answer to a call from the chair, responded in the most pleasant terms, proving himself more than a sailor—an orator. He concluded an excellent address by the following sentiment:—"Our Neighbors across the Lake—May our relations with them be peaceful and pleasant so long as they owe allegiance to that noble hearted woman, the Queen, who is living with the respectful regard of the civilized world; and may we meet each other with honest hearts and open hands so long as we are each true to the best interests of humanity, and whatever treaties may be revoked or annulled, may there be a Reciprocity of good feeling which shall never give place to animosity or strife—

Or a dread Mars shall call to arms,
And former friends shall meet to fight,
With sound and blade, 'mid shot and alarms,
Then say we, "God defend the right."

Drank with enthusiasm, and three hearty cheers for Commodore Hill.

The Mayor next gave "The Governor General of Canada," which was received with all honors, the Port Hope Glee Club singing the "Buccaneer's Bride, which was delivered with effect, and warmly encored.

The next toast was "Our Guests," Col. Hamilton was then called upon to respond, which he did in his usual free and pleasant style. It was with pleasure he responded, only he regretted that he was forced to hear his own voice instead of the voices of others. He returned thanks for the cordial reception extended to himself and those with whom he had come. He regretted that our delays had disarranged their plans, and put them to some inconveniences; but he trusted that these things would not mar their enjoyment, and he felt sure at least they would return to Canada wiser than when they left it. He hoped, too, that Canadians would imbibe some of the spirit of American enterprise, which they might turn to account in their new bound regions, which, although near the pole, had much to counterbalance those things. He hoped, above all things, that they would carry home a deep rooted sentiment of good will between the two nations. If anything would give him pleasure, it would be the union of Great Britain and the United States, for the purpose of extending liberty, truth and virtue to the ends of the earth. They were one people, of one language, one origin, and should be one in heart. But if they were not one nation, yet they could unite to do good to mankind, both at home and in foreign lands. (Cheers.) The lives and names of his American countrymen reminded him of Englishmen. There was Moore, their highly respected Mayor, and Draper, the President of their Council, reminding of either English or Irish origin and names that reminded of deeds of valour and of song. There might be a little difference in the machinery of their Governments, but the motive power was the same, "liberty and equality." Variety was the law in everything; and it was a desirable one, too, and although in Britain rank and property were represented, and in the United States individuals; still let the two go on and try which was best suited to the wants and spirit of the people. (Cheers.) He hoped that the present greetings and meetings would be the means of cementing the two nations so that they might become one in every good act. He regretted that ever there was an act that separated them from the parent country—separated them politically—but worse, caused alienation. Scarcely a century had passed since that bitter feeling commenced; but let us hope that the celebration of the deed may not be in bitterness but good will. Our object now was kindness and union, so that if ever the liberties of the world should be at stake, these two great nations should make common cause in its support. (Cheers.) Such a union of true liberty was very desirable; and better that the hand should be paralyzed and the tongue be dumb than this should not be. (Continued cheers.)

Mayors Keenan, Quinlan Scott, and Ford (per proxy,) responded, of which the Mayor Keenan signalized himself most by declaring his American proclivities.

Councillor Kerr, of Cobourg, spoke to this sentiment.

"The Armies and Navies of Great Britain and the United States: the preservers of civil and religious liberty throughout the world," was then given, and spoken to by Brig. Gen. Marrisdale, of New York. This gentleman made an eloquent and effective speech, which space only forbids us giving the outlines of.

The next toast, by Mayor Quinlan, "Our Hosts." To which Alderman Draper and Mr. Millar responded in pleasant humorous speeches. Mr. Draper was peculiarly jocose; Mr. Millar, eloquent, and concluded by advising parties to be careful how they should rush into war.

Dr. Dewar, of Port Hope, then gave "God bless the Yankee Girls."—a good sentiment for an old bachelor. Mr. Fowler, of the P. H. & B. R. R., and Mr. Gildersleeve, of the steamer Corinthian, also made speeches.

The concluding toast was "The Press," which, by arrangement, was received without a call, owing to the lateness of the hour, No. 2 having just been spoken out loudly.

Mayor Moore then made known the order for to-morrow, when all repaired to prepare themselves for the next day.

We regret that local matter forbids our giving the second day's proceedings, this we will endeavor to do next week.

THE COUNTY SHOW.

The Annual Exhibition of the produce of the farm, manufactures and industry of the County, took place here on Thursday last. In every respect this, we learn, was the most successful show that has been held, at least for years.

The day was very favourable indeed; but the hall, and grounds for the cattle, were not at all suitable. The hall is not suitable for such shows; the whole place was one scene of confusion—no getting in or out, and no remedy. The possibility of order was out of the question; but the outside was worse. Where the cattle were shown, it was out of one mud-puddle into another; some of the Cattle we saw were forced to stand in the water and mud all the time. The Sheep were a little better off; but their place was not much to boast of either. Something surely must be done to remedy such evils. People will not exhibit unless there are commodious places for so doing; and the sooner the Society sets about preparing a place, the better. Notwithstanding all these drawbacks the show was decidedly a success. The Township of Smith, was best represented.

THE HORSES.

The number of entries in this class was not very large. I. Garbutt, Esq., of Smith, exhibited a very neat and active animal, a clear bay with four black legs, and good action on muscle; he took the first prize in single harness. Mr. S. W. Scott, of North Monaghan, also exhibited a very fine animal. Mr. Elliott, unfortunately, slightly damaged his buggy, and was thus compelled to leave the track, but got the third prize. We do not conceive of any necessity to test the speed of Carriage Horses, as is generally done. The appearance and general action, together with signs of durability, is more to be desired in a Buggy Horse than great speed, in our opinion. Mr. T. G. Fitzgerald, Smith, showed a beautiful span of greys which took the first prize as Carriage Horses. Mr. Robert Nicholls took the special prize; W. A. Hall, third prize. These were all fine horses. For Farm Horses, Mr. Galvin Sheran obtained the first prize.

CATTLE.

Mr. John Walton, Smith, exhibited a very fine lot of Durhams, and some Grades; he also exhibited a fine aged Bull, Durham; the animal is three years old, and weighs 2430 lbs. Mr. Walton deserves much credit for his enterprize in stock-raising, in which he spares no cost to have the best breeds. Mr. Walton received nearly a dozen prize. Mr. Matthew Walton also exhibited largely in Cattle, and Messrs. Joseph Walton, Alex. Scott and Geo. Scott, had some very good Grade and Native stock. H. Collins was also very successful in carrying off various prizes in Grades.

SHEEP.

The exhibitors in this class were numerous Mr. W. Gill, Lakefield, exhibited some very fine ones, and carried off many of the prizes. Messrs. H. Collins, I. Watson, T. Parrington, James Hair and James Wallis, were the principal exhibitors of Leicesters; Mr. M Walton, of South Downs, as far as we could learn. For Fat Sheep, Mr. W. Gill took the first prize; Joseph Walton, the second.

PIGS.

Swine were well represented. Mr. W. Fowler showed a very fine sow. Mr. W. Scott showed a very fine boar, which had taken the first prize at the Cavan Show, and certainly a fine-looking animal it is. Mr. Jos. Redmond had some Berkshires which looked well; Mr. Jos. Walton and he were the principal exhibitors in this class.

POULTRY.

The principal exhibitors in this class were Messrs. John Walton, I. Garbutt, and H. Collins, each of whom had fine collections of fowls.

FARM IMPLEMENTS.

This part of the exhibition was, in our opinion, the worst represented. Only three Ploughs were on the ground, one Harrow, two Straw Cutters, and one Chop Grinder. True, these articles were of the best description; but, from the number, it is easily seen that competition here does not run high. The Chop Grinder is patented by Mr. Aldus Mowry, of Ashburnham, and was manufactured by Mr. W. Hamilton, Peterborough. Mr. J. Hamilton exhibited a Plough said to be the only article used now in the West, and which took the first prize at the Provincial Exhibition.

COOPER'S WORK.

Mr. Robert Renfrew had some very neatly finished Flour Barrels, one well-made Oil Barrel, a Churn, and a small Tub. From the appearance of these articles, Mr. Renfrew can certainly do good work. The whole lot was highly recommended by the Judges as worthy of notice.

We regret that space will not permit us to refer to everything we examined. For further particulars see prize-list.

LADIES' WORK &c.

Owing to the fact that the prizes in this department have not yet been awarded by the Judges, who we are told I and the task a difficult one, the publication of the same is deferred for another week.

An Example of Industry.

On the the Fair day we noticed a dealer in patent medicines—a stranger, who would put to shame them-selves. He unceasingly set forth particular merits of his specifics—nothing diverted his attention from his one great work—the sale of his nostrums. It seems to be his business but exercise the same assiduity and energy, cared less for the fun and more for the cents, perhaps more would be what are called "successful men." At the same time we cannot but wonder that the people are so easily gulled as to listen to the nonsense, that any drug will cure every thing; this itself is enough to condemn the whole in the mind of any right thinking man. There is no one sovereign remedy for every disease that afflicts. Common sense dictates this; and when any one begins to tell us that he has found one that cures all, we may at once set him down a humbug or receiver, and to use a not very polite term—a liar. But as long as purchasers are found the unprincipled vender will ply his trade; dollars and cents overbalances every other consideration.

Almost a Break-up.

On Monday evening, whilst the train from Port Hope was crossing the boundary at Fraserville, a son of J. H. Anson was driving a horse and buggy along; and recklessly, or because the horse became unmanageable, the animal was caught and killed. Six cars were dashed off the track and smashed, some of them being pitched a considerable distance; but, the best of all is, no one was hurt seriously. The only one who received any injuries was the boy, and he is not much hurt. This is indeed a miracle, as the horse was killed, the buggy broken, and has boy's cap taken off his head. When found he was near the track, very quietly looking on, not fully realizing his narrow escape. No blame is attached to any of the employees of the road.

Cavan Agricultural Exhibition.

The Exhibition was held on Tuesday last, at Millbrook in the Township of Cavan, and was one of the best of that fine Township's Agricultural Exhibitions. An immense crowd of people was in attendance; and 700 entries were made with the Secretary. The prize-list amounts to over $200, for fruits, grains and vegetables. This Show was far superior to anything—either Township or County—we have seen for years. In fact, in several classes it was with great difficulty the Judges were able to come to a decision. The different varieties of Apples exhibited were the finest we ever saw, both as to flavor and size. The Cabbage, Peas, Sweet Turnips, Carrots, Parsnips, Squash, Mangle wurtzel, &c., were really magnificent specimens of Vegetables, and were all worthy of prizes. The display of Ladies' Work was varied and extensive; some most beautiful specimens of their handiwork were here shown. The show of Ladies' Work, Painting, Fruits, &c., was held in the Town Hall, which was fitted up for the purpose, and was splendidly decorated with Oil Paintings, Steel Engravings, Crayons, Embroidery, Raised work, &c., the work of the Ladies of Cavan, all of which reflected great credit on the fair exhibitors. The display of knitted Work was extensive, and really useful and beautiful. Several Corps of Cadets were exhibited, and also some Cabinets of Smith's Birds.

The Show of Horses was held on the green flat near by, and was one of the finest we have seen for some time. The Horses shown were of the better class, both in draught and carriage Horses, better than has been exhibited for some years, and would compare favourably with any in the County. In fact, the great drawback being the length of time and the want of space. Such an exhibition requires two days, to do justice to exhibitors and enable judges to form correct opinions as to the merits of the various articles shown, and to enable parties who have paid their money for a ticket to see all and every thing shown. We hope our Cavan friends will in future make the matter a two days affair, and they will find it more convenient for themselves, and in future benefit to the society. The want of space prevents us from publishing the prize-list. We will try and make room for it next week.

Counterfeiting.

Armstrong of Toronto and Hamilton notoriety, has again been at work in the neighborhood of Belleville and on the bank of the Trent, and by the timely aid of a Mr Howe, has succeeded in ferreting out one of the most extensive gangs of counterfeiters. These have been brought to trial, and will no doubt serve a few months in the great workshop at Kingston, where, it is to be hoped, they will learn a more honorable and lawful profession. Armstrong is a master in his business, and deserves the thanks of the country for his invaluable services.—This time, as well as at Hamilton, several individuals of apparent respectability are found implicated. Merchants, Farmers, and Her Majesty's Justices of the Peace, are all found guilty of violating the law; and let us trust they will have to pay its penalty. These operations have been carried on for over thirty years. Some of the accused glorying in the fact that they and their fathers before them carried it on. Merchants also have been found agreeing to purchase thousands of dollars of the base coin. The dies, in part, have been found, which may stop the trade for a while; but as it is connected with a party in the States, the whole is not frustrated yet. However, such information may be gathered as will lead to the discovery of the whole parties. The counterfeiters have had aiders and abettors in Hamilton, Toronto, &c., in Canada, and all through the State of New York. The whole has not yet come to light.

To J. P.'s.

We are desired to call the attention of Her Majesty's Justices of the Peace to the necessity for a meeting, to audit the accounts of Constables, Coroners and others. This event had one unless there are at least 7 J. P.'s present. The meeting will take place on Monday, the 23d inst. See advertisement.

FEATHER RENOVATING.—Mr. S. B. Dewbiss, who has taken rooms in Mr. Bradburn's new building, Simcoe street, has taken the trouble to explain to us his operations in renovating old feathers, and making them as good as new, and putting new ones in a proper condition for use, and he certainly succeeds. He has tried several old beds, and in every case we have heard of satisfaction. All feel of an empty place to rest on, should at once go and see the operations, that they may be able to judge for themselves. He has many houses removed by giving him a trial.

Mr. J. T. Breeze, the author of several poems on Canada in connection and Canada has favoured us with copies of two of his works. They evince a decided appreciation and a considerable effort at the art poetical. Mr. Breeze has claims on the Canadian public, as he delights to sing of Canadian topics generally; besides he says that he was injured in the lungs while preaching the Gospel among the Methodist Societies and therefore can claim that people's sympathies. He is now in this locality, offering his poems for sale. We ask a perusal of them.

The Committee of the Peterboro' Protestant Home, desire to acknowledge from the Grand Jury, the very liberal and handsome donation of $29, and trust the Grand Jury will accept their grateful thanks for the same.

NEW TIN SHOP.—Those customers will be found by advertisement of Mr. Thos. Lannin, who announces his opening a new Tin Shop on Hunter street. We can recommend Mr. Lannin to the public. Give his advertisement a perusal.

PRICE AGAIN.—Mr. Andrew Scott will please accept our thanks for the fine basket of Apples which he presented us and which took the prize at the late County Show. They were grown by him on his orchard in Monaghan.

REMOVAL.—Mr. A. McDonald has removed his Store to Mr. Burnham's Block, where he is now receiving a large assortment of goods.

Mr. Robt. Renfrew will accept our thanks for a very excellently made and neat butter keeler. This, with all his other work, is a credit to his establishment.

We trust our readers will bear with us in our late issue this week. The thanksgiving day, and the illness of one of our compositors, will, we hope be a sufficient excuse.

BALSAM OF WILD CHERRY IN CANADA.

The following testimony from a well known and highly respected Merchant of Prescott, is corroborative of the general approval given to Dr WISTAR'S BALSAM OF WILD CHERRY:

Prescott, C. W., Dec. 8th, 1859.

Messrs. S W Fowle & Co., Boston.

Gentlemen:

Being solicited by your Travelling Agent, for an expression of opinion of Dr. Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry, I with pleasure assure that it is, in my belief, the best remedy to for the public for coughs and pulmonary complaints.

Having tested the article with myself and family, in case of severe coughs and colds, for years, with uniform and unexceptionable success, I unhesitatingly recommend it, with full confidence in its virtues.

Yours truly,

ABOUT HUSBANDS.

"A man is, in general, better pleased when he has a good dinner upon his table than when it has wise sprake fresh."—Sam Johnson.

Johnson was right. I don't agree to all
The sturdy dogmas of the rough old stager;
But very much approve what one may call
The minor morals of the "Cruss Major."

Johnson was right. Although some men adore
Wisdom in spinsters, and with learning cram her;
There isn't one in ten but thinks far more
Of his own grub than of his spouse's grammar.

I know it is the greatest shame in life;
But who among them (save, perhaps, myself)
Returning hungry home, but asks his wife
What beef—not books—she has upon her shelf?

Though Greek and Latin be the lady's boast,
They're little valued by her loving mate:
'Tis kind of tongues that husbands relish most
To modern, boiled, and served upon a plate.

Or if, as fond ambition may command,
Some home-made verse the happy matrons show him,
What mortal spouse but from her dainty hand
Would sooner see a pudding than a poem.

Young lady—drop in love with Tom or Harry,
Tie nail to tell ye such a tale as this;
But here's the moral of it: Don't ye marry;
Or, marrying, take your lover as he is—

A very man—with something of the brute,
(Unless he prove a sentimental noddy)
With passions strong, and appetite to boot—
A thirsty soul within a hungry body.

A very man—not one of Nature's clods—
With human feelings, whether saint or sinner,
Endowed, perhaps, with genius from the gods,
But apt to take his temper from his dinner.

—John G. Saxe.

By P. Benson, Sr., whitch the sr. it stans for singger.

Bein direxions by whither enny yung person of modderate amiability ken lurn to sing without a livin teecher at oll. Commence lurnin to sing urly in tiphe befoar you ar in the yere and shallow leaf as the poet says. Doant be diskurridged if you ain't born of welthy prents, for meany a sangger hez bin trot up in indignant sircumstanes, and we doant know what may turn up enny da omid the checkered and orosshard scene of life.

Look pleasant & caw when you cing and doant stretch out your neck like a Hongshai rooster eatin korn off the hed of a barl.

Hoald up yure hed so as not to crowd the sternum of your brestbone. Tsik in a full inspyroshun of your breth soze the sound ken viberrate good.

Eat reglar 3 times a day if you ken git it; and never sleep on a full stummick—in fact it izzent best to sleep on your stummick at all, but lay on your side.

Drink no intalksicating or spirrittuous licker bekoz it is apt to influne the mucous member of the stummick and coz information.

Scene in a Police Court.

The prisoner in this case, whose name was Dicky Swivel, alias "Stove Pipe Peter," was placed at the bar, and questioned by the Judge to the following effect:

"Bring the prisoner into court," said the Judge.

"Here I is, bound to blaze, as the spirits of turpentine said when it was all afire."

"We will take a little of the fire out of you. How do you live?"

"I ain't part cular, as the oyster said, when they asked him if he'd be fried or roasted"

"We don't want to hear what the oyster said or the spirits of turpentine either.—What do you follow?"

"Anything that comes in my way, as the locomotive said when he run over the little nigger."

"We don't care anything about the locomotive. What is your business?"

"That's various, as the cat said when she stole the chicken off the plate."

"That comes nearer the line, I suppose."

"Altogether in my line, as the rope said when it was choking the pirate."

"If I hear any more absurd comparisons, I will give you twelve months."

"I am done, as the beefsteak said to the cook."

"Now, sir, your punishment shall depend on the shortness and correctness of your answers. I suppose you live by going around the docks?"

"No, sir, I can't go round the docks without a boat, and I hain't got none."

"Answer me; how do you get your bread?"

"Sometimes at bakers and sometimes eat taters."

"No more of your stupid insolence.—How do you support yourself?"

"Sometimes on my legs and sometimes on my cheer (chair)."

"I order you to answer this question correctly. How do you do?"

"Pretty well, thank you, judge; how do you do?"

"I shall have to commit you."

"Yes, you'd commit yourself, fust, that's some consolation.

We saw a boy, the other day, borrow a stick of candy from a comrade, to show him that he could pull it out of his ear. He swallowed it, and then twisted himself about in various ways to extract it, but at length informed his companion that he had forgotten that part of the trick!

A rather green village editor up country was desirous of gaining the good graces of the new minister; and describing his first entrance into the church wrote thus: "He is a most venerable sample of antiquity." But to his astonishment and the amazement of the inhabitants, it came out the next morning in type, "He is a most venerable sample of iniquity."

An editor took a policeman to task for want of vigilance. "The ungrateful hound!" exclaimed the policeman; "if I had been vigilant, he would have been in gaol for drunkenness, instead of being allowed to write his complaint against me at home."

Many a husband practises a great deal of stern denial towards self—but only his other self.

Advice for New Years Day—never forget the present.

The Great Original Painting OF THE BATTLE OF THE BOYNE!

By BEN. WEST, Pres. Royal Academy.

SPARKES BOURNE & Co., would respectfully announce that they have now ready for delivery a splendidly got up COLORED LITHOGRAPH of this magnificent HISTORICAL PAINTING, representing the Battle at the moment of the death of the gallant DUKE SCHOMBERG; and which is published on the finest paper—size 22 x 28 inches.

This Picture—a faithful copy of the great Original—will be found incomparably superior to anything ever offered to the public either in this country or Great Britain. It has been executed by the first Artists of the day, and no trouble or expense has been spared to make it worthy of the justly celebrated Painter, and the GREAT HISTORICAL FACT which it represents, and which ought never to be forgotten by those who now enjoy the CIVIL AND RELIGIOUS LIBERTY which this event, more than any other in our history, was the means of establishing and perpetuating.

In times like these, when the principles of our Forefathers are being assailed on every hand, it is especially needful for us to bear in mind from whence sprung our Constitutional form of Government; and nothing contributes more to aid us in keeping in remembrance those momentous passages in our history than faithful representations by great Masters. And certainly no Historical Subject has been more ably treated than the above event by this celebrated Painter

In presenting this Picture to the Protestant Community, and especially to those who are more feelingly alive to the vast benefits conferred on us by the ever memorable events of 1690, the Publishers feel every confidence that their efforts will be fully appreciated, and that this Picture will find an honored place in every Protestant home in the British Provinces.

Price of the Picture, $1.

Button-hole, Cording, Braiding and Embroidering

SEWING MACHINE!

COMPANY,

627 Broadway, New-York.

THE BUTTON HOLE S made by this entirely simple and novel machine, are not only equal to the best hand-made in the pearl or right side, but greatly surpassing them in beauty on the wrong side, which is formed by a beautiful braid stitch, made by an extra stitch, which no hand made button-hole possesses; thereby imparting to the same a much greater strength, which renders cording or barring altogether unnecessary.

One Needle and Two Threads are only Used.

Unlike other Sewing Machines it manufactures its own Braid and Cord.

The best Merchant Tailors freely admit that its beauty, finish and strength cannot be attained by the most skilful hand.

Simplicity is one of its great merits, therefore not liable to get out of order, and it can be worked with ease by any young lady, who will, after a few days' experience, make from 1,000 to 1,200 perfect button-holes in one day.

This is the only machine produced that will throw a stitch over the edge, so as to bind and cover it in a manner indispensible for Button-holes, Cording and Braiding, each of which can be done with colored, shaded or chine silks, and produces a fabrique of varied colors unexcelled for beauty and taste

To Ladies at home, Dress, Mantilla and Cloak makers, Shoemakers, Tailors, Hatters, Bookbinders, Saddlers, &c., &c., it is indispensable: it is also admitted to be of great value, to other branches as it Braids, Embroiders, and Cords plain and fancy on all kinds of Cloths, Cassimers, Linen, Velvet Leather, &c., &c.

Instructions and Needles accompany each Machine.

Every Machine is Warranted for Twelve Months.

Machines can be seen in full operation at our spacious Store, 627 Broadway, near Bleaker, where instruction Rooms are reserved for Ladies.

P. S.—A novel patented BUTTON HOLE Cutter for sale which shall in all cases accompany a Button Hole Machine.

See what the most popular and widely circulated periodicals say of our Establishment:

From the "Dispatch" of February 25, 1865.

We take pleasure in calling the attention of our readers to the announcement of Messrs Devaugh & Co's Great Sale of Jewelry, Silver Ware, and Fancy Goods, in our advertising columns. We are personally acquainted with the members of this firm and know them to be gentlemen of sterling worth and integrity. Their stock of goods, for variety and extent, we have scarcely seen paralleled.

From the "Mirror of Fashion," March 1, 1865.

Messrs. Devaugh & Co's Great Sale of Jewelry, etc, opened on the 15th ult., and we venture to say that no finer display of goods was ever exhibited by any establishment in this city. The ladies thronged their bazaar almost to suffocation, although the streets were rendered nearly impassable by the melted snow and slush We predict for them a wonderful success.

From the "Ledger," February 28, 1865.

Our lady friends should visit the extensive establishment of Messrs. Devaugh & Co., No. 15 Maiden Lane, if they wish to indulge themselves with a sight which they will long remember. Such a profusion of elegant Watches Chains, Rings, Earrings, and, in short, of Jewelry of every name, kind and description, we never before witnessed. Their silver and plated ware is superb and almost casts into the shade the other splendid establishments which have long been the boast of our city. It is estimated that their stock is worth not less than one million of dollars.

PIANO-FORTES

DRIGGS' NEW PATENT.

ARE THE ONLY INSTRUMENTS constructed on a truly scientific principle. That have greater strength, and will remain longer in tune than any other Piano. The construction is simple and natural, all the extraneous lumber in the body of the instrument is dispensed with; the sound boards are merely two arched planks of thin wood, like the front and back of a violin; the strings are attached to a strong iron frame, which is separate and entirely independent of the case, thereby dispensing with the old barbarism of stringing by substituting straight bridges, preserving at the same time The Over String Bass, of which Mr Driggs is the inventor. By these improvements we gain much more vibratory power, at the same time preserving all its purity and richness of tone.

They have received the highest testimonials from the Press, and all the principal artists in the country, among which are:

Harry Sanderson,	L. M. Gottschalk,
Max Maretzek,	S. Thalberg,
Theodore Eisfeld,	Wm. Mason,
Herman Wollenhaupt,	A. Barili.
Francis H. Brown,	M. Strackosch,
Wm. Henry Fry	Charles Fradel

Mr. EGESMUND THALBERG, the great pianist, says:—I have examined your new Piano-fortes and I cordially approve of its system of construction. Its principle, by which great increase of vibratory power is obtained, being very simple and perfectly philosophical. The tone is grand and noble; it has great capacity for sustaining the sound or singing, and its volume of tone or power I have never heard excelled in depth, purity and sympathetic sweetness.

Wm HENRY FRY, late musical critic of the N. Y. Tribune says:—I have examined your newly invented Piano-Fortes. They merit all the praise given to them by Messrs. Thalberg, Gottschalk, Strackosch, Mason and others. As regards the structure, they are original and philosophical: in purity, volume, and continuity of tone; in vocal versimilitude, that crowning excelence which enables the pianists to "sing" on the instrument. Your Pianos deserve the highest rank. Your invention, in my opinion, is destined to work radical changes in the manufacture of Pianos throughout the world.

From the N. Y Herald, Sept. 5.—Upon a careful examination of Dennis Piano-Forte, we find the results obtained are a very fine singing tone, great purity and brilancy throughout the entire instrument, not often found in Pianos constructed upon the old plan.

The N. Y. Times, July 12, says:—We have now an instrument without an equal. It can sing with a smoothe delicacy, perfectly unattainable on any other instrument: an ordinary player obtains with no exertion, the following as a Grand Piano Forte and they must speedily supercede the old styles

Gentlemen:—Having thoroughly examined and tested the Piano-Fortes invented and patented by Mr S. B. Driggs, I am of the opinion that the tone resulting from his improvements, as exhibited in the instruments under examination in point of richness, depth and brilliancy, equals that of the best Grand Piano-Fortes, and excells them in pure, musical and refined tone, power thus approximating closer to what I consider perfection in the instrument than has yet been achieved by any other system of manufacture.

Yours respectfully,
L. M. GOTTSCHALK
